The next inward P. and O. Mail, with Hong Kong dates to December 1, may be expected on the 5th inst. Telegrams from Hong Kong, via Galle, to the 15th Dec. are now due.

The present mail should, under ordinary circumstances, have been delivered in London yesterday. The delay arose from the steamer having arrived at Marseilles on New Year's Day, which is kept as a close holiday by all public offices in France.

List of Passengers.

PASSENGERS INWARD.

Per French mail steamer Said, arrived at Marseilles, Jan. 1.—From Yokohama Messrs. Sumarest, Zeigler, Pim, Pumho, Vircetish, Regnotti, Rieu, Ortel. From Shanghai: Mr. Serie. From Hong Kong: Mr. J. Rubio y Romeo, Mr. and Mrs. J. Martinez, Messrs. Rodriguez Rubio, C. Volvino y Batino, Sanatuz Rodriguez, M. Cerrado y Martin, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Ludhorf, Mrs. F. Tribe, Mr. L. Rosenhaim, Mrs. U. Carrera, Messrs. R. Mathew and J. Rodriguez. From Batavia: Messrs. Lihenthal, Chanseur, Madame Hermann, From Singapore: Messrs. Thelot, Lehman, De Rodas, Pascal.

PASSENGERS OUTWARD.

Per P. and O. steamer Syria, from Southampton, Jan. 4.—To Yokohama: Mr. Vernedi. To Shanghai: Mr. F. Schjoth, Mr. F. C. Adams, Mr. Rasch. To Hong Kong: Assistant Surgeon Power, Mr. G. N. Chisholm, Mr. R. Bearne. To Singapore: Mr James Miller, Rev. G. F. and Mrs. Hose. To Ceylon: Captain and Mrs. Smith, Miss Robinson, Ensign Macnash, Ensign Drought.

From Marseilles, Jan. 12.—To Shanghai: Mr. Ellis Elias, Mr. F. Cox, Mr. Gore Booth. To Singapore: Mrs. F. Brenkmann.

Per P. and O. steamer Ceylon, from Southampton, Jan. 20.—To Yokohama: Mr. O. Driscoll, Mr. Hall. To Shanghai: Mr. Hillier, Mr Andrews, Mr. Carles. To Singapore: Mr. D'Arcy. To Ceylon: Mr. Harding Cameron, Mr. J. G. Morley.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

YOKOHAMA.

The dates brought by the French mail from Yokohama are to 15th. There is no news of importance. The steamer Osaka arrived on the 11th November, her passage, including all stoppages, being 108 days.

The Japan Herald has lately been enabled, through the courtesy of Capt. Bullock, R.N., to publish the result of the surveying expedition of H.M.S. Serpent to the East and West coast of Japan. We are glad to see active steps being taken for the surveys of the Japanese waters, as there are few coasts more dangerous and less known to mariners than these. Commander Stevens, of H.M.S. Perseus, gives an interesting report on the rock which proved fatal to the P. and O. steamer Singapore:—

It is six or seven feet below the water at low water spring tides.

Its dimensions are comprised in an area of nine to twelve feet, with soundings around it of from thirteen to twenty-one fathoms, within a circuit of half a cable on all bearings, excepting that of Low Island, from the centre of which it is one mile and a quarter distant on a bearing north 20 deg. east.

It is situated near the extreme of a sunken ledge or bank of an unlevel nature, which has soundings on it from Low Island (to the Rock) varying from six to seventeen fathoms.

The Rock is distinctly visible through the transparent water by which it is covered, and no remnant of the P. and O. steamer Singapore was to be seen. It is entirely surrounded to a considerable extent by the most conspicuous of "overfalls" and "ripples," which exist in this vicinity, the whole of which I submit mariners should be advised to carefully avoid.

In chart No. 2,441 a passage between Low Island and Toviowisatki is marked as possessing soundings 3, 7, and 3 fathoms respectively. This is entirely an error, as the passage is barely safe for a boat to make use of, and it should on no account be adopted for anything larger.

CHINA.

PEKING.

A correspondent of the China Mail writes from this port as follows, under date 10th November:—

"If I tell you that their Excellencies Messieurs les Grands Seigneurs talk less about the revision of treaties in this metropolis than do the 'masses' in any other place of China, I think I do but assert what is actually a fact. What they do, however, is quite another matter, and is altogether behind the scenes, which vulgar eyes cannot penetrate. The United States Minister is to leave on the 18th instant, with his family, upon a visit of inspection to all the open ports. The Admiral has placed at H.E.'s orders the despatch U. S. vessel Ashuelot, now lying at Shanghai. The Minister will be absent the whole winter, and his absence will be regretted by all his confreres in Peking, whose respect and sympathy he appears to have gained in the highest degree. It is to be hoped that the Hon. Anson Burlinghame may remain long in this country, for his influence is powerful to do great and good things. He possesses the faculty (not a common one by any means) of smoothing over many a rugged road, and the esteem and the confidence which he has won for himself from the representatives of all European nations in the Peking official world, are the result of a long and brilliant and, above all, a useful diplomatic career.

"It is said that General Vlangali, the Russian Minister, will shortly retire from his post. The weather is becoming cold, and very wise Celestials predict that the winter is going to be severe. The thermometer stands to-day at 26 deg. It is with deep regret that I have to mention the long protracted illness of Dr. Dudgeon, the Medical Physician of the London Mission Hospital established at Peking. The poor will miss him, for it is said that Dr. D. must proceed to a warmer climate.

"It is an on dit that the new college, known as the 'Tung-nen-kwan,' is to be opened at the commencement of the Chinese New Year. The Baron von Gumpach and Professors Billequin, Lepissier, and O'Brien, are eager for the coming day. You will have heard, no doubt, before this can reach you, of the sudden death of Dr. Poles, the medical officer of H.B.M.'s Legation. This sad news only reached us this morning from Tientsin, whither he had been ordered to proceed to attend the community after the death of Dr. Amitie. He is to be buried in the Tientsin Cemetery, beside his wife, who died at the same place some four weeks ago. Dr. and Mrs. Poles arrived in China in April of this year."

TIENTSIN.

A letter from this port, dated 14th November, says:—"The trade of the port has increased immensely, but barely is there one bale of goods that ever finds its way into the godowns of the foreign merchants. One must, however, except the Russian agents, who are employed in forwarding Hankow brick teas to the Siberian markets. This particular branch of trade has doubled itself within the past three years. The last steamer up at Tsz-chut-lin (the foreign concession) for this season arrived this morning. It is the Hy-ar-ma-ra (better known as the old confederate cruiser Talahasset). All the sailing crafts cleared away yesterday, so there will be none frozen in, as was the case with some five or six last year.

"Fears were entertained some time ago that Messrs. Trautmann and Co.'s two steamers the Yuen-tsz-fee and Nanzing, were to be withdrawn from their old line. It has now been ascertained that such is not the intention of their proprietors, and they will continue to run as heretofore between Shanghai, Chefoo, and Tientsin. The public at large congratulates itself that such is to be the case, for not only are the steamers themselves admirably adapted to their special line, but their commanders (Captains Tullock and Dreye) have become exceedingly popular. The same remark may hold good in writing of the S. S. N. Co.'s steamer Szechuen, commanded by Captain Bisbie. The dexterity of this latter is something which excites admiration. To give an example, which will be fully appreciated by all those who have been stuck for hours, and sometimes whole days, in the bends of the river 'Peiho,' I may mention as a proof of his skill in handling his ship that, in the middle of one night of the 26-27 of last month, there being no moonlight, but only cloudy darkness, Captain Bisbie took up his large steamer the entire distance from Taku to Tientsin without once having occasion to send a line ashore at any of the bends, and this he did within six hours. This is, so far as I know, perfection as concerns the steam navigation of this river, for never can it be surpassed. Smaller steamers may do as much, but never more. The Szechuen is, however, a boat of about 900 tons carrying capacity."

CHEFOO.

From a Chefoo letter of the 18th November we extract the following items:—

This little port still flourishes, and its residents remain on the qui vive with regard to the reply which H.B.M. Minister at Peking may (some day, perhaps) deign to give to the "ever-emboldened-duo of firms" who favoured his Excellency in May last with that for ever memorable and witty document commonly called the "Chefoo Memorial."

The direct trade with England and England's colonies is a fact accomplished and cannot be disputed. The third of a cargo of coals has been landed ex Finzel, from Liverpool, and two other cargoes have been received direct from Sydney, N.S.W. The first lot was consigned to Messrs. F. and Co., and the second to Messrs. W. C. and Co.; it becomes therefore apparent to the outside world, and it will be a matter of congratulation to the Exeter Hall-ites that the poor of the province of Shangtung (about 5,000,000 of souls in all) will not be so short of fuel during the coming winter months as they were in the winter of 1866-67.

The railway to Tsi-nan-foo is not yet completed; it must be that the first sod of the line was turned up at that extremity, for, not even from the highest peaks surrounding Cheefoo can any signs of the works or workmen be distinguished. The trade in pease, bean-cakes, etc., is not brisk just now, but that is easy of comprehension when it is considered that merchants are unwilling to purchase, owing to the belief which prevails in the minds of men that the sunrise which is expected to take place on the 1st January next will throw its beaming rays on the "Free Port of Yentai."

The Friend of China says, "the rebels are again in this province. By the latest reports they were marching towards Chu-nam-foo. One party is coming from the east, another from the west. We also learn that they have had an engagement, the Imperial troops suffering a loss of some thousands. The Chinese report the trail of the killed and wounded as over 60 li long. The natives have no fear about the rebels coming here."

NEWCHWANG.

From Newchwang, under date Nov. 18, we have the following: "The winter is so far setting in with a mild face. No ice has, as yet, been seen. Five vessels were loading, and the S.S. Island Queen has just arrived. The S.S. Manchuh is still expected from Shanghai via Tientsin. She will no doubt be the last vessel this year. The Light-ship is ordered to winter at Chefoo. The rough summary of imports and exports for the past season is as follows:—

"IMPORTS.—Opium, 2,446 chests; Grey Shirtings, 38,190 pieces; Camlets, 3,128 pieces; Lastings, 5,140 pieces; T-Cloths, 6,549 pieces; Lustres, 13,670 pieces; Drills, 32,921 pieces; White Shirtings, 3,851 pieces; Iron, 28,822 piculs; Sugar, 89,748 piculs; Glass, 400 boxes.

"EXPORTS.—Bean Cakes, 2,343,792 pieces; Peas, 1,086,977 piculs; Oil, 20,304 piculs.

"One hundred and sixty-seven vessels have been laden with bean cakes alone during the season, and upwards of three hundred and twenty vessels arrived in all, and cleared with outward cargo for native ports. I have heard that the newly-imported bean cake manufactory machinery, belonging to one of the oldest and largest firms of China, is likely to be very successful. It has been inspected by an official, who has made out a most favourable report of it. He considers that it must be a most profitable experiment, if managed with ability. H.B.M. Consul, T. T. Meadows, Esquire, is still absent hunting tigers in Manchuria. The European community is in the enjoyment of excellent health."

The Rev. W. C. Burns, one of the oldest and most highly-respected missionaries in China, has recently removed from Peking to this place, and an interesting letter from him is published in the Missionary Recorder for November. He says: "The foreign community permanently resident here is not very small, when we include pilots and all the Custom House officers; and, during the season when the river is open (it is closed from three to four months by ice), the number of foreign vessels is on an average, I understand, somewhere about 250 each year. I have begun a Sabbath service in English at the British Consulate. The meetings have been pretty well attended, and, by the Divine blessing, we hope that a few at least may be disposed regularly to assemble in our Lord's name. * * I hope that in a year or two, if not sooner, this place and the country beyond will not only be occupied by additional missionaries, but that those in the south who need a change may brace their systems by a summer visit, or by spending a winter here. In summer this place is considerably cooler than Peking, and in winter it is sufficiently cold, I suppose, to satisfy the desires of a Canadian. The Mandarin language is spoken in great purity, not only throughout Manchuria, but also in the provinces of Kirin and the Amour under the rule of the Chinese Empire; and in all this vast region there is not, if I except myself, a single representative of the Protestant churches. As in other countries, the priests of Rome are found established here and there, and will, in fact, pre-occupy the field unless evangelical Christians bestir themselves and enter on the work with a new measure of single-eyed consecration."

SHANGHAI.

From this port we have advices to the 21st of November. The English mail of September 26 arrived out on the 13th of November. The latest telegrams from London were, via Kiachta, October 7; via San Francisco, per Costa Rica, October 13; and via Galla, October 22

There is very little news from this port; the most important item appears to be the settlement of the Church question; which is thus described by the Friend of China:—"We hear that at the Church building meeting a resolution was passed to perfect with Mr. Iveson the scheme known as the 'Rowley Millerian'; that is to say, the line of the compound along Honan-road will be let on lease to him; he will be at liberty to pull down the present chapel, and with the materials build China houses over the site; and for this he will pay twelve hundred taels a year. But it is Shanghai dufferism all over to let him have such terms, and just as we anticipated would be the result of the trustees' efforts in behalf of the public at large. We want the bishop up here for a short time, evidently, to give that tone to church affairs which they do not now enjoy."

The Chinese Government had purchased Messrs. E. D. Sassoon and Co.'s steamer Waratah for 5,000 taels, and are refitting her at the new arsenal. Three or four years ago this vessel was sold for 28,000 taels, or nearly six times more than she has now gone into Chinese hands for.

The Shanghai papers record the death, by a melancholy accident, of Mr. James P. Watkins, the "Commodore" of the Pacific Mail service. He was proceeding to Shanghai, on board the steamer Costa Rica, on the business of the company, when he accidentally fell down an open hatchway, and sustained injuries of so severe a nature as to cause death within two hours. Captain Watkins was formerly in the United States navy, and was 59 years of age.

The following is from a French correspondent at Shanghai:—"It is necessary to exercise a strict watch over the vessels conveying coolies embarked in Portuguese waters at Macao, not only as regards the salubrity of the vessels and the immigrants, but also to prevent any abuses in the nature of the engagements made with the men. The kidnapping of children by Chinese pirates has recently greatly increased, not only in the villages along the Canton river, but also on the coast of Tonkin and Cochin China. The missionaries declare that, in spite of all their efforts, not less than 10,000 persons have within a short period been sold in Tonkin, of which number 2,000 came from the Annamite frontier. The ships employed in this nefarious traffic display the flags of different nations, and generally proceed to Lima or Havannah. The Legations at Peking are making most praiseworthy efforts with the Chinese Government to put an end to this state of things, but there is reason to desire that the Western Powers should exercise a pressure on the Court of Peking to induce it to punish its guilty subjects most severely."

HONG KONG.

The dates by this opportunity are down to the 26th Nov. The outward mail of 10th Oct. arrived on the 23rd Nov. The P. and O. steamer Delhi which conveyed it fell in with a gale in the China Seas. The following is her report:—

November 12th, left Singapore at noon. Clear of the Straits found a strong N.E. monsoon blowing; proceeded towards the Palawan passage. Passed into favourable winds with thick rainy weather. At midnight of the 16th thick squally weather, eased dead slow at entrance of Palawan Channel till daylight, 35 miles south of Royal Captain Shoal. On the morning of the 16th sighted and passed Royal Captain and Bombay Shoals, weather characterised by a murky impervious haze, particularly to E. and N.E., and barometer tending downwards from 30.10 to 29·90. A strong wind drawing to N.W. made a press of sail, double-reefed topsails and reefed courses to clear the Palawan Channel. At 8 P.M. fresh gale with squalls and heavy head sea. Furled all square sails and jibs, and set reefed trysails. At 10.30 P.M. clear of the Palawan passage, a strong gale at W.N.W.; eased engines to steerage way; a high head sea from north and thick rain. At 4 A.M. barometer 29.74; all hands preparing ship for bad weather, secured boats, and battened and lashed down At 8 A.M on 17th, barometer tending still downwards, strong gale with gusts, wore ship with head to southward. At noon, the gale at West, barometer rising 29.86 wore ship with head to northward; an increasing very heavy sea with a high cross sea running through it. Wind decreasing and constant rain, continued the engines at slow. Sunset, barometer 29.80, gale moderate at S.S.W., with heavy cross sea, frequent heavy rain, and murky impervious cloud. Midnight, moderate breeze and cloudy, less sea, wind at S.S.W., proceeded full speed steering North. Noon on the 18th, fresh gale at S.E., with hard squalls and high cross sea, barometer 30 09, steering N.N.E. At 11 P.M., barometer falling again, with increasing sea and rain, eased engines and steered North. At 3.30 P.M. increasing bad weather symptoms, eased engines to steerage way, and steered to N.E., wind E by N., barometer falling from 29.93 to 29.87 and rising again to 29.90. At daylight set close-reefed square sails, and steered direct course. All day the focus of the bad weather could be distinctly marked to the S.W. in a bank of dark cloud. At noon on the 19th a second gale (a straight gale at N.E., perhaps as hard as has ever blown in the China sea, rising in force to the strength of a first-class hurricane) set in, and blew for thirty hours; the sea ran proportionately high; but in this second bad weather the sea ran true. In the intervening moderate weather the boats and deck battening and lashings had been resecured. The barometer throughout this second gale ranged from 29.90 to 29.72, with constant heavy rain. After ten hours the jolly boat was washed away, and after 15 hours the port lifeboat was washed adrift and the starboard lifeboat and cutter, badly stove, had to be cut away. 1 A.M., Nov. 21st, weather moderating, barometer rising to 30, the slide valve gear of foremost engine broke down, stopping the engines; hove ship to under storm main-trysail, and close-reefed main-topsail, and engineers set to work to repair the injury. At 2.30 A.M., 22nd, repairs of engines completed, turned a-head Daylight, 23rd, made the land, stopped engines an hour to repair slight defects in foremost engine. Made square sail, and close with the land. At 8.20 A.M. turned ahead with engines and furled sails. Barometer, 30.40. At noon anchored in Hong Kong Harbour. At 4 A.M., 17th, the Delhi was in a position N.E. of the Palawan channel, to be in Hong Kong in 7½ days from Singapore, with the weather usual to the season.

On the 1st of November H.M. gun-boats Algerine, Bouncer, and Janus left this port and proceeded to Cupchi Point, for the purpose of demanding restitution from some villages in the neighbourhood, for a registered Hong Kong junk, which had been stranded there in consequence of her cables being cut by the villagers, and the cargo afterwards plundered. The junk had a valuable cargo and a great number of passengers, who had a considerable amount of treasure with them, and the whole junk and cargo were valued at $30,000.

The gunboats found on arrival that the junk had been completely destroyed by the inhabitants of the villages, which were pointed out, and found to be both large and populous; application was made in the first place to the mandarin of the district, who, however, said he was utterly powerless to protect British property, or in fact do anything with these piratical villages. These places were next visited and an attempt was made to open negotiations with the inhabitants, but without success. It was proved that these were undoubtedly the guilty parties by portions of the junk and property being found in various houses, and as the people seemed determined to refuse all settlement of the claims against them, parties were landed for the purpose of securing the principal men of each village. This was effectually done in seven instances, but in two places the villagers opened fire on the landing party with gingalls and spears, without, however, doing any injury, and they were quickly driven back, and their haunts levelled with the ground, as was also done in another instance, where the head men had effected their escape. The others then seemed willing to come to terms, and agreed to make up among themselves the required sum. The Algerine returned on the 17th Nov. with a portion of this, while the Bouncer and Janus remain to collect the remainder, keeping the head men prisoners until it is paid.

The two notorious pirates known as Tah-poh-chi and Sing-woh, who have been detained for the past two months in order that the necessary witnesses against them might be procured, were brought up on remand on the 22nd Nov. before Mr. Goodlake. Inspector Daly stated that, although he had made every effort, and had gone to several places to procure the witnesses, he had not as yet been able to collect them—they refused, in fact, to come forward. However, Mr. Deane had now a gunboat placed at his service for this especial purpose, and if ever there was to be a case against the prisoners it would be ready on the Monday following. Under these circumstances, and as the prisoners were such well-known characters (there being somewhere about six cases of piracy and murder against one of them), his Worship granted the further remand, and H.M.'s gunboat Drake left the harbour on this errand.

About seven o'clock on the 24th Nov. (Sunday) a fire broke out in some bamboo scaffolding covered with mats, surrounding the Royal Artillery barracks, but was quickly extinguished by the assistance of three fire-engines, which were all on the spot in less than five minutes, and the damage was confined to the destruction of a few bamboo poles and mats.

It is an odd coincidence that the fire by which so large a quantity of cotton was destroyed should have occurred simultaneously with the combination among the Chinese to refrain from purchases of that article. Messrs. Oliphant and Co.'s Circular has the following on this subject:—"Business of all kinds has been very dull throughout the fortnight, the uncertainty as to the action of the Cotton Guild, and as to the effect of that action upon other branches of trade, tending to make native merchants still less inclined to enter into operations of any magnitude, and adding to the depression already existing. It is now asserted that, within the past few days, those merchants who at first were reluctant to enter into the combination have given in their adherence, and that after the 1st proximo no purchases of cotton for the Canton market will be made at this port. The Mandarins at Canton are said to have brought a deal of pressure to bear on the subject, and the reduction in 'squeezes' promised by them to be made, in the event of this movement being successful, has aided materially in bringing about the desired result, while the dislike to the Stamp Act has also had its effect. Other branches of trade are expected by the natives to follow that in cotton, and eventually lead to a large increase in the trade of Canton.

Foreigners generally are not disposed to take the same view of the matter, though some of the Parsee and Armenian houses are making arrangements for opening branch establishments at Canton." Some further particulars will be found in our Commercial Report.

No. 10 of Notes and Queries on China and Japan, is remarkable for "a short vocabulary of the Mongolian language in the dialect chiefly used on the northern borders of China,"—by the Editor. This number also contains interesting notes and queries on the Habka Chinese; Chinese works of fiction; Chinese dentistry; puppet-shows; tobacco; female dress, &c.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson, having resigned his appointment as Colonial Chaplain, returned to England by last mail. His successor pro tem. is the Rev. John Kingston, late of the Pearl, who has recently been appointed Chaplain of H.M.S. Melville. Mr. Kingston was, we believe, formerly Rector of Cattistock, in Dorsetshire, and for some time Domestic Chaplain to H.M. the late King of Hanover. With our present energetic Bishop his duties are likely to be light.

The steamer Far East arrived on the 23rd Nov., having left Singapore on the 9th and Labuan on the 15th.

The ocean race for the Douglas Cup resulted in the Mayflower being again the winner. She had a very close run with the Heather Belle, and only beat the latter by one minute of time. The winning yachts got in about six in the morning, having had light weather throughout the entire race, and during a good portion of the afternoon were lying becalmed in the vicinity of Lin-tin island. The Zephyr returned, having abandoned the race at nightfall.

Two shipping cases of an interesting nature are reported:—

On the 25th November Captain Gronnebeck, of the Prussian barque Otto, was summoned by Mr. Daly, Inspector of Water Police, for a breach of the Chinese Passenger Act of 1855, in clearing for a voyage of more than seven days' duration with more than twenty passengers on board, having received no certificate from the Emigration officer. Inspector Daly stated that he went in company with a boarding officer attached to the harbourmaster's department, on board the Otto, then getting under weigh. The boarding officer asked the captain how many passengers he had on board, and he replied eighteen, and that they were now all on board. Witness left the boarding officer on the Otto, and went towards Green Island, where he fell in with a large Hakkow-boat containing forty-three Chinese, male and female, who, on being questioned, said they were passengers for the Otto, and handed a paper (produced) which proved to be a passage ticket for twenty-four Chinese to Singapore signed by Messrs. Wm. Pustau and Co., agents for the Otto, and dated November 12th. Witness then returned on board the Otto, which vessel was by this time near Green Island, and the passengers then on board were mustered, and there were found to be twenty adults and five children. The boarding officer then ordered the anchor to be let go, and witness took charge of the vessel. Mr. Caldwell argued that the Otto had not actually cleared and proceeded on her voyage; that more than the authorised 20 men were not actually on board when she was proceeding to sea, and the offence was not completed. The captain, for instance, might not have taken these men on board from the Hakkow boat; and, further, it was not before his Worship that the defendant had any guilty knowledge of the affair, and that in this instance the captain was not bound by the acts of his agents. The Magistrate considered that the whole case indicated a knowledge by the captain of the transaction. Besides, the captain was bound by the acts of his agents, whom he authorised to act for him, and it was absurd to suppose that Messrs. Pustau and Co. did not understand the regulations with reference to emigration. Defendant and his agents appeared to have been working in direct defiance of the law, and he could do nothing else than inflict the full penalty of £100.

In the Supreme Court in Admiralty, the case of the ship Isca, long lain dormant, was heard on the 23rd of November. It may be remembered that this vessel, while on a voyage from Rangoon to Hong Kong, put into Singapore for repairs, the cost of which summed up to about $7,000. To meet this outlay the Captain gave a bottomry bond on the vessel, freight, and cargo (which latter belonged to Messrs. Camajee and Co.), without previously communicating with his agents as to the advisability of such a step. When the vessel arrived in Hong Kong, she was sold for $3,000 or $4,000; and a suit was commenced by Messrs. Camajee and Co. on the one hand, and the bondholders' agent on the other. At the former stage of the hearing Mr. Pollard, Q.C., obtained leave to send a commission to Singapore to report upon the repairs effected upon the ship; and as the result of this commission has been arrived at, the case came again before the Court. Mr. Whyte, instructed by Mr. Gaskell, appeared for the promovents; and the Attorney-General, instructed by Mr. H. Caldwell, was for the impugnants. The case was one in which the general public would not feel great interest; but mercantile and commercial men will be interested in the question at issue, viz., the discretionary power vested in a shipmaster to give bottomry bonds on his owners property, or on that of charterers, when lying in a port where communication with those interested might secure advice and instructions from those more immediately concerned. The decision of the Chief Justice in this case has been postponed.

The China Mail has the following items relating to the Union Dock Company:—

A number of the shareholders of the Union Dock Company went over in the Little Orphan, on the 16th November, at the invitation of the company to inspect the new works at Kowloon. The granite flooring is laid over two-thirds and at least one-half the dock, two courses of the granite sides have been laid, and in places a few stones of the third course have been placed. The pier-heads have been commenced on both sides, and appear to be in a forward condition. A greater portion of the inner coffer dam has been removed, and at this stage there is a dead halt. We understan the caisson is completed, and only waits for its resting place in the pier heads to be made ready. One of the blocks of the granite flooring has been removed for the purpose of seeing the condition of the concrete under it. This stone was so firmly imbedded that it had to be broken in five pieces before it could be got out and the concrete under it now appears to be quite as hard as the stone that was resting upon it.

On the 18th a meeting of the shareholders was held, when a long discussion ensued with regard to the disputes among the shareholders upon the system which has been followed in the construction of the dock. The following resolution was moved by Mr. Sage:—"Resolved that the directors be authorised to have the contract for the construction of the Kowloon dock carried out as commenced, with the same materials, and under the superintendence of the same engineers; and that they oblige the contractor to employ as many men in the prosecution of the work as can be advantageously employed." This resolution having been seconded and carried by a large majority, the meeting was dissolved.

The China Mail has the following mysterious paragraph:—

We learn that the family of the late Colonel Klezkowski, of Amoy, who have been waiting since August for a moral compensation on behalf of the deceased, have obtained their desire to the fullest extent. The family, we are informed, never sought or asked for pecuniary compensation, as it was publicly asserted they had done. The affair caused some excitement at Peking. We shall probably be able to furnish more particulars shortly.

The Pacific Mail Company's steamer China was announced to leave on the 26th Nov. Her arrival from San Francisco on the 14th was announced in our last. The following notice has been issued by the Postmaster:—

Intimation having been received that a Postal Convention, entered into by the Colonial Government and the Postmaster-General of the United States of America, regulating the conveyance of Mails by the Packets of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company between Hong Kong and Yokohama and San Francisco, although not formally ratified in the United States for want of time, will be acted upon in the United States of America on the receipt of the Mails to be despatched from Hong Kong by the Company's steamer China, on the 26th Nov., it is hereby notified for general information that correspondence, the postage on which has been prepaid at this office by means of the postage stamps of this colony, will be delivered free of charge in the United States henceforward.—F. W. MITCHELL.

The following is the reply of the Governor to the remonstrances on the Praya question:—

HONG KONG, Nov. 19, 1867.

GENTLEMEN,—1. I am directed to inform you that his Excellency Sir Richard Graves MacDonnell duly received from me the letter addressed to him on behalf of yourselves and others, dated the 29th ultimo, and handed to me on the 2nd inst.

2. The Governor had hoped you could have strengthened his hands and assisted him to relieve you as much as possible of your obligation to repair the damage done to so important a work as the sea-wall opposite your lots. His Excellency, therefore, learned with much disappointment that, so far from complying with the invitation contained in my circular letter of the 26th to confer with myself and the Surveyor-General on the 2nd inst. "with a view to making suggestions" for some combined action on the part of the Government and the marine lotholders, you thought it right before meeting us to draw up a letter repudiating all intention to listen to any proposals of the Government for joining in the expense of the contemplated work. Such a procedure completely ignored the invitation of the Governor to confer with representatives of the Governor before adopting a decision.

3. Sufficient time has now elapsed to enable the marine lotholders to reconsider the position which they have taken up in a manner so needlessly abrupt, whatever may be the nature of their rights. As, however, no further communication has been received from you, his Excellency reluctantly concludes there is no chance of your assisting voluntarily. He has, therefore, instructed the Acting Attorney-General to institute proceedings in the least vexatious manner possible for the purpose of obtaining from the Supreme Court a decision as to the amount and nature of your liability in reference to repairs in question. Such knowledge is in any case essential to those who are only acting as agents for absent proprietors, and whose expenditure must be limited by their legal liabilities.

4. If those repairs are thrown entirely on the colony, his Excellency fears that the magnitude of the undertaking will render it impossible, without increased taxation, to meet the expenses, because the liabilities of the colony quite preclude his sanctioning any contract for a work sufficiently strong to resist the typhoons which annually recur, and obviously no other description of work should be undertaken.

5. On the other hand, if it be decided that the marine lotholders are liable for repairs, his Excellency will be compelled to enforce the obligation, though he would much have preferred assisting you to discharge it by such contribution from colonial funds as might have been sanctioned by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, if there had been any disposition to co-operate exhibited by the lot holders mainly interested.

6. Irrespective, however, of any decision of the Supreme Court as to your mere legal obligations, his Excellency sees nothing in your communication of the 29th ultimo, or in previous correspondence, to induce him to regard the marine lotholders as having yet fulfilled the original obligation, in consideration of which they received an equivalent either in remission of premiums or reduction of old rates. The construction of an insufficient wall has not morally cleared that obligation, nor would the mere fact of an inadequate wall having been constructed at a cheap rate without protest by the Surveyor-General terminate it. The actual test of experience could alone determine the sufficiency of such a work, though the tacit acquiescence of the Government might furnish an equitable claim to the assistance recently offered by the governor from public funds towards the complete fulfilment of your original agreement.

7. His Excellency admits that equitable claim, and even goes further, for he does not hesitate to affirm that in any future undertaking on a sufficient scale—whether at the sole expense of the marine lotholders or at the joint expense of those parties and the Government—he considers it expedient for the purpose of preventing future disputes to throw on the local Governments the entire charge and cost of all subsequent repairs, though he considers that no such obligation has yet devolved on the Government, in consideration of the inadequate work on which the security of the Praya has hitherto been left to depend.

8. It may be true that some of the marine lotholders are only under similar obligation to that affecting the general body of lotholders, viz., to repair roads in the vicinity of their lots. The latter, however, have received no pecuniary consideration for doing so, as is the case with the marine lotholders. Secondly, repairs of other roads do not involve an expenditure of such magnitude as those of the sea-wall, which maintains the roadway of the Praya. Hence no occasion has hitherto arisen for enforcing similar obligations elsewhere, and for these reasons no parallel can be fairly instituted between the cases.

9. I am further instructed to add that, if the marine lotholders had by their co-operation assisted his Excellency in his effort to divert to so useful a work a portion of the funds which must now be almost immediately remitted to meet long standing liabilities of the colony, he would have gladly considered the expediency of granting to each lotholder the privilege of creating for his sole use and benefit a pier opposite to his lot.

10. Unfortunately, however, the action taken by the lotholders has quite precluded his Excellency from carrying out his object, which was simply to afford the marine lotholders every legitimate assistance, and to do so in any way not wholly inconsistent with the means of the colony and the instructions which he had received.—I have the honour to be, &c.,

(Signed) CECIL C. SMITH,
Acting Colonial Secretary.

To Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co. and Others.

COCHIN CHINA.

The promise on the part of our Government to appoint a Consul at Saigon is not before it is required. In addition to the large number of English vessels engaged in the traffic to China, &c., several have loaded direct for England and the Continent; the total quantity of rice now on the way from Saigon to Europe being nearly 11,000 tons.

SIAM.

The Siam Weekly Monitor says:—"The 63rd anniversary of the birth of his Majesty the King of Siam occurred on the 18th October, and was made a festival occasion in the royal palace for great numbers of his Majesty's princes, nobles, and lords, and about a dozen Europeans and Americans, whom the King was pleased to honour as being either directly or indirectly engaged in the royal service. This small select company of foreigners was a very remarkable departure from his Majesty's custom for his birthday parties on all previous occasions The custom has been to invite most of the missionaries, both Catholic and Protestant, together with all the official representatives of Western nations, and all foreigners holding office under the Siamese Government. The reason why this remarkable innovation was made this year, as stated by his Majesty on this occasion, was substantially that some of the Consuls had such a regard for their station and rank that they were not happy in being seated at the same table with missionaries and merchants, and that some of the merchants, on the other hand, being conscious of possessing as much real worth of character and personal importance as their fellow guests the Consuls, would not brook the idea of being seated at a table of a lower grade than they, and that in consequence of this state of feeling his Majesty, having by several years' experience found it beyond his power to please the majority of his foreign guests at his birthday dinner parties, determined to invite none this year but such as are in some sense his own employés."

Much interest, we learn, has been excited in Bangkok by proceedings arising out of a collision case. It appears that a lorcha belonging to Messrs. Markwald and Co., of Bangkok, was run down while at anchor by a native vessel, from whose owner, one Poh Yim, Messrs. Markwald and Co. claimed compensation. He, however, refused to entertain it, and even brought a counter claim against Messrs. Markwald. Subsequently, by mutual agreement, the case was referred to a court composed of the harbour-master, assisted by two shipmasters, one of the latter being selected by each party; both undertaking to abide by the decision thus obtained. Judgment was given clearly and decidedly in favour of Messrs. Markwald; whereupon, in defiance of his pledge to the contrary, Poh Yim appealed to the Siamese Government. The case was accordingly again tried in a native court, and (in the absence of Messrs. Markwald, who naturally refused to attend) the former decision reversed. The injustice of this proceeding is loudly complained of, and we understand the aid of the commander of the Prussian corvette Vineta will be invoked to procure redress. The Vineta is expected at Bangkok very shortly.

Monsieur de Bellecour has arrived at Bangkok to exchange ratifications of the Convention regarding the boundaries of Cambodia and Siam, concluded in Paris last July, by Phya Surawong, the Siamese special Envoy to the French Court; and also to endeavour to settle the long pending liquor question. The Governor of Macao is also here on a visit to the King of Siam.

Hitherto, vessels entering the Menam have been obliged to anchor at Paknam, at the mouth of the river, and there land all guns, ammunition, &c., they might have on board, in many cases a tedious and vexatious restriction. From the 1st of January, 1868, this regulation is rescinded, as far as guns are concerned, and ammunition alone has to be discharged, which is a decided improvement on the old system.

The Kestrel, Helena, Donner, and Theresa had sailed for Europe, and the following were under charter to load—Emmanuel, Lammermuir, Drache, Kirkland, Maori, and Racer.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

Dates from this port are to the 4th December. The outward mail of Oct. 26 was some days overdue.

The colonial steamer Pehio was under orders for Penang, for the purpose of bringing the Acting Chief Justice to Singapore, after which H.E. the Governor and suite will proceed in her to Penang, where he is expected to remain for some time.

H. M.'s surveying vessel Rifleman returned to this port on the 30th Nov. from Rhio Straits, Captain Reed and officers having completed the survey of that important thoroughfare for shipping. The Dutch Government have, with commendable liberality in the interests of navigation, gone to great expense in placing iron beacons and buoys on the most prominent dangers, the most important of which are, a screw pile beacon on the north end of the great Pan reef and an iron nun buoy on the south end; an iron nun buoy is also moored on the little Pan reef. The results of the Rifleman's survey, together with an account of the exact positions of the various beacons and buoys, will, we understand, be shortly published for the information of the public.

The opium and spirit farms have been purchased by the Kongsi which is represented by Cheang Hong Lim. The Singapore Daily Times says, "The Colonial Administration may be congratulated upon the result of the sale of the revenue farms on Saturday last, by which no less an increase than $6,650 per month, or $79,800 per annum has been obtained. There can be no question whatever but that the system of tender is infinitely more advantageous than that of open auction, and it may be doubted whether a result such as that now obtained could have been secured unless the new system had been adopted. The great increase is upon the two large farms of opium and spirits which have been held for the last four years at the rentals of $25,000 and $7,000 per month respectively, and which are now sold for the period of three years from the 1st proximo—at the rentals of $30,050 for the opium farm and $9,000 for the spirit farm. These two alone show a monthly increase of $7,050, but this is reduced to $6,650 from a slight falling off in the pawnbrokers and toddy and bhang farms."

With reference to the present system of Government, the Daily Times says:—"We think it is much to be regretted that the practice observed here while the Settlement was a dependency of India, of publishing all the drafts of proposed laws in the Official Gazette, should have been discontinued by the present Government. This previous publication takes place, not only in India, but in Hong Kong, Ceylon, and other colonies. The furnishing of drafts to the unofficial members and to the press does not obviate the injustice to the public, as their circulation is necessarily limited and made dependent on the caprice of a few individuals. We think, moreover, that an interval of at least one month should elapse, except in cases of great emergency, between the publication of drafts in the Official Gazette and their final discussion in Council."

The following notification has been published in a Government Gazette Extraordinary:—"The following orders of the Governor in Council were directed to be published in the Government Gazette:—Whereas by Section 48 of Act 26 of 1867, entitled, 'An Act to amend the Law relating to Stamp Duties,' it is provided that the Act shall come into operation on such day as shall be fixed by the Governor in Council, it is hereby ordered by the Governor in Council that the said Act 26 of 1867 do come into operation in all the settlements of the colony on the 1st day of January, 1868."

The Free Press announces the death of Mr. H. J. Leynard, of Malacca. The deceased was head clerk in the Land Office there, and committed suicide by drowning. He had been a long time in Government employ and was much respected. He had received, we are informed, if not a reprimand, at all events an intimation of the displeasure of the Lieutenant-Governor, and this preying on his mind led him to commit the rash act.

A very general grumbling is now current at the extravagance of the Government It appears that the steamer Peiho is to be retained for local purposes, as the Home Government has not sanctioned the building of another in England, and has, moreover, enjoined the Governor to use every economy. There is, therefore, no chance of the official salaries being increased.

The new Governor of Labuan, Pope Hennessy, was safely landed at that place, and H.M.S. Zebra returned with dates to 26th November. By next mail we may expect some account of the condition of the island, and its coal mines, from the new Governor's pen.

The following on the manner in which appointments have been conferred is from the Free Press :—

The report as to the appointment of Colonel Macpherson to the second clerkship's office in the Treasury appears to have been correct, and the Daily Times offers a weak apology for the gross breach of the rules of fair play the appointment of the Colonial Secretary's son to this office is. Because it is necessary to introduce fresh blood into the departments it is not necessary to do so in the way the Governor apparently is determined to adopt—that is to fill the first-class vacancies with his own relations and the second-class ones with the kith and kin of his subordinate heads of departments. If so we shall be able to show in the Straits an official family party that no other colony can.

The defence made by the Times is so evidently an unwilling one—made so palpably against the grain—that we wonder at its appearance in our neighbour's columns. The whole gist of the argument it propounds is, that the "state of the generality of the Government offices is not efficient," and that it is "scarcely desirable" a young European should enter the service upon the same "footing] as the country-born youth of the place." To cure this a system of nepotism is to be introduced of the most flagrant description. If the officials in Government employ cannot or will not do their work properly let the Governor follow the same plan a merchant in the Square would do with his clerks under similar circumstances—get rid of all those that are inefficient and appoint others in their room who are efficient; but to advance the alleged inefficiency in palliation of an appointment savouring of impropriety is absurd. The desirability of placing a "young European gentleman" on the same footing as that of a country-born may be unpleasant to those who would wish to make the colonial service a genteel pauperism; but those who would desire to have the service really effective will be indifferent as to whether the officers forming it are European or country-born. This question could only have entered the mind to propose of some one who has a European relation nearly out of his teens to provide for, and who hopes to do so by foisting him on the public in the way we have had an instance or two of lately, and which have caused such comment. That the appointment in question is open to objection the attempt made in the Times to defend it proves. It it was right there would have been no necessity for an explanation upon the point. It is a bad omen for the future that the defence put forth in this instance should so signally fail. It proves that the public instinct was right which at first formed the impression that the new Governor would not give satisfaction. As yet his Excellency has not done so, and he will never do so if he calls forth those prejudices of race which the defence in the Times of the appointment of the Colonial Secretary's son to the Treasury clerkship is likely to do; if the "blue blood" of the European is to be deemed the emblem of colonial aristocracy, and the passport to Colonial office ever the claims of those who, better bred by descent from fathers who entered the Royal and Company's services at a time when none but gentlemen could do so, are in every other way better fitted for office.

PENANG.

From this port we have advices, via Singapore, to the 27th November. There is no local news of importance, but the subject of Dutch encroachments in Sumatra has been revived, and is thus alluded to by the Penang Gazette :—

"That the Dutch have made and are making encroachments on the east coast contrary to treaty is easy to prove; that they are well aware of the great importance of the pepper trade from the ports on that coast is certain, and no one can blame them for endeavouring to get possession of them, and have them under their own rule, and the trade in their own hands. All that is very well for their interests, but the Straits have just as great a stake in this matter as the Dutch, and our Straits Government has a right to object to measures which will eventually entail a great loss to these settlements. We want to have a free and unrestricted trade with these ports as has been secured us by treaty, and we should indeed be sorry to see the Singapore and Penang merchants revert into a state of apathy in regard to their own interests, which we are sorry to say is too common here, and leave the Dutch to reap the benefits which will assuredly result if immediate and active means are not taken to prevail on our Government to interfere. The Singapore and Penang merchants, therefore, should turn their attention from ordinary local matters to this question, which is of such vital importance to our trade, and as speedily as possible furnish the Government with such facts as they know on the subject of the Dutch encroachments, so as to enable the Government to deal with it in a proper spirit. Lord Stanley is not the man to submit quietly to any infringement of our treaties, and his Excellency the Governor will, we have little doubt, do his utmost for the prosperity of the settlements under his directorship. In an early issue we purpose to lay before our readers as complete a review of the Dutch encroachments as lies in our power, and to consider the question de novo."

The settlement of the Siam and Tenasserim frontier has been completed. Lieutenant Bagge has been authorised to proceed to Bangkok to have it confirmed and ratified.

The King of Burmah has assented to the despatch of an exploring party to Western China, via Bharno, and has issued an edict to give it every assistance. Captain Sladen is appointed leader of the party.

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

SHANGHAI.—Cotton Goods: Business in these goods has been of a very retail character, demand being very limited; we quote Grey Shirtings, 6¼ catty, Eagle chop, tls. 2.6 to 2.6.2. White Shirtings, 56 reed tls 2.2 to 2.3; 60 reed, tls. 2.3.5 to 2.4. Woollens have been neglected; there has, however, been a slight inquiry for Camlets at reduced rates. We quote, Spanish Stripes, tls. 0.6.4 to 0.6.7. per yard; Long Ells, HH Scarlet, tls. 7 nominal; Camlets, SS. tls. 12 to 12.5 per piece.

HONG KONG.—We have to report an entire absence of activity in all branches of trade, owing in a great measure to the causes referred to in our last. The terms of the resolution of the Cotton Guild have become known, and are to the effect that any member making purchases of either Cotton or Yarn, shall be fined $10 per bale for the former, and $20 per bale for the latter. The local Government has been in communication with the Viceroy of Canton in relation to this matter, and it is reported that the latter has promised to issue an edict imposing severe penalties in the event of the Cotton Guild endeavouring to carry out its resolution. In the uncertainty which exists native merchants are averse to entering into new transactions of any magnitude, but should the combination be broken up we may look for more activity. Raw Cotton has been very sparingly dealt in, sales amounting to less than 2,000 bales, and prices have declined about $1 per picul. Cotton Yarn has been almost entirely neglected, and sales could only be made at a reduction from last quotations. Trifling transactions in Grey Shirtings, T-Cloths and English Drills are reported at unchanged prices, holders being firm in view of the small stocks, and advices of an advance in home markets. Woollens are very dull. Metals.—Iron, of all kinds, remains firm. Lead is quiet. Tin not inquired for, and a little easier. Quicksilver steady. Coal commands former prices.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—Settlements have amounted to about 6,000 piculs. Receipts have been unusually large, and stock amounts to 5,000 to 7,000 piculs, consisting mainly of grades below good medium. Fine grades have been in demand, and maintain their value, but medium and good medium kinds are $1 to $1.50 lower. The Swanley, for New York, was ready for sea, and the Anazi, Chrysolite, and Benefactor were loading for the same port. There was no vessel on the berth for London.

SHANGHAI.—Black Teas: Six chops of fair medium tea were settled by one buyer on the 9th Nov. at taels 18.5.0 to 20.5.0, but beyond this scarcely any business has been done. Settlements and reshipments since the 8th Nov., about 3,800 chests. Green Teas: A good business has been transacted at rates showing no material change from our last quotations. Settlements amount to 37,500 half-chests, and reshipments to 6,000 half-chests. The stock was estimated at about 40,000 half-chests. Country Teas, exclusive of a few parcels of Pingsuey and Shanghai-packed Tea, were being placed on offer at the date of the mail's departure.

FOOCHOW.—A moderate business has been done in Congous for Australia at about previous quotations, but there has been comparatively little demand for England, buyers generally holding off for a reduction in prices. The stock amounts to about 61,000 chests. A few chops of Oolongs have been taken for America at taels 18.8 to 26.8 o.b. for common Foochow-packed to superior cargo. Stock has been increased to about 34,000 half chests, and it is estimated that the season's supply will be, at least, 10,000 half-chests in excess of the previous year.

AMOY.—Settlements of tea have been very trifling, and teamen would accept prices about $2 per picul under the highest point, while a further reduction is extremely probable. The Golden State sailed for New York on the 18th of November, with 94,885 lbs. Congou and Souchong, and 650,378 lbs Ooloong.

CANTON.—Since our last report a limited amount of business has been transacted. Country Congous: Receipts for this season amount to only 12,300 chests, against 29,500 chests at same date of 1866. The stock is 5 840 chests, and another half-chop is reported to be near at hand. Holders are very firm, demanding prices much above the views of foreigners, and until they become more reasonable we do not expect to have any transactions to report. Canton-made Teas: 1,500 boxes district Congou have found a buyer at from tls. 21 to 28; 3 200 boxes Scented Orange Pekoes have been taken at from tls. 18½ to 34½, and about 3,000 boxes Caper at from tls. 16 to 30. We quote no change in prices. Stocks are much reduced, especially of finest to choice parcels, and any competition on the part of foreigners would strengthen prices for the remaining stock. There has been a moderate request for Gunpowder, and 2,400 boxes have been taken at tls. 11½ to 18.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—Advices from home markets continue to be discouraging, and settlements have been limited, amounting to but about 350 piculs of all sorts. Oshio is very firmly held, but prices of Mybash and Koshiu show a further fall of $10 to 30 per picul. Arrivals have been in excess of settlements, and stock is estimated at 1,200 to 1,500 piculs.

SHANGHAI.—Since our last report the Silk Market has been quiet. The high rates at which supplies from the interior have been laid down at Shanghai have prevented holders from showing any great anxiety to realise except at former rates, while, on the other hand, the latest telegraphic advices from Europe are not of a nature to encourage buyers. Settlements amount to only 1,100 bales, and prices show scarcely any alteration from last quotations. Stock was about 3,000 bales.

CANTON.—We can learn of no transactions since departure of the English mail, and we think that buying has very nearly come to an end for this season. We cannot quote prices as being any higher, but holders are much firmer and apparently not over anxious to dispose of their stock at the ruling rates.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS AT SINGAPORE.

WE had a short time ago occasion to animadvert upon the extraordinary—if the phrase were not so hackneyed we would say "un-English"—course, adopted by Colonel ORD in excluding the representatives of the press from the meetings of the Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements, and we revert again to the subject because we deem it one of grave importance to all concerned, and to no one more than to the GOVERNOR himself; for certainly, in the age we live in, no British ruler can ever gain the respect or esteem of his fellow citizens if he endeavour to suppress investigation into his public acts. In making the remarks we then did we felt that in advocating the publicity of the debates in the Legislative Council we were merely expressing the common sentiment of all enlightened Englishmen; yet it affords us pleasure to be able to cite so great an authority as the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE on our side. In the case of WASON v. WALTER (as proprieter of The Times), which was tried a few days ago in the Court of Queen's Bench, his lordship delivered judgment in terms which we commend to the serious perusal of all such as are disposed to quarrel with the institution of the press as a beneficial power in society. The case itself was one of libel, and the questions at issue were these:—Whether the privilege of a member of Parliament to utter in debate injurious expressions concerning others extends to the proprietor of a newspaper in the columns of which a bona fide report of such expressions is published? and whether such proprietor or editor has a right to comment editorially upon any public question which is in itself of a libellous nature? The CHIEF JUSTICE directed the jury that in point of law a bona fide and truthful report of a debate in Parliament, or of proceedings in a court of justice, is a privileged communication, and one that is not the subject of an action. He also ruled that an editor has a right to comment (in a fair spirit) upon questions of public interest, even when the feelings of individuals may suffer from the discussion of the subject. In delivering judgment his lordship expressed himself as follows as to the value of public reports of the proceedings in Parliament:—"It is "of paramount importance to the public, and not only to the "public but to the other branches of the Legislature—the "House of Lords and the House of Commons—that all their "proceedings should be made publicly known; for by "that means the public are not only instructed and en"lightened in all that relates to the interests of the "country, but that power of public opinion, so valuable in "inspiring a sense of duty and of keeping men, whether dis"charging individually or collectively public functions in the "path of duty, is brought to bear upon them, and there is not "one, from the Sovereign on her throne to the lowest official, "upon whom that influence does not act with a salutary effect. "But it does not rest there. Where would be the confidence "and attachment we now feel for the constitution under which "the Legislature acts, for the Government by whom the affairs "of the country are managed, for the two branches of the "Legislature to whom the interests of the country are com"mitted, if the proceedings of the Houses of Parliament were "not made known to those who are so deeply interested in "them? It seems to me, therefore, to be a matter of abso"lute importance that the proceedings of the two branches of "the Legislature, in which public discussions take place, should "be made generally known."

This we take to be a very excellent exposition of the value of reports of the proceedings of legislative bodies, but as Colonel ORD evidently holds a contrary opinion, it would be highly satisfactory to learn upon what grounds it is founded; more especially as we feel certain that Sir BENSON MAXWELL, the Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements, could not have given his support to this measure. We would also add for the especial benefit of the members of the Legistive Council that holds its sittings at Singapore (who unanimously passed the resolution to exclude the representatives of the press) the following expression of opinion of the CHIEF JUSTICE of the Queen's Bench as to the probability of Parliament ever making use of its right to exclude the press from its debates:—"I believe both Houses are actuated by far too noble sentiments "and far too great a regard for the public weal to desire that "their proceedings should not be communicated to the public." . . . "What I say is this, that it is of essential interest "and importance and advantage to the community at large that "proceedings in Parliament should be faithfully reported." In conclusion, we will express a hope that so obnoxious and prejudicial a policy of exclusion as that which now obtains in Singapore will speedily give way to a fairer and more open system; and we suggest that no better or safer guide could be found in such a matter than the principles enunciated in the above quoted judgment of the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

THE FORMOSA DIFFICULTY.

THE intelligence received by last mail of the results of General LE GENDRE'S expedition to Formosa must be regarded not only as eminently satisfactory in itself, as promoting both the security of commerce and the spread of humanity, but as infinitely creditable both to the intrepidity and the moderation of the gentleman who so successfully conducted this dangerous enterprise. It would be difficult to say aught in praise of General LE GENDRE that has not already been said by our contemporaries in China; yet we cannot allow the occasion to pass without endorsing the high opinion unanimously expressed of what has been justly termed "a rare combination of firmness "and humanity." For a long time it has been a standing reproach against the Americans that they were ever ready to profit by our successes in China without in any degree contributing towards them; in fact, that they shared every advantage gained by us, while they in no case helped to attain it. But now we have a genuine American triumph to record. General LE GENDRE would have amply earned our thanks had he procured the punishment of these Formosan savages by an American armed force. But he has done better than this. With wonderful tact and firmness, doubtless aided by a keen appreciation of the native character, he actually succeeded in inducing the Chinese authorities to fit out an expedition themselves to punish their lawless subjects. Following the axiom "If you want a thing done, see it done," he himself accompanied the expedition, and dictated his terms to the chief of the savage tribes—terms both dignified and moderate, which the islanders, of course, had no alternative but to accept. So, thanks to the U.S. Consul, a promise has been obtained of friendly treatment for all strangers who may in future land, either voluntarily or otherwise, on that hitherto inhospitable shore; a fort has been erected to hold the natives in check, and be a refuge for shipwrecked mariners; and the body of Mrs. Hunt, with some relics of the ill-fated Rover, have been recovered. It may be that time will efface this salutary lesson for the minds of the aborigines, and that one of a sterner nature will be needed to produce a permanent impression; but even this will in no way lessen the credit due to General LE GENDRE for the energy and tact he has displayed in this enterprise.

THE NEW HONG KONG ASSOCIATION.

IN forming an "Association for Promoting the Interests of "the Colony," the leading merchants of Hong Kong have taken a step of no little importance, and their future prosperity will depend in great measure on the subsequent development of the idea thus initiated. So long as its proceedings are characterised by caution, moderation, and unanimity, the Association will doubtless have many opportunities of exercising a beneficial influence; but long experience shows that associations or societies organised among a community whose elements are perpetually changing, are apt in course of time either to be entirely diverted from their original purpose, or to perish of inanition. The formation of such a body was not necessary, we should think, for the mere purpose of petitioning Parliament against the military tax. That might have been accomplished by means of a single general meeting of the colonists. The duties of the Association, if it is to be of any real use at all, must embrace a very wide field. China merchants resident in London must be enrolled as members, and a London committee must be appointed to act in concert with that which governs the Association in Hong Kong. This committee should be in constant communication with such members of Parliament as can be induced to take an interest in China affairs, with a view gradually to overcome the intense ignorance regarding them that unfortunately prevails in the House of Commons. And all this must be done quietly and unobtrusively. A too vigorous attempt to cram China down everybody's throat will defeat its own object; and any ill-judged haste or want of unanimity among its members would cover the association with ridicule, and bring the colony into greater disrepute than ever. The China Punch has fairly hit one of its weak points, in pointing out the inappropriate choice made of a secretary. It is quite clear that a public journalist, particularly in such a place as Hong Kong, should hold himself clear of any such movement, however excellent its motives; or what becomes of the impartial criticism of the press? The editor of a Hong Kong daily paper seems to us peculiarly ineligible for the post of secretary to such a body.

THE REVISION OF THE CHINA TREATY.

IT is some months since any special allusion was made in these columns to the approaching revision of the Treaty of Tientsin; in fact, we have purposely refrained from any comment upon the memorials drawn up by the merchants of Foochow, Amoy, and Hong Kong, until we had an opportunity of seeing that emanating from Shanghai also. This last having arrived by the mail delivered on the 28th ultimo, we are now in a position to institute a comparison between the views expressed by the residents at each of the chief ports, on the important subject of treaty revision. On some points the various memorials differ widely in spirit; on others they exhibit a remarkable degree of unanimity. All bear the impress of much care and thoughtfulness, and the arguments adduced in support of the claims put forward are, in most cases, clear and logical enough. Collectively, these documents cannot be otherwise than useful to Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK in the arduous task that awaits him, however difficult he may find it to give effect to even a tithe of the aspirations embodied in them. The main feature of the Amoy Memorial is a general demand for a lower tariff—a sweeping reduction of import, export, and coasting duties, tonnage dues, &c. The Foochow memorial, also, is little else than a protest against exorbitant transit and coasting duties. The Shanghai Chamber of Commerce enters into a lengthy exposition of the defects in the present treaty, and divides the amendments required into three classes, political, administrative, and judicial; laying more stress on the necessity for a liberal interpretation of existing concessions than on the advantage of pressing for additional ones. In like manner the Hong Kong Chamber reviews the treaty, clause by clause, and shows how a number of its most valuable provisions are rendered virtually inoperative by the "passive resistance" of the native authorities; winding up with an energetic demand for permission to introduce railways and telegraphs into the interior. It would appear that the exigencies of Tape forbade the possibility of any direct communication between the Hong Kong merchants and the Superintendent of (their) Trade; so this memorial has to be addressed to the Colonial Secretary, and sent home to England, in order that it may reach Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK'S hands in a sufficiently official and round-about manner. To avoid any further delay from this cause (and probably as a protest against the nuisance) the memorialists request that Sir RUTHERFORD may be instructed to send them copies of any of his despatches in which the document may be referred to direct; but they can hardly expect Government to sanction such a monstrous breach of etiquette, with nothing better than mere common sense to plead in extenuation of it. It is specially worthy of remark at a time like the present that all the memorialists agree in taking a hopeful view of the future of the China trade, provided only that the present opportunity of placing it on a more satisfactory footing, as regards treaty rights, be not neglected.

It is interesting, too, to compare the different views expressed on some of the more important points, such, for instance, as the propriety of opening any new ports. The Hong Kong Chamber avows a wish for another port on the West Coast, in addition to a properly effective opening of Kiung Chow, the port at Hainan, which (like Swatow), although included among the treaty ports, remains virtually closed. This new port is asked for on the somewhat insufficient ground that there is some promise of a traffic, which, "if fostered," may in time become considerable! It is admitted that the protection of a gunboat would be necessary; more likely a dozen, we should have thought, to protect a trade carried on by small brigs and schooners, along a coast whose every inlet is a den of pirates. From Amoy we have a proposal to open Wanchew as a treaty port, on the ground that it already possesses a considerable trade, and is too far from Ningpo on the one hand, and Foochow on the other, to be detrimental to either. To this is appended a scheme for "subsidiary ports" to be opened all along the coast, under such regulations as would prevent detriment to vested interests at the treaty ports; that is to say, without expensive Consular, Customs, and mercantile establishments, the necessary forms being gone through at the nearest treaty port. The Foochow memorial suggests that foreign vessels should be allowed to trade at all ports on the coast, under certain regulations, but deprecates the selection of one or two as concessions or settlements on the old plan. Shanghai, mindful of the calamities that followed the opening of Hankow maintains a discreet silence on the subject. The Hong Kong proposal for a West Coast port is far too speculative; and that from Amoy, with its machinery of "subsidiary" ports, does not seem very practical either. The Foochow suggestion, to open all ports, but without any more "concessions" or "settlements" is preferable to either of the other two; but after all we are inclined to think the Shanghai community has shown the greatest wisdom of all, in ignoring the subject of new ports altogether, while energetically advocating the right of travel and residence in the interior. "So long as we are confined to the treaty ports," they justly urge, "it is within the power of the Chinese "officials to tax our trade to any extent they please, and "experience has fully demonstrated that they will not hesitate "to make use of this power. The right of renting land and "houses in the interior would pave the way to the introduction "of railways, and the development of the mineral resources "of China, and your memorialists need scarcely refer to the "important advantages to be derived by all interested in steam "navigation from the efficient working of the coal fields of "China. The recent discoveries of coal mines near Chinkiang, "in a particularly favourable position, gives a practical bearing "to the question. Should Her Majesty's Government not be "of opinion that the treaty will admit of residence in the "interior, it is the earnest hope of your memorialists that "they may consider it advisable to negotiate for this privilege; "or at all events for the right of residence within a fixed "radius, or perhaps two hundred miles from some or all of "the treaty ports." This seems to us to be the soundest possible reasoning. China, in one sense, is like the coal-fields here referred to; we must dig deep to get any good out of either. While wasting our energies in the effort to open more coast ports we are but scratching at the outer crust of the country, when we should be penetrating into its very heart.

The questions of travel and residence in the interior and inland steam navigation, are intimately connected with one another. The Hong Kong memorial, recalling the representations made to H. M.'s Minister by the residents at Kiukiang on the occasion of his recent visit, urge that Article X. of the Treaty requires the addition of a clause permitting steamers to ply on the Poyang Lake, as well as to run on the upper part of the Canton River. The Shanghai memorialists, waiving the question of right to navigate all the rivers of China with large steamers, insist on that of sending small steam cargo boats to convey their own treasure or goods into the interior, and bring down produce. The Chinese have vigorously opposed this innovation, on the grounds that certain classes of the population would be thrown out of employment, and that control over the foreign crews would be impracticable. Any demonstration of the absurdity of this reasoning would be superfluous, and it will, we should think, have no weight at all with Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK.

Another subject that is dwelt on at considerable length is the administration of justice in matters wherein both natives and foreigners are concerned. The Hong Kong Memorial protests against the system of stubborn obstructiveness pursued by the subordinate officials stationed at Treaty ports, which resolves itself into a systematic evasion of the consideration of important matters brought to their notice by H.M.'s Consuls. This evasion is effected by reference to Peking on some frivolous plea, as a means of gaining time and ultimately tiring out all efforts to obtain justice. This state of things is pointed out as being most injurious to the status of the British Consuls, whose power to protect their countrymen is all but nullified. The Shanghai memorial quotes several instances in which gross injustice has resulted from the bad faith and indifference to right manifested by the Chinese Government; and complains that the "Mixed Court," after being some years in operation, has effected little practical amelioration in this respect. From Hong Kong we have no practical suggestion for a remedy, but from Shanghai we have a proposal (based on the existing Mixed Court), which it is thought would work satisfactorily. One Court, consisting of a junior native magistrate in conjunction with a Consular assistant, would take charge of police cases and civil causes involving sums not exceeding 200 taels. A higher Court, consisting of a native officer specially deputed, in conjunction with a Consular officer, of not lower rank than Vice-Consul or Acting Vice-Consul, would adjudicate suits for sums exceeding 200 taels and not exceeding 3,000 taels—a right of appeal to stand to a superior Court, to be comprised of the Taotai or other native official of similar authority, and the Consul or Acting Consul. This Court to have cognisance of all cases involving claims exceeding 3,000 taels, and appeals from its decisions to be made to the Minister and high authorities at Peking. In all cases the Courts should have power to enforce their decisions, which being duly recorded would speedily form themselves into a code of law applicable to the settlement of all disputes likely to arise in the conduct of mercantile transactions. This is avowedly a very difficult question to deal with, especially as regards mercantile disputes; for no fixed principles of Chinese commercial law are known to exist, and a considerable time must elapse before a collection of precedents can be accumulated such as will be of any practical value. We doubt whether any better scheme could be devised; but any change whatever will be useless unless a firmer determination is evinced by the Minister at Peking to obtain a prompt settlement of claims when they have once been fairly made out.

There are other subjects discussed in these memorials equally deserving of notice, and we shall probably return to them in a future issue.

WE understand that the CAVANAGH Testimonial Committee have arranged with Mr. SIDNEY HODGES to paint the portrait of Major-General CAVANAGH, late Governor of Singapore, and that it will be ready for exhibition in the next year's Academy, after which it will be forwarded to Singapore there to be hung in the Town-hall. We believe that the artist selected is the one who executed the portrait of Rajah Sir JAMES BROOKE and other celebrities. The Testimonial Plate to General CAVANAGH is likely to be presented by a deputation next May.

THE arrangements made some months since by the East India Telegraph Company of New York for the despatch to China of the cable belonging to the Western Union Co.—originally intended for the Russo-American line—have, we regret to say, fallen through. We believe that the directors will renew their efforts to effect the laying of coast lines in China in the approaching spring.

THE HONG KONG STAMP ACT.

WE noticed briefly in our last issue that the managers of the various banks in Hong Kong had memorialised the GOVERNOR with the view of obtaining a reduction of the stamp duty on letters of hypothecation and bank-notes, and that his EXCELLENCY had consented to reduce the former, but declined to alter the latter. It will be seen, however, from the GOVERNOR'S reply to the memorial (the text of which we subjoin) that the paragraph relating to bank-notes does not imply an unqualified refusal to make any alteration, but concedes a present reduction of one-third, suspending further action until more experience has been gained of the general working of the Act:—

GENTLEMEN,—I am desired to inform you in reply to the communication of the 15th ult., that his Excellency has had under anxious consideration the observations with which you favoured him in that communication, as to the undue pressure put by the Stamp Ordinance on letters of hypothecation, and on the bank-notes which you issue, rather, as you state, for the general convenience of the public than any profit derived from them by the banks.

In reference to the first point his Excellency felt that he could at once, without prejudice to the public interests, concede that the amount leviable on temporary loans generally obtained by the hypothecation of documents, themselves stamped, and attached to bills of exchange likewise stamped, was excessive in proportion to other parts of the schedule. The Government Gazette will accordingly have already apprised you that his Excellency having recognised the policy of acceding to your wishes on that subject, lost no time in lowering the stamp duty on letters of hypothecation, and he has learned with much pleasure that the duty now fixed is regarded as moderate.

The other question relative to the duty leviable on bank-notes involved many interesting and difficult points, and his Excellency therefore took further time to consider it, but without at present entering into any detailed explanations of the reasons in influencing him, I am desired to state that the Governor, having already consented to remit one-third of that duty, is of opinion that any further reduction of the duty is inexpedient, and even if it were expedient, that the question cannot be dealt with satisfactorily without a larger experience of the working of the Stamp Ordinance, and the amount of revenue derivable from that source.—I have, &c.,

(Signed) CECIL C. SMITH,
Acting Colonial Secretary.

THE CHINESE EMIGRATION ACT.

THE Hong Kong authorities evince a determination to enforce the provisions of the Chinese Passenger Act, and a case was reported by last mail in which the master of a British vessel was fined $500 for a breach of it. The fine is a heavy one for a shipmaster to pay, and seems at the first glance to be a severe penalty for a somewhat trivial offence; it must, however, be remembered that if the horrors of the Coolie traffic are ever to be successfully dealt with, a rigid enforcement of all the provisions of the Passenger Act is indispensable. The following is an abbreviated report of the case:—

At the Magistrate's Court, before Mr. May, the Harbour-Master charged Mr. J. Row, master of the British ship Codabux, with having committed a breach of the Chinese Passengers' Act, 1865. Mr. G. Thomsett, sworn, said: I am emigration officer, and produce a port clearance, obtained from the harbour-master's office by the defendant, for Singapore and Calcutta, cargo sundries and no passengers. This morning Mr. Webster reported having boarded the Codabux, in consequence of which report I lodge a complaint against defendant. He has cleared out on a voyage of more than seven days' duration, having on board more than twenty passengers, without obtaining the emigration officer's certificate. Singapore is declared by proclamation to be a voyage of twenty days. His worship said (addressing defendant) that he had made himself liable in a very serious way, and he might be indicted for a misdemeanor, his ship might have been seized and forfeited, and he was now liable to a penalty of £100. Defendant admitted the truth of all that had been said, but pleaded that he was ignorant, or he would not have done what he had done. He also stated that the Chinese were all in charge of cargo and were not passengers or emigrants at all; besides, he was only going to Singapore, and in this monsoon he had gone down there in six days. Magistrate (addressing the emigration officer): Is there any reason for leniency? Mr. Thomsett said that there was not the slightest reason for leniency in the case. The Magistrate said that it was his duty to impose a heavy penalty in order to warn others from the like offence, but he would inform defendant that appeal to the Governor was open to him. He would fine defendant in the sum of £100 ($500), and the vessel would be detained until such time as the fine was paid. Defendant drew the attention of the bench to the fact that he had a large family. His Worship explained that the heavy penalty was not so much for defendant as for the offence, and he would certainly be sorry if his family were injured thereby. But the best thing which defendant could now do, and the thing most likely to commend him to the leniency of the Governor, was to go and do now as much as he could to carry out the orders of the emigration officer. He, however, had felt it his duty to do as he had done in imposing the penalty, and the vessel would be detained. Defendant: Oh yes; she is detained now.

MR. SEARE'S REPORT ON OSAKA.

IN a late issue we gave a resume of Mr. LOCOCK'S official report on Osaka and Hiogo, which, by the way, does not seem to have been made public in Japan, where it would have been of the greatest use. For convenience of comparison and reference we now reprint Mr. SEARE'S Report on Osaka, addressed to A. O. GAY, Esq., Chairman of the Yokohama General Chamber of Commerce:—

DEAR SIR,—I have great pleasure in commencing a correspondence with you, as chairman of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce, from this place, and I trust that this communication will be of some little service to the merchants of Yokohama and their constituents.

Herein I enclose two documents which are necessarily full of interest to the merchants composing the Chamber.

The first document is the proposed ground-plan of the Osaka settlement, the second the proposed plan for the bonded warehouses; and in laying them before you, I purpose very freely to comment upon both.

First, then, as to the ground-plan; so far as this plan is concerned, I am responsible, as having advised the land officers that a bund should extend entirely around the settlement—and that, perpendicularly and transversely, it should be bisected by two main thoroughfares, all of a uniform breadth of 35 feet.

You will note there is upon the plan a part coloured green, and with green dots, covering much of the area; this colour denotes timber trees, some of lofty and imposing appearance, and all of which the Ministers have determined should remain intact.

Upon going over the ground, its limited area could not fail to strike me, and seeing that the preservation would entirely interfere with any sound and comprehensive plan, I requested the land officers to draw a ground plan, altogether irrespective of the timber, when they would find that many of the trees would be in the middle of the roads, and in others in the middle of the houses! And it is so—with few exceptions the timber must fall; no plan can be made in so limited a space and the trees remain.

You will also notice an overlapping paper. This represents two large basins used for boat building and covered with sheds and godown marked . . . . . ., which also the Ministers had settled to preserve intact.

The plan was drawn irrespective of such ministerial reservation. The godown is simply fit for a coolie's sleeping house, and the dock, if preserved, would entirely interfere with a uniform and cohesive plan. The native authorities are quite willing to remove the building and dam out the water, filling in the space, and thus gaining for merchants two fine lots, both with water frontage, each measuring 409 tsubos. This side looks towards the city of Osaka, and near these lots will be erected a new bridge over the stream which separates the settlement from the native city.

The authorities have already sent the plan to Yedo, and it will probably have been before the foreign Ministers some days before this comes to your hands, but I am inclined to think, however fond they may be of the picturesque, that, on the ground of public utility and convenience, they will, when they have inspected the plan, reverse their previous decision.

With regard to the bund and the main bisecting thoroughfares, their existence is, I think, on many grounds imperatively necessary, and not of less width than drawn, viz. 35 feet. Public health and convenience, as well as commercial necessity, strongly impresses that portion of the plan upon my mind.

I would now draw your attention to the general plan, so far as the lots are concerned, premising, however, that I have recommended that the land officers in laying out the ground should make the centre thoroughfare the most elevated part of the settlement, having a gradual slope downwards to the water on each side, which they have decided to do. The rains here are very heavy, and by carrying out this principle the surface drainage of the settlement will be much facilitated.

You will note that the plan gives eighteen large and one small lot for the use and appliances of merchants. These lots vary from 333 to 483 tsubos, and the question which Ministers and merchants will have to determine is this—On public grounds, is it desirable that merchants should have lots fitted to the climate and their health, and I think commercial necessities, or more lots and much less convenience?

Ministers will necessarily have their say upon this question; but merchants will be expected to purchase and pay for this ground—will have to pay the annual ground-rent—and their convenience and wants, I look upon it, are matters of primary necessity. The plan as it stands will give the occupants of every lot but one ample space for house, silk-inspecting room, and godowns, and though sufficient space is provided for the storage of goods in bond, merchants should have the option of storing their goods in their own premises should they prefer to do so.

There is one lot measuring 483 tsubos; this is the largest lot in the settlement, and I would bring to your notice whether it would not be well to set aside this lot—presuming the plan to be adopted—for public uses as a club, Chamber of Commerce, &c.

Should the merchants, when they come up here in January, have organised such a corporation—and it must be a bona fide proprietary business, and in the hands of trustees, &c.,—I do not think there would be much difficulty in their having the land made over to them at the stated ground-rent, and at the average cost of the rest of the lots. Should they on their arrival not have organised the basis of such an institution the native authorities might be moved to hold it over for such purpose for the space of six months. Failing at that period to have moved in the matter, the lot is to be divided into two equal parts and sold by public sale on account of the Government.

These are points for the consideration of the Chamber; they will require close consideration and an early adjustment. The Chamber will of course adopt its own mode of conveying the wants and wishes of its members to the Ministers of their respective nationalities.

The base of the settlement is bounded by the ground on which will be erected the foreign Consulates. The native Government Office is not shown in this plan; it will be near the Consulates, built upon an isolated piece of ground, surrounded by water, over which a bridge will be thrown. The extreme point of the settlement terminates with the Bonded Warehouses, and to this plan I now call your attention.

The plan contains four bonded warehouses and one for duty free and duty paid goods, two inspecting offices, and an office for the transaction of business—indeed a scheme has been laid before the Ministers—it having found favour with the native authorities—that at this office all import and export duties be paid, as well as warehouse charges; thus facilitating the business of the place, and economising the time of the merchants, by a simple centralising system.

Believing that these warehouses will be built at all events long before any which merchants can erect for themselves, and thinking that for some time to come much of the commodity imported here would be from the merchants' godowns at Yokohama on which the duties have been paid, I have recommended that one godown be set aside for duty free and duty paid goods, to be stored at the same charge as goods in bond. By the regulations at Yokahama this is prohibited, but here at present there are no vested interests to interfere with, and I think the device will be of aid to the merchants than otherwise. I trust the plans which I enclose and the comments I have made may be of some service to the members of your Chamber.—Believe me, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

BENJAMIN SEARE,
Superintendent of Bonded Warehouses to the Customs' Authorities at Yokohama, detailed by the Authorities at Yedo to the Governor of Osaka, on special business.

CANTON INSURANCE OFFICE.

The following report of the meeting of the Canton Insurance Office was shut out of our last issue owing to want of space :—

A meeting of the shareholders in the above office was held on the 2nd Nov., at their rooms, at two o'clock; the Hon. WM. KESWICK occupying the chair.

The final accounts of the office for 1865 were laid before the meeting, together with statements of the condition of the office of 1866 so far as the accounts were complete, and of the office for the current year up to the 30th Sept. The total profit for the year 1865 amounted to $331,200, allowing two dividends, one of $750 and another of $354 per share, and a reserved third of $110,400. For 1866 the profit on the incomplete accounts was $244,205, and up to date the profit of the current year was $366,478, subject to some reductions.

On motion of Mr. BOSMAN, the final accounts for 1865 were passed, and those for the ensuing two years submitted to the meeting were approved.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the accounts of 1866, so far as complete, would admit of an immediate dividend of $500 per share.

Mr. BOSMAN proposed that the general agents be authorised to declare a dividend of $500 per share, that the accounts be closed, and the office, 1866, wound up under their supervision, which was unanimously agreed to.

On motion of Mr. W. H. FOSTER, jun., seconded by Mr. DUNCANSON, a pension of $1,200 per annum was voted to Mr. Rickett, now residing in England, for his past faithful and efficient services to the office.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the general agents had received a letter from the secretary of the North China Insurance Company, at Shanghai, asking for the co-operation of the Canton Office, in replying to a letter received from the agents of the company in London, on the present rate of premium charged on sailing ships from China to London. The London companies complained that it was too low to be profitable, and that as it was at present the home offices had a most unfavourable experience. They appealed to the North China, as having originally reduced the rate to its present level, to now take the initiative in increasing it to a paying standard. As yet there had been no definite reply given to this letter, the general agents wishing first to submit the question to the shareholders and have their views upon it. He would say, however, that there was a mistake about the rate having been reduced, since it was identical now to that charged by this office since its beginning, or at least for thirty years back, and he was now of opinion that it was a fair and just one. He called attention, however, to a suggestion that had been made at the last regular meeting in regard to the charge for brokerage, he thought all would be willing that this should be reduced from 15 to 10 per cent.

Mr. LEMANN said he knew the risks by sailing vessels from China to Great Britain had been profitable neither to the North China Company nor to the underwriters at home, and if they had been profitable to the "Canton" (as the general agents averred) it must have been by a mere matter of chance, since the business of the "North China" and of the "Canton" are conducted on exactly the same principles as regards acceptance of risks, and up to a certain limit the two offices took each as much as they could get. If the offices could get an equal line, or amount on each vessel the result would be profitable, and it would be easy to ascertain, from statistics, what the average amount of insurance offered to the offices is on each vessel. But as matters at present stand, there may be a large line on one ship, and only a small one on another, so that the result is more a matter of chance than if only an average amount were taken. The taking of such risks or large amounts on any one vessel is not so much the fault of the directors of the offices as of the shareholders, who are importunate to have all their risks taken in offices in which they are shareholders, because they wish to share in the one-third of the profits of the offices, which are reserved for contributing shareholders.

After some further conversation,

Mr. BOSMAN said he thought that this was a subject for the general agents to deal with, and since they now knew the views of the shareholders, he thought the whole ought to be left with them, to take what action they might deem most fit. This met with unanimous approval of those present, and, there being no other business, the meeting separated.

Monetary and Commercial.

Messrs. Gibb, Livingston, and Co., of Shanghai, have been appointed Lloyd's agents at that port, and Messrs. Gilman and Co. at Hong Kong.

Messrs. Holliday, Wise, and Co. have been appointed to succeed Messrs. Dent and Co. as agents for the London Assurance Company in Hong Kong and Shanghai, and they are empowered to accept risks.

The deed of inspection executed by the creditors of Messrs. Smith, Kennedy and Co., of China, has been duly completed and registered. The inspectors are Mr. E. J. Gilman, Mr. A. D. Chapman (of Messrs. Gregson and Co.), and Mr. G. B. Dewhurst, of Manchester.

We have the following changes in mercantile firms to notice :—

The business of Mr. B. Liebert, of Manchester and Bradford, has been made over to Messrs. Levita and Hudson, who will conduct it at both places under their names.

Mr. George Rennie, of Liverpool, intimates that he has retired from the firm of Rennie, Clowes, and Co., of Liverpool, and from the firm of Rennie, Scovell, and Co., of Bombay. The business of both houses will be carried on under the same style by Messrs. W. R. Price and R. C. Antrobus, (late of China).

Mr. John Sands, jun., who has for some years been a partner in the firm of Framjee Sands and Co., of Bombay, and Mr. William Yeoman, who of late years has held the power of attorney of Frith, Sands and Co., have been admitted partners of Frith, Sands, and Co. Mr. John Griffith Frith retires. Mr. Meyer, of the firm of Messrs. Siordet and Co., retires, and Mr. John James Siordet and his two sons carry on the business, and assume all the liabilities.

Mr. James Goddard, jun., has admitted Mr. James Fergusson as a partner. The firm is now James Goddard, Jun., and Co.

Messrs. John Hegan and Co. intimate that they have taken into partnership Mr. James Hainsworth, late of Liverpool. Mr. Alfred Hooper, who has a recognised interest in the business, will sign, as heretofore, per procuration.

Messrs. Schultze and Mohr have issued a circular to the effect that the interest and responsibility of the widow of the late Mr. Carl Mohr in the firm has terminated, and that Mr. Alfred Mohr has joined as a partner. Mr. Edward Bates, of Liverpool, announces that he has taken into partnership his eldest son, Edward Percy Bates, and that the firm will be carried on as Edward Bates, of Liverpool, and Edward Bates and Co., of Bombay. Mr. H. O. Houghton, of Liverpool, states that Mr. John Cobb Clowes has been admitted a partner, and that the firm in future will be called Houghton, Clowes, and Co. The partnership hitherto existing between Mr. James John Hance and Mr. Stephen Hartley Knowles, of Liverpool, trading under the title of William Greame and Co., has been dissolved, and will in future be continued by Mr. James John Hance and his son, James John Hance, jun., under the title of Hance, Son, and Co. Messrs. Kinloch and Co., of Liverpool, intimate that they have taken into partnership Mr. John Strachan, and that in future the business will be conducted under the title of Messrs. Kinloch, Strachan, and Co. Messrs. T. and H. Littledale, of Liverpool, announce that they have admitted Mr. J. A. Tobin a partner in the firm.

BOARD OF TRADE RETURNS.

The Board of Trade Returns for November, 1867, show a falling off of only £200,691, or about 1¼ per cent., in the declared value of our exportations compared with the corresponding month of last year. As against the same month of 1865, however, the decrease is 4½ per cent. The cotton trade has been fully equal to that of November, 1866, even as regards the nominal value of our shipments, while in respect to their quantity a large increase is shown. Of cotton yarns the consignments of the month were 24 per cent. in value and 44 per cent. in quantity over November, 1866, while of cotton goods, although but fractionally larger in value, they were 30 per cent. more in quantity. With the exception of an increase of 2 per cent. under the head of silk manufactures, a diminution is shown in nearly all the other principal articles. It has been 3 per cent. in earthenware, 2 per cent. in hardwares, 19 per cent. in haberdashery, and 3 per cent. in iron manufactures. Linen manufactures show a falling off of 30 per cent. in value, and 28 per cent. in quantity, and woollen manufactures a falling off of 11 per cent. in value and 16 per cent. in quantity. In most of the minor branches of production the business of the month was comparatively active. With regard to the importations of the month, it appears that the arrivals of cotton were but 469,373 cwt., against 645,227 in November, 1866. Of wheat they have been 3,903,760 cwt. against 1,995,106 cwt.—an increase of almost 100 per cent., and nearly half of the entire total was again obtained from Russia. From the United States, whence the quantity last year was insignificant, the proportion has been 15 per cent. The value of our exports of the produce and manufactures of the United Kingdom for the first 11 months of 1867 has been £167,931,378—showing a reduction of only 3½ per cent. from the total of the corresponding period of 1866, which was the largest ever attained. Compared with the corresponding 11 months of 1865 an increase is exhibited of 11½ per cent.

The following is a summary of those figures which relate to our Import and Export trade with China and other countries in the Far East :—

PORT OF AMOY.
CHINA.

SHIPOWNERS, AGENTS, and COMMANDERS are informed that the Dock Company's Establishments at the above Port afford facilities for REPAIRING and REFITTING STEAM and SAILING VESSELS.

Their large Granite Dock, 286 feet on the blocks, 307 feet over all, is in complete working order, and at average spring tides can take vessels drawing 16 to 17 feet. It is fitted with Caisson Gate and with a powerful Centrifugal Steam Pump, ensuring espatch in all states of the tide.

Their two smaller Granite Docks, one 223 feet, the other 160 feet on the blocks, can take vessels at average spring tides drawing 12 feet to 13 feet.

A stock kept on hand of Timber, Spars, Copper and Metal Sheathing, Paints for Iron Vessels, and other material required for Dockyard use.

The premises comprise Carpenters' Shops, Mast Sheds, Blacksmiths' Shops, superintended by experienced European Foremen; also an Engineer's Workshop, supplied with Lathes and other tools worked by Steam, in charge of a Resident European Engineer. Dry Godowns for the reception of stores of vessels requiring to discharge them

NOTICE TO SHIPOWNERS.
SINGAPORE DOCKS.

THE PATENT SLIP AND DOCK COMPANY execute, in the most efficient manner, SHIPS' REPAIRS of all descriptions, under the supervision of European Shipwrights and Engineers.

The DRY DOCK (opened in March, 1859) admits two Vessels at the same time, being over 400 feet in length with a depth of water ranging to 15½ feet.

Another Dry Dock of larger dimensions, adjoining the above, will shortly be completed, and available for the heaviest Steamers.

There is on the same premises extensive Wharf, with substantial Warehouse and other accommodation, comprising every convenience for coaling Steamers, discharging and storing Goods, together with ample Machinery and appliances for repairing Iron Steamers &c.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

Diseases of the most formidable and chronic character have been cured by Holloway's remedies. Ulcerations, which have proved themselves incurable by any other known means, have healed kindly under the purifying and regenerating influence of this Ointment. Strains, erysipelas, stiff joints, contracted muscles and glandular swellings can be most safely and effectively treated by Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which can do no harm under any circumstances. Neither of these medicaments have anything deleterious in their composition, but are essentially purifying and strengthening in their nature. The combined power of these noble remedies enables them successfully to cope with most descriptions of injuries, and to cure, or at least to relieve, most varieties of this disease.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

YOKOHAMA.

Dates by this opportunity are to the 15th Nov., but there is nothing of any importance. The following telegram, received on the 5th, has however caused considerable excitement :—

Shanghai, Dec. 7.

Intelligence received here announces that a political revolution has taken place in Japan. The Tycoon has resigned. It is supposed that the foreign relations of Japan will not be prejudiced by the change. An adjournment of the opening of the new ports for a few months is, however, considered probable.

The following is an extract from another letter from Mr. Seare :—At Osaka the authorities are making rapid progress with the works: they have established a regular board of works on the spot. Hundreds of workmen were hard at it when I left on Sunday last—making the sea wall—pulling down houses, filling up the hollow places, &c., &c. I can assure you that the Government is thoroughly in earnest, and with the amount of labour at their command I see no reason whatever to prevent their fulfilling their promise of having the concession for foreigners ready by the 1st of January.

The ground plan has been slightly altered. On remeasurement the settlement turns out to be a little larger than was at first estimated; it contains 14,300 tsuboes. Additional ground is to be got also by reducing the width of the roads from 35 to 30 feet; and by making the lots slightly smaller, varying from 305 to 384 tsuboes, save two lots which measure 244 and 248 tsuboes; they have thus been increased in number to 28. The main points of the plan are preserved; the bund will still go all round the settlement, and the two bisecting thoroughfares will be retained, slightly diminished in width, as I have said above. I do not send you a copy of the amended plan till it has received the sanction of the Ministers, but it will be in the hands of the merchants of Yokohama, of course, in ample time.

The conditions of sale are also before the authorities, but I have not yet received their decision upon them. They will in many points be the same as those of the Bluff Land sale at Yokohama. The main points of difference proposed are: that one firm or other purchaser shall only be allowed to purchase one lot, and that no leases shall be transferable under a term of three years—save in the event of death or bankruptcy, and then such lease shall only be transferable to a purchaser not already a holder. All this has been proposed in order to shut out mere land-speculators. I hope sincerely that these proposals will receive the sanction of the Powers that be.

The settlement at Kobe is simply a "magnificent" site. A finer situation for a great city does not exist, I believe, in the whole world. There are noble mountains in the rear, and the plain slopes downwards from their feet, gradually, to the shores of a lovely bay. I went partly over the ground intended for the settlement yesterday with the Vice-Governor. It measures in round numbers 70,000 tsuboes, and he told me there were between four and five thousand men then employed upon the works. The sites for the Custom-house and bonded warehouses are already determined on. The Custom-house is to be a building of pretence, two stories high; the lower part for commercial, the upper part for political uses. The plan for so large an area as I have mentioned—70,000 tsuboes, will naturally take some time to prepare, but the Ministers ought to have it very shortly.

CHINA.

—o—

SHANGHAI.

The dates are now down to the 25th Nov. The following is a letter from Newchwang:—

"The season is one of extraordinary mildness. The wild fowl have not yet been tempted away, and all the reports from the upper course of the river induce a belief that ships may remain with impunity until the end of the month. A grave responsibility thus falls on masters of vessels, who relying on the early appearance of ice in some former years, may have, without reaching the river, presumed that the port would be closed, and at once made use of the clause on their bills of lading, which permits them—should such be the case—to land their cargoes at Chefoo. The business year closes with most satisfactory results and most hopeful prospects. Despite the present lowness of price, the quantity of opium imported will equal that of the preceding year, whilst manufactures of every description have enjoyed an unlooked for popularity."

The Customs Report of trade at Shanghai for the month of September shows a decrease in the import of Grey Shirtings from 236,000 to 93,000, as compared with the previous year; of T-Cloths from 37,000 to 20,000; of English and American Drills from 24,000 to 228; of Camlets from 17,000 to 5,000; of Long Ells from 23,000 to 11,000; of Coals of all sorts from 17,000 to 4,000 tons; and of Iron from 11,000 to 2,000 piculs. Lustres, almost alone, show an increase from 8,000 to 28,000 pieces. Chintzes are nearly the same as last year.

A meeting of the North China Insurance Company was held on the 18th. Present Messrs. Bryans, chairman, Lavers, Bell, Duncanson and Michie, directors, and several shareholders.

The CHAIRMAN, referring to the motive of the present meeeting, which had been adjourned from the 18th ult., to hear the opinion of the directors regarding the advisability of establishing a separate agency in London, read a resolution passed at the commencement of the present triennial term, to the effect that the agency should be left in Messrs. Ashton and Co.'s hands. This resolution had been communicated to Messrs. Ashton in a manner which would lead them to suppose that the agency would be left in their hands during the whole of the term; and the directors were of opinion that to take any contrary action previous to the expiry of that term would be a breach of faith. The directors would, of course, bow to the wishes of the shareholders in the matter, but he had no doubt that a knowledge of the circumstances had induced a change in public opinion since the last meeting.

In reply to a question by Mr. GROOM, the Secretary said that the meeting in which the resolution referred to by the chairman had been passed comprised 29 shareholders, representing 119 shares.

The CHAIRMAN added that the directors had also been asked to give an estimate of the probable yearly cost of a separate agency. They could, of course, only do so approximately; but thought it would probably be €3,000 to £3,500. He would be glad, now, to hear any remarks by the gentlemen who had been active at the last meeting.

Mr. MAITLAND still thought the general opinion of the shareholders was, that the agency should be carried on independently. When he brought a proposal for the establishment of a separate agency before the last meeting he certainly was not aware of the existence of that resolution. It seemed extraordinary that the company should be bound by it. There might be many reasons—40, 50, or 100—why a company should take its agency out of the hands of persons previously employed; thought it was neither necessary nor advisable to bring them all forward. It was sufficient to say that it was to the interest of the company to take the proposed step, and he thought if the matter were laid fairly before the London agents they would see that it was so. Many people would take shares in the company if its agency were conducted separately, who would not do so now. It was the duty of shareholders to look after the interests of the company, and to do whatever they thought most conducive to those interests; and he certainly thought it was advisable to establish a separate London agency before the commencement of the new term.

Mr. DUNCANSON: Mr. Maitland had said there might be forty, fifty, or a hundred reasons for changing the agency. Perhaps he would give half a dozen of them.

Mr. MAITLAND had also said that it was not desirable to specify the reasons which might exist. The one he had given, that it was to the interest of the company, was quite sufficient. He proposed:—

"That on and after the 1st July, 1868, or as soon after as possible, the business of the company in London be placed in the hands of a secretary, who shall act under the supervision of a consulting directory, to consist of three shareholders."

Mr. OVERWEG seconded the proposal.

Mr. GROOM had asked that the question should be adjourned from the previous meeting, not because he was opposed to a separate agency, but to give the shareholders time to examine the position. They now found that a resolution had been carried at a previous meeting, with only one dissentient voice out of twenty-nine, in favour of the agency being left in Messrs. Ashton and Co.'s hands. Being informed of this resolution Messrs. Ashton had probably gone to some expense with a view to carry on the agency; and he thought that unless some plain and good reason were given for the change, it would be unfair to remove the agency from their hands. To do so would be to cast a slur on their good name. He had no doubt that, if it became generally known that they had been first appointed agents for the whole term of the present company, and that the agency had been withdrawn from them before the expiry of that term, their credit would suffer. He (Mr. G.) was strongly in favour of a special agency, but did not think that, in face of the resolution just read, such should be established till the end of the current three years. The end would be met by passing a resolution to establish a separate agency at the end of that term. He would propose, therefore—

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the interests of this company would be better looked after by a separate agency in London, and that measures be taken to establish such on the 1st January, 1869."

Mr. MICHIE seconded the amendment. He did not think the company would gain in public estimation by such a change in policy as was proposed—if the shareholders were found unanimously voting one way at one time, and another way at another time, without any ostensible change in the circumstances. With regard to Mr. Maitland's remark that they were not bound by the previous resolution, it might be true legally; but he (Mr. Michie) apprehended that the same law applied to companies as to private individuals. Neither could honourably ignore an engagement. It might have been foolish to pass such a resolution, but, having done so, they were bound to abide by it. And, after all, the matter seemed of small importance, as the company had only six months longer to run after the date proposed for the change.

Mr. MACCALL remarked that one argument used by Mr. Maitland in favour of the change had been a saving of expense; a private office would cost less than the present system. But he (the speaker) thought the expenses attending the change would counterbalance any saving during the current six months.

Mr. HOGG thought the object of Mr. Maitland's resolution had been actually accomplished, as an expression of opinion in favour of a separate agency had been obtained. They had seen the growth of opinion, from the one dissentient shareholder on the previous occasion, till it became general. A decided opinion had also been elicited from at least one director (Mr. Michie) that the present system should not be continued. Mr. Maitland's resolution was, in fact, accomplished within six months.

Mr. MAITLAND agreed that his object had been to a certain extent accomplished. But he still thought the present directors should establish a separate agency. If they did not, if they waited for the new directors to act, they would not have the office in operation till well on in the first year of the new company. And he thought it was very desirable that it should be in working order at the outset of their operation. Referring to Mr. Maccall's remarks, he (the speaker) certainly had used the argument that a saving in expense would be effected; but he had used it with reference to a term of years, not merely to six months. Mr. Michie had said the circumstances were not changed from the time when the former resolution was passed. He thought they had very materially altered. If the changes were not mentioned they were understood.

The CHAIRMAN had no doubt the present directors would act as a provisional committee, in making arrangements for the establishment of a separate agency.

Mr. MAITLAND: Am I to understand that the directors pledge themselves to act as a provisional committee to establish the new office?

Mr. HOGG thought if they did so it was not worth while to make the change for the sake of six months; but it was very desirable the agency should be conducted separately in future.

Mr. TATE endorsed Mr. Hogg's remark. As the unfortunate one who had stood alone on a former occasion, he was very well content to see the growth of the opinion he had then maintained. He thought there was no dissent from it now, but he certainly attached weight to that resolution.

A paragraph stipulating that the directors should act as a provisional committee for the establishment of the new office was added to Mr. Groom's amendment, which was put to the meeting in the following form, and carried unanimously, Mr. Maitland withdrawing his resolution:—

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the interests of the company would be better served by the establishment of a special agency in London, and that the directors should be empowered to make the necessary arrangements for the establishment of such special agency for the new term 1869-72; the agency for the present term being left as heretofore in Messrs. Ashton and Co.'s hands."

FIRE AT HONG KONG.

(From the Daily Press of Nov. 29th.)

A conflagration, which has proved far more extensive even than the great fire which occurred about this time last year, broke out on Thursday night about seven o'clock in a godown, partly on the Praya, and partly in a private lane leading up to the Queen's-road, adjoining the premises of Messrs. Schellhass and Co. The godown was, we believe, in the occupation of Messrs. Morgan, Lambert, and Co., and was filled with cotton. As soon as the cotton was thoroughly on fire the flames caught the verandahs of Messrs. Schellhass's house, which, being entirely of wood, were immediately in a blaze. By this time the fire had made itself known all over the town, and what few engines there are in readiness for such emergencies gradually collected. Bodies of police, soldiers, and sailors were marched down to the scene of the fire, and the Governor, the Commodore, Colonel Burne, and large numbers of military and naval officers were soon on the ground; but it was generally noticed that, as on the occasion of the other great fire, there was a total want of organisation and method. Everyone was ready and willing to work, but their efforts were wasted for want of concentration. Good service was done, however, by the P. and O. steam fire-engine, owing to which the fire was prevented from extending eastward. The premises of Messrs. John Burd and Co., which immediately adjoined the fire, were thus saved. The verandah was partly burned, but was pulled down in time.

By the time that Schellhass and Co.'s house was thoroughly in flames the fire crept round at the back and set on fire a large godown full of saltpetre, which emitted volumes of intensely white flame and lit up the whole harbour and western part of the town. Next door but one to the godown which first took fire was one belonging to Messrs. Gibb, Livingston, and Co., but, although completely embraced by the fire, it strangely enough escaped. As the fire was creeping on the westward the engineers blew up some Chinese houses on the Praya between the fire and the harbour-master's office, with the view of stopping the progress of the flames. Instead of having this effect, however, the explosion merely set the town alight in a new place. In a few minutes the houses adjoining those blown up were in flames, and then, having fairly seized on the thickly built Chinese houses, constructed chiefly of wood, they soon asserted a mastery over the whole district between the Queen's-road and the Praya, from Cross-roads to the harbour-master's office. The premises of Messrs. Blackhead, and Messrs. Phillips, Moore and Co. were saved by great efforts. Jervois-street has, however, been altogether swept away, together with part of Bonham-strand. The fire did not cross the Queen's-road itself, except to the extent of burning a few verandahs, which were extinguished. By pulling down and blowing up houses to the westward, the fire was prevented from spreading further down the Queen's-road than two or three hundred yards, but is still continuing its progress along Bonham-strand.

The military authorities continued to blow up houses all night, and the heavy explosions resounded at intervals above the roar of the fire and the crowds. Several accidents have taken place, though we can give but few particulars of them just yet. Some men of the 73rd were hurt, and there has been some loss of life amongst the Chinese, though this can hardly be estimated correctly at present.

November 30.

The fire, which is even yet smouldering and burning among the most densely populated portion of the city, is one that will be long remembered in the annals of Hong Kong, both on account of the vast amount of property destroyed, and the exposure which was so unhappily displayed of the total inability and absence of any one responsible person to take the lead, and direct the meritorious efforts of those who were ready and willing to work for the salvation of life and property. On all sides but one voice is heard, and that is universal condemnation of the total disorganisation which prevailed, and it is the common opinion that had such an individual been in existence, we should not be called upon to chronicle the melancholy loss of life and terrible destruction of property which occurred here on Thursday night. The whole system from the commencement was one grand and disgraceful mistake. The naval authorities squabbled with the military and snubbed the police, who, in turn, wanted to direct the energy of private individuals, and were told to go to —— for their pains. The Surveyor-General was placed under arrest by a sentry, and the Governor had some of the hose played on him. A Chinaman was allowed to stand on the roof of a house while it was blown up, and then the explosion caused the fire to break out in a fresh place. The police were nowhere, the soldiers and sailors ditto. The men were willing enough to work, but what were they to do when squabbling was going on among their officers, and contrary orders were given on every hand. It is the prevailing opinion, and there is no reason to doubt its soundness, that had some half-a-dozen houses been judiciously blown up at the commencement, the conflagration would have been stayed, or confined at all events to very narrow limits; but what could be expected, when one of the horse patrols had to ride three times backwards and forwards between the fire and one of the military magazines, before an ounce of powder could be obtained, and eventually the needful supply had to be brought on shore from the Ocean?

The fire originated in a godown divided by a narrow lane from Messrs. Schellhass and Co.'s premises, and facing the Praya one of a block of nine similar buildings extending to the back of Messrs. Blackhead and Co.'s premises in Queen's-road. In this godown cotton had been landed during the day, and doubtless the coolies had been smoking or using open lights according to their prevailing custom, but at all events, shortly after seven o'clock on Thursday evening flames burst from this building, and immediately communicated with the large wooden verandah on the first floor of Messrs. Schellhass and Co.'s house, which was immediately in a blaze. The venetian shutters then caught, and in a short time the whole house was on fire. Some of the most valuable property was saved, but most of the furniture, &c., was totally destroyed. At this time there was a light air from about E.N.E., but not sufficient to fan the flame to any extent. Immediately on the alarm being given, the water-police engines arrived on the spot, but although well handled their power was totally inadequate to extinguish the flames, and they could only attempt to arrest their further progress. Shortly afterwards engines (such as they are) began to arrive from all quarters; from the barracks, from the naval yard, from the other police stations, and from private houses, the P. and O. Company's, and Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co.'s steam engines all came to the spot, accompanied by bodies of police, seamen, soldiers, marines, and private fire-men, and commenced to play upon the fire; then arose a scene of indescribable confusion, everbody working on his own hook. The steamers Kiu Kiang and Fung Shuey, which were lying alongside the Canton Wharf, finding it rather hot work, hauled off, and made fast to buoys outside; but long before this the alarm had spread among the Chinese inhabitants in the neighbourhood, and a universal stampede took place. Coolies armed with short swords rushed about, carrying merchandise of all descriptions, which was either placed in boats which crowded to the Praya, or taken to houses deemed to be beyond the reach of the fire; and the waste ground between the Canton wharf and the harbour-master's office was crowded with spectators. At this time had some of the Chinese houses to the westward of Cunningham's godowns been blown down the fire would have been stayed. As it was, the verandahs of Messrs. John Burd and Co.'s house, next door to the eastward of Schellass's, began to take fire, but were cut away, and through the skilful manipulation of some of the hose (we believe one belonging to the P. and O. Co.'s fire engine and the other to the water-police), the fire was prevented from extending to the eastward, but to the westward the three godowns nearest the Praya, and the premises known as Cunningham's property, were in a blaze. Messrs. Gibb's large godown fronting on the Praya, standing between these and a range of Chinese houses extending westward to the harbour-master's office, and embracing the premises of Messrs. Freerks, Rodatz and Co., alone seemed formed to resist the fury of the fire, and on this the engines on the Praya played continually, and succeeded in diverting the fire from the front towards Queen's-road. About this time, and not before, the happy thought struck some one that it would be advisable, in order to stop the conflagration, to blow up some of the Chinese houses to the westward, and preparations were made accordingly. A mounted messenger was despatched to the military magazine for the necessary supply of powder, and it is reported that he had to ride three times backwards and forwards, a distance of nearly three miles, before the officer could be found who had charge of the key of the magazine. In the meantime the necessary supply was brought from H.M.S. Ocean, and the train was laid, but through some mismanagement or inadvertance, instead of having the desired end, this measure only brought the fire further westward, and it broke out in a fresh place in Bonham-strand. Want of water on the verge of the Praya cannot be alleged as an excuse. An unfortunate Chinaman had been seen standing on the top of these houses when the explosion took place, but he was not visible afterwards. In the meantime, the fire to the eastward was blazing up grandly. One of the godowns contained a large quantity of salt-petre, oil, &c., and this, combined with the cotton, threw up a splendid glare, lighting the upper part of the town and the Peak so that at times the flagstaff, 1,800 ft. above the level, was actually visible, and this blaze continued at intervals for hours. The fire was prevented from catching either of the other six godowns opposite the premises of Messrs. Arnhold, Karberg and Co., and crept round towards Messrs. Blackhead and Co.'s large stores facing Queen's-road. Making a jump of about twenty yards, the fire skirted the back of Gibb's godown, on which the hoses from the mains in Queen's-road were playing without intermission, and took some Chinese houses facing on Queen's road. Blackhead's premises were then in the utmost danger; the large wooden verandahs were dragged down and the hoses kept playing on the western side of the house. Having once caught these old Chinese houses, composed in a great measure of wood, the fire ran down the north side of the Cross-roads with the utmost rapidity and crossed over to the south side, embracing the angle of Queen's-road. Here the blue-jackets were in full force and some good work was done. Several houses were pulled down and some blown up, and the fire was prevented from extending more than about 200 yards, and diverted to Jervois-street, so that in a short time that triangular piece of ground embracing Jervois-street and Bonham-strand, and crossed by Morrison and Cleverly-streets from Queen's-road to the harbour-master's office, was, with the exception of the houses in Queen's-road, nearly all embraced by the conflagration, and the fire had certainly got the upper hand. At one time it crossed over to the south side of Queen's-road, and some of the verandahs were in a blaze, but were fortunately extinguished before any amount of damage was done. Many houses were blown up during the night, and explosions could be heard at intervals, but, as previously stated, everyone went on his own hook and did as he liked. The want of organisation was so visible that everyone remarked it. Having got hold of this densely-packed part of the town, stored too with valuable merchandise, and embracing some of the wealthiest Chinese hongs in the city, the fire continued to blaze away until after daylight, but was gradually got under, and although the ruins are still smouldering, there is no immediate danger of another outbreak.

It is, of course, impossible as yet to come to the slightest estimate of the damage done, but the loss must be very great, and much of the Chinese property was uninsured, which will bring further distress on this already sufficiently unfortunate colony. A very melancholy accident has happened. The boatswain of H.M.S. Perseus died in consequence of injuries sustained at the fire; two men from the Ocean are reported "missing," as are several Chinese, and some men of the 73rd Regiment have been injured, but the actual loss of life has yet not been ascertained. Half the inhabitants of Hong Kong were up all night watching the progress of the fire, and H. E. the Governor, Commodore Jones, Colonel Burne, the commanders of the men-of-war in harbour, and other officers, were also present. At one period, in the shifting of a hose, it is said that his Excellency received a full dose direct from the nozzle, which compelled him to retire for a time and change his apparel. But, above all, the conduct of certain Europeans must be made public. Fortunately for themselves, their names are unknown. They entered the shops of the terrified storekeepers, &c., who were endeavouring to save their property by removal, or standing gazing in fear and trembling at the approach of the conflagration near their own dwellings; these disgraces to humanity entered the shops, kicked and cuffed the unfortunate Chinese about, and helped themselves to whatever they liked. A naval officer and two other "gentlemen" were walking up Gough-street steps, and on their way the trio amused themselves with shoving down every unfortunate Chinaman they met carrying a bundle, and eventually the officer snatched a lamp from one man, who at the head of his property was piloting a gang of coolies, and when he asked for his lamp back the gallant follower of Nelson knocked him down. Pretty sport for "an officer and a gentleman." Some of the blue-jackets and marines made a dive into Messrs. Blackhead's store, for the ostensible purpose of getting a coil of rope to pull down sundry houses, but made a slight mistake and were seen to emerge with sundry armfuls of bottles, the contents of which were quickly stowed away. Altogether there was far too much "grog" knocking about, and some civilians, apparently imitating the soldiers and sailors, appeared to make the fire an excuse for getting "glorious." The Hong Kong thieves were in full force, and looting was going on to an enormous extent, but numbers were captured by the police, carrying off all sorts of strange articles, and very often the police-constables made a mistake and arrested an unfortunate man who was trying to save his own or his employer's property. Many Chinese, seeing respectable Europeans whom they knew, begged for their protection or escort for their property to a place of safety.

This morning a party of European prisoners are employed in pulling down the tottering walls, some of which are in a dangerous condition, and constables are stationed at the street corners to prevent people from passing through the ruins.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

Public attention has been almost entirely absorbed by the great fire here, which raged from 7 P.M. of 28th to 5 A.M. of 29th. It commenced in a European godown on the sea front, about two houses westward of Gilman's Bazaar, and, owing to a want of proper organisation of the abundant restrictive means at control, it spread westward, destroying from 200 to 400 of the better class of China houses. A large quantity of Indian cotton especially, and other merchandise, was destroyed in the European house, and few European godowns burnt; but Messrs. John Burd and Co., and Gibb, Livingstone and Co., escaped almost miraculously, and the contents of their warehouses would have largely swelled the loss already heavy. The Chinese had time to run out their goods, and have lost comparatively little in the way of merchandise, but are of course very much unsettled, and it will take them some time to resume business, and we fear will run us too close to China New Year for any extensive transactions before the spring. The losses by local and home insurance offices is estimated at about $400,000, and there may be about as much more in house property and merchandise uninsured.

The following is from the Overland Trade Report:—

"There is reason to hope that the cotton combination at Canton, to which readers of this Report will have seen so many allusions lately, is in a fair way to be crushed, if, indeed, it may not be considered as already destroyed. As soon as the designs of the Canton men who framed the resolutions of the cotton guild became known, the Hong Kong Government addressed through the Consul at Canton a strong remonstrance to the Viceroy, the result of which promises to be highly gratifying. The Viceroy communicated to the Consul his promise to impose an absolute prohibition on the measures contemplated by the guild. The guild had endeavoured to establish a system of fines to be imposed upon cotton dealers who should violate its commands by buying cotton or cotton yarn in Hong Kong, but as they are threatened with the terrific consequences of a Chinese potentate's displeasure if they attempt to carry out this idea, it may probably be regarded as a failure. The promised proclamation, indeed, has not yet been issued, and without it the guild merchants would naturally suppose that the Viceroy's despatch to the Consul was all gas, but there is no reason to believe that the Provincial Government has any intention in this case of evading a promise voluntarily made.

"The newest trouble in Hong Kong at present is the Praya difficulty. This matter has assumed a new phase. To make this understood it may perhaps be necessary to recapitulate the facts of the case. The Praya having been destroyed by the late typhoon, the local Government contends that the marine lot-holders are bound to pay a 'fair and reasonable proportion' towards the expense of repairs. There is certainly a clause in the leases which binds the lot-holders to pay towards the repair of something, but they maintain that this clause has reference to private roads, drains, &c., within their property, and not to the Praya at all. The Praya was in the first instance constructed by the lot-holders and handed over to the Government as part of the price of their lots; but being so handed over, they argue, became entirely chargeable for repairs on the public. The Attorney-General was understood to give an opinion that the lot-holders were legally responsible under the leases, but they, in reliance on their conviction that no such responsibility had ever been intended, and was inequitable in principle, broke up a conference on the subject with the Colonial Secretary, to which they had been invited by the Government, and handed in a letter, explicitly refusing to entertain the idea of contributing. The Government took umbrage at this, and after the lapse of a week or ten days, during which the lot-holders remained in the same attitude, wrote a circular letter stating that the Attorney-General was instructed to institute proceedings in the least vexatious manner possible, for the purpose of obtaining from the Supreme Court an enunciation of the law. There the matter rests just now. The Government letter has been considered by the lot-holders as 'insulting.' The quarrel is somewhat bitter and embarrassing, and it is difficult to see where it will end. Public opinion is decidedly in favour of the lot-holders, so far as the substantial merits of the case are concerned."

Mr. D. R. Crawford has been prosecuted for endorsing a Bill of Exchange without the paper stamp and fined $25.

Steamers will leave Hong Kong for Yokohama and San Francisco, as follows:—

Great Republic, Captain Doane, on or about January 14th, 1868; China, Captain Smith, on or about February 24th 1868; Colorado, on or about March 16th, 1868.

The Costa Rica will leave Shanghai two days later, to connect with these steamers at Yokohama.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—The import market has been almost at a standstill. Some few sales of Grey Shirtings have been made at previous rates. In Cotton Yarn a considerable decline has taken place, owing to larger arrivals from China, and even at the reduction it has been difficult to place any count 28s. to 32s. Camlets: For good assortments there has been some little inquiry, and rates have remained firm. Of White Shirtings sales could only be effected at a reduction on quoted rates. Velvets have been rather more inquired for. Fancy goods have been in most cases unsaleable, except for especial colours or certain assortments. In Metals there has been a small inquiry for Nail Rod Iron at unremunerative rates.

SHANGHAI.—Cotton Goods: There has been for the most part a dragging business during the period under review. Grey Shirtings, 8¼lbs. weight, exhibit a decline of 5 candareens per piece as compared with those ruling last mail; the demand has latterly been sluggish, in consequence of the approaching closing of the Northern ports. For White Shirtings there has been a fair demand, their low values having attracted the attention of buyers. T-Cloths have met with only a small inquiry, and to effect sales lower prices have in some instances been submitted to. Fancy Goods have been most difficult to move, at even the low rates ruling. Woollens: Spanish Stripes have been taken to a fair extent at very low prices. For Medium and Habit Cloths the inquiry has been of the faintest description. Camlets of SS make have been in good demand at the low marginal quotations. Long Ells, both Scarlet and Assorted colours, have been dull of sale. Lastings have not been asked for. Plain and Figured Orleans have further declined in value. Metals: Flat and Round Nail Rod Iron and Hoop Iron have advanced 20 to 40 candareens per picul, and business has been restricted by the almost total absence of stocks. Lead has been taken to a moderate extent for Chinese Government requirements. Tin Plates and Steel have continued in demand at higher figures.

HANKOW.—The demand for manufactured goods has been again small, but the prices have been fairly supported, and in some instance show an advance on last mail's quotations. Grey Shirtings have been in but limited inquiry, but higher prices have latterly been established; say tls. 2.3.8. to 2.4.2 per piece for 7 lbs., and tls. 2.6.2. to 2.5.5. for 8¼ to 8½ lbs. weight. White Shirtings have met with but little favour. T-Cloths have met with a small demand, but the improvement noticed in last report has been since lost. Fancy Cottons have found buyers, and Dyed Damasks and Brocades of suitable assortments, being scarce, are rather firmer. Camlets have continued in demand at last values. Lastings have only been saleable in small lots. Long Ells have met with little attention, and a reduction of 1 mace per piece has been established in the value of HH. goods. Figured Orleans have been neglected and prices have a weakening tendency. Metals, Lead, and Quicksilver, are unchanged in value, and for the latter there is still some inquiry.

NINGPO.—The imports have included 25 bales of Grey Shirtings, 8 bales American Drills, and 127 bales other piece goods. Also 2,527 slabs of Block Tin, which is in demand at quotations. Quotations are:—Shirtings, Grey, 5½ catty $2.80, 6½ catty $3.20, 7½ catty $4.60. White Spot, $3.90. Dyed Spot, $3.60. White Brocades, $4.10. Dyed Brocades, $4.50. American Drills, 40 yards, $5.10 to 5.60. English Drills, 30 yards, $4.10. Camlets, $18. Long Ells, scarlet, $19 to 19.50, assorted, $9 to 9.50. Spanish Stripes, Lustres, $8. Lead, 7.20. Tin, Block, $25.80; Plates, $9. Iron, Nail Rod, $3.80.

HONG HONG.—Grey Shirtings: Have received only a very limited amount of attention and the majority of the goods sold have been at $3.15, which may be considered the best price for average quality goods. Sales reported embrace 6,000 pieces in all, say 500 pieces 7lbs. at $2.40 and 5,550 pieces 8¼ lbs. at $3.15 to 3.20. White Shirtings: Have been entirely neglected, and the only transaction reported is a parcel of 400 pieces common 56 reed at $2.35 to 2.55. T-Cloths: A decline in the last ruling rates for these goods must be reported, but notwithstanding the concessions made by holders meeting the market, only a small business has been done and very small portion of which has been sales to arrive, dealers having had an opportunity of supplying their wants to a limited extent at public auction. Transactions embrace 13,755 pieces, say 700 pieces, 6 lbs., at $2.25; 9,875 pieces, 7 lbs., at $2.70 to 2.90; and 3,180 pieces, 8 lbs., at $3.45 to 3.50. About 4,000 pieces damaged have been disposed of by auction. Fancy Cottons: The only business during the fortnight comprises 240 pieces Eyed Spots, at $4.25; 240 pieces Dyed Brocades, at $4.40; and 600 pieces Turkey Red, at $2.95 to 3.10. Drills: A sale of 1,100 pieces English is reported at $2.40. Woollens of all descriptions have shared in the general dulness prevailing, and attracted scarcely any attention; 900 pieces Long Ells and 72 pieces Medium Cloth have been placed at auction. Other transactions comprise 48 pieces Medium Cloths at 80 cents to $1.40 per yard; 100 pieces Spanish Stripes, at 87 cents; 410 pieces Camlet, at $17 to 17.30; 220 pieces Lastings, at $16 to 18; and 200 pieces Long Ells, at $9.20. Cotton Yarn: Affected by the combination of the cotton guild and yarn merchants, this article has been without the least inquiry throughout the fortnight, and the only transaction is a lot of 130 bales sea damaged placed at auction, and which sold heavily. Metals have been in moderate demand, but there is no special feature to report. Sales include 2,200 piculs Nail Rod Iron, at $3.30; 2,000 piculs Bar, at $3.05; 1,200 piculs Hoop, at $3.75 to 3.95; and 700 boxes Tin Plates at $6.95 to 7.00.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—There is no new feature to report in the business done during the fortnight. The China, from San Francisco, having brought unfavourable news of the home markets, tended to slacken business for the moment, but, large arrivals from the country having come to hand in the meantime, there is now a plentiful supply on offer, and musters are brought forward more freely; consequently, business has been again resumed, causing settlements to reach about 4,000 piculs. Good Common and Medium leaf has been purchased at much lower rates, but the higher grades do not show any decline on former prices. Stocks were heavy, being estimated at about 7,500 piculs. Quotations are:—Common to Good, $18 to 23 per picul; Medium, $24 to 26 do.; Good to Fine, $28 to 30 do.; Fine and Finest, $31 to 36 do.; Choice, $38 to 40 do.

SHANGHAI.—Black Teas: The continuing decrease in supplies has kept the market very firm, and more than three-fourths of the moderate settlements have been by one firm. There is no change to note in prices, which are still twopence for Oopacks and one penny for Oonams above the equivalent of last London quotations. The stock is being gradually absorbed, and there is no reason to expect any decline in prices. Recent arrivals have been nearly all common Oonams, of which the stock now chiefly consists. Settlements have been as follows:—3,100 chests common Oopack and Ningchow, at tls. 19 to 21; 1,200 chests common Oonam, at tls. 16.5 to 18.5. Reshipments, 1,800 chests. Stock, 53,000 chests. Green Teas: The arrival of the American mail, via San Francisco, on the 14th of November, caused a momentary depression in the market, but buyers soon recovered from the effects of the advices received, and settlements proceeded on the former scale at fully former prices. Second and third crop Teenkais and Moyunes of inferior quality and proportion have been bought at four and five taels over what was paid for the first crops six weeks previously. This activity is partly to be attributed to a belief that the whole crop will be less than last year's; this cannot yet be predicted with any certainty, but there is no doubt that the demand will stimulate growers to pack all the leaf they can collect. The stock comprises very little that can be called even by comparison fine tea. About one-fifth of the settlements have been for the English market. The fortnight's settlements comprise:—19,000 half-chests, fair to fine Moyune, at Tls. 36.0.0 to 43.0.0; 9,500 half-chests, common to fair Fychow, at Tls. 28,0.0 to 34.7.5; 6,700 half-chests, fair, to fine Teenkais, at Tls. 36.0 0 to 43.5.0; 4,900 half-chests, common to fair Pingsueys, at Tls. 28.0.0 to 36.0.0; 1,500 half-chests, common Shanghai packed, at Tls. 27.0.0. Re-shipments, 7,000 ½ chests. Stock, 33,400 ½-chests Fychow, Tienkai and Moyune, 4,700 Pingsuey, and 2,500 Shanghai packed, in all, 40,600 packages.

HANKOW.—Advices dated 19th November state that 3,400 chests black tea had been settled during the fortnight, and 3,500 chests sent forward to Shanghai on native account. The prices paid were about the same as last mail, the tendency of the market being in favour of sellers. There were only 700 chests in stock, and future receipts will be very trifling. Quotations:—Oopacks, common to fair, tls. 13.2.5 to 15.5; Oonams, common, tls. 11.2.5 to 12.

KIUKIANG.—Black Teas: 3,500 packages Ningchow and Hohow had arrived during the fortnight, all being at once sent on to Shanghai. Green Teas: The arrivals during the fortnight comprised 32,500 half-chests. The teamen were very firm early in the fortnight, but towards the close of business seemed more ready to meet buyers. Some 10,000 packages remained in stock, not more than 40,000 more being expected for the season.

FOOCHOW.—Congous: There has been a moderate business during the fortnight. No change is reported in prices, though Teas with an approach to any flavour (of which very few now remain) may be called worse value. Teas still lay down over latest London quotations' Oolong: The news from America having kept buyers back, only one small parcel has been settled, and the teamen will now have to submit to lower prices. Congou: Settlements reported are 9,868 chests, 13,246 half-chests and 618 boxes, at Taels 4.5 to 18.5; say 2,757 chests and 2,762 half-chests at Taels 4.5 to 12.5 for Dust and Broken Leaf; 4,289 chests, 5,395 half-chests, and 148 boxes, at Taels 12 to 15 for Common to good Common; and 2,822 chests, 5,082 half-chests, and 470 boxes at Taels, 16 to 18.5 for Flavoury to good flavoury. Souchong: On fine (1st crop), 306 chests at Taels 30 Common to fair, 388 chests at Taels 16.5 to 19.5. Pekoe: Fair mixed leaf, 100 chests at Taels 26.5. Oolong: Good cargo to superior, 1,136 half-chests at Taels 21 to 24. Scented: Fair, 270 boxes at Taels 21.

CANTON.—A limited business has been transacted during the fortnight, and prices may be quoted unchanged. Stocks of Country Congous are slightly increasing, while stocks of Canton leaf are rapidly decreasing. Country Congous: About 1,000 packages have arrived, and the only settlement since the last advices has been part of a chop, about 300 half-chests, at Tls. 22, for repacking purposes. The present stock is about 8,000 packages or 16 chops, for which the teamen continue extremely firm. Country Greens: There is no change whatever to notice in these kinds. Canton-made-Teas: About 1,500 boxes district Congou have been taken at from 21 to 28 Taels; all available leaf for this class of Tea is now finding its way to Macao, where prices continue to advance. Of Scented Orange Pekoe some 4,000 boxes have been placed, and of Scented Caper 3,000 boxes; the present stock of the former is estimated at 16,000 boxes, and of the latter about 14,900 boxes. Gunpowders have attracted rather more attention then usual, about 3,500 boxes having been booked during the fortnight, with a stock remaining at market of about 16,000 boxes.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—The arrivals this fortnight have been considerably in excess of the settlements, and the gradual increase of the stock, which is estimated at from 1,200 to 1,500 piculs against 500 last year same date, is a favourable feature in the position of the market. The news received by the European mails of 11th and 10th September and the Pacific mail of October have rendered buyers in general very diffident, and purchases on a moderate scale have been effected at reductions of $10 to 30 for Mybash and Koshiu on last quotations. Holders of Oshiu remain firm. The settlements of the fortnight consist of 220 piculs of Hank Silks, 40 of Koshiu, and 40 of Oshiu and other Silks, say in all 300 piculs. Total settlements since the beginning of the season amount to about 3,500 bales, against 5,900 in 1866-7, and 5,600 in 1865-6 same period. The quotations are:—Mybash and Sinchu, Extra, $820 to 850; Best, $780 to 810; Medium, $720 to 760; Inferior, $650 to 710. Oshiu, Extra, $810 to 830; Best, $660 to 800; Medium, 700 to 750; Inferior, $620 to 670.

SHANGHAI.—But little alteration has to be reported in the silk market since last report, and quotations remain as before. Arrivals from the country on native account are mostly composed of inferior classes, and if the paucity of good silk is any criterion of a short supply, the indication of such scarcity is now very marked. Settlements of China silk for the fortnight 1,900 bales.

CANTON.—Moderate settlements have continued during the fortnight; the sixth crop has arrived at market and a small supplementary crop may yet be expected, but stocks of the finer classes are all at market, and the season may virtually be said to be drawing to a close; the seventh crop being composed chiefly of the coarser kinds.

The liabilities are stated at £91,219, of which £83.909 are in respect of the late firm of J. B. Cumming and Co., who stopped payment in September, 1866. This was the first sitting, but no assignee was chosen. The next sitting was appointed for the 21st of February.

THE CIVIL SERVICE FOR CHINA AND JAPAN.

[To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.]

SIR,—The system which is followed in the selection of persons destined for the Civil Service in China and Japan is confessedly of the greatest importance. The acquirement of the language is acknowledged to be a work of the most serious difficulty, requiring not only aptitude but extreme perseverance, and that for a lengthened period. To perform their duties efficiently, our consuls and their assistants, the interpreters, and others ought all to master the subject; for, without the power of both speaking and writing the native languages, how can the interests of British subjects in those countries be attended to properly? Both the Chinese and the Japanese pride themselves upon the beauties and refinements of their languages, and cannot but look with contempt upon those who, as agents of the Imperial British Government, are so much below their own scholars in attainments, and are always dependent upon native help in the transaction of business.

And this will be so as long as the Civil Service Commissioners—instigated by the Foreign-office—entirely set aside the consideration of any acquirement which an enterprising candidate may possess in either of those languages. The excuse for this will be that there is no one to teach Chinese, and no one to examine those who may possess this knowledge. But the former of these pleas is groundless, for the Council of King's College, on the urgent recommendation of Sir George Staunton, appointed a Professor of Chinese twenty years ago, and has supported that Chair ever since. And the Council of University College had a similar professor for some years, until his death, when it was felt to be useless to appoint another, as no pupils and no encouragement were forthcoming; and in that institution is buried a most valuable library of Chinese literature, utterly useless, because never wanted. As for the want of an examiner, why could not the employes of the Government—some of whom are always on leave in this country—be requested to prepare examination papers for candidates? There is no reason on the side of the Commissioners in neglecting this important item of their requirements for the Civil Service in China. Plain handwriting, proper spelling, the first four rules of arithmetic, with a smattering of French and Latin displayed in making translations, are very well to begin with; but the China service requires a knowledge of Chinese, just as much as the India service requires a knowledge of Sanscrit; and if we are to avoid complications and misunderstandings with these peoples we cannot dispense with such knowledge. An Englishman can, of course, learn Chinese as well as a Chinaman if he only begin betimes and have sufficient perseverance; and if, instead of discountenancing the study of Chinese, the Civil Service Commissioners were to require it as a supplementary subject of examination—with which might be joined international law and law procedure for consular courts—to be passed six months or a year after the ordinary or preliminary examination, the most beneficial results must soon become apparent. The youth would find when he arrived at his post that he had a considerable knowledge of his subject, and that it was not that dry and difficult study which he imagined. The Chinese and the Japanese have not thought it an unnecessary arrangement to found imperial colleges for the express purpose of studying the languages and sciences of Europe under European professors, and if we are to keep pace with these semi-civilised nations we ought to exact from our agents in the East, before their appointment, some satisfactory knowledge of these languages.

The unreasonableness of the present system has been impressed upon my mind by a recent case in which a young man, who had for eighteen months devoted himself diligently to the study of Chinese, and according to the judgment of his teacher had done so with great success, had been debarred from an appointment because he was not allowed to display his acquirements, for the Civil Service Commissioners considered them of no value whatever. I have deemed the subject worthy of an appeal to your powerful agency, and I shall be pleased if you think these remarks suitable for insertion in your admirable paper.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

CHINA CLAY IN PIECE GOODS.

In our issue of December 28 we briefly noticed the trial of Mody v. Gregson for damage to shirtings in consequence of containing deleterious matter. The opinions of Baron Bramwell are so very decided that we give them in full:—

The learned Judge, in summing up, said he quite agreed that this was an important case. The amount at stake was very considerable, and it affected the character of the defendant, who was charged with what he hoped would always be considered a most improper practice, namely, with adding matter to his goods in order to increase the weight, so that the customer might pay for a weight which he really did not receive, the customer supposing that he was receiving 7lb. of the article when one-seventh was useless material. Under the circumstances, he thought an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences could not be maintained; but he was pretty sure that an indictment for conspiracy could be, if it could be proved that the manufacturer of the goods adulterated the goods in the way imputed in the case, and then employed somebody privy to it to sell them to another party who had no knowledge in the matter. Those persons would find themselves in a very unfavourable position if they found themselves indicted for a conspiracy to defraud. The case was also a very important one, so far as the honour of the British manufacturer and merchant was concerned, and, therefore, he had been sorry to have heard references to the "poor" manufacturer during the progress of the case. However, counsel must never be supposed to be speaking their own opinions; they were only doing that which was their duty to do, namely, advocating the cause of their client, and putting forward such topics as might reasonably be supposed to serve him, leaving them to be judged of by those who had to express an opinion upon the matter. But he could not for his own part understand how it could be tolerated that any man could commit such a fraud as that imputed in this case, and suppose that a man had a right to say "I profess to sell you 7lb. weight of cotton together with such starch as is necessary to use for the purpose of manufacture, and in the 7lb. there is 1lb. of useless clay, which I have only put in in order that I may weigh it, and get a price from you which I would not otherwise have got." Such a thing as that was a gross fraud, and in his opinion, if committed by one man in collusion with another both would have committed a criminal offence; and he trusted the time would never come when it would be supposed to be a lawful proceeding on the part of any British or foreign tradesman. The jury might take the law from him, and it would no doubt commend itself to their good sense—that if he bought a thing by sample, so far as the sample enabled him to judge, he must be content if the thing corresponded with the sample; but there was in point of law superadded to that the duty that the article when sold by the manufacturer should be of merchantable quality, and if the sample did not enable one to say whether it were so or not, and it turned out not to be so, then you were entitled to say, "Though the goods correspond with the sample you showed me, they are deficient in that which I am entitled to demand, namely, merchantableness, and I have a right of action against you." That being the case the jury had to consider in this case whether the goods were merchantable when they were sold to the plaintiff. "Merchantable" meant not merely that if it had been thought fit to put the goods to what might be called the consumer's use, it could have been done so at the time, but also that they should be fit to encounter those ordinary circumstances which befel such articles. It would not do for a man to say he sold some wine, which would have been good enough if bought in a week after the sale, but which would have spoiled if kept a month. That would not be a merchantable article, supposing the defect was attributable to the mode in which it was manufactured. So here, if the man bought goods which he might either cut up into shirts at home in England, or export to a hot climate, and which, according to the custom of the trade, he might keep there, the article was not merchantable unless it was capable of undergoing all those vicissitudes; and if, from the vice of its manufacture, it would not do so, it was not a merchantable article. So if these goods had been cut up and turned into clothing in England at the very moment when they were bought, they might never have rotted, and the plaintiff's damage might have been trifling indeed, but he would still be entitled to say it was not a merchantable article when sold. The first question the jury had to consider was whether this was a merchantable article. But was it a question at all? Had the jury any doubt that these goods when they were sold contained 14½ per cent. of China clay? It was positively sworn to by three gentlemen of undoubted competence. The defendant no doubt, upon being called, had said, "I am in the habit of putting in such a quantity of China clay as would have given instead of 13½oz. about 2½oz. in 112." He then said it was his habit and practice. If so, these pieces of grey shirting must have been an exceptional lot. The defendant had not ventured to say that the witnesses called on the part of the plaintiff were mistaken in their analysis, but he said his habit and practice was to pursue the course he had described in the composition of his size; but supposing that no misfortune had happened in the admixture of the ingredients, then it was a question for the jury whether they believed the evidence of the scientific witnesses called for the plaintiff in preference to the defendant's own account. If about one-seventh in weight of the cloth was, what by Mr. Gregson's own account would be worthless rubbish, added to it, was it a merchantable article? If, according to the defendant's own account, 2½ ounces would be rubbish and would be added to the weight of the cloth, and only "improved" it by making it according to the evidence of Mr. Hadfield, "cheaper," then he (the learned baron) would recommend that the sellers of this cloth should say to their customers, "Here is so much cloth, and here is so much clay, and together they come to 7lb." The question was, after all, was this a merchantable cloth?" If it was, then the verdict must be for the defendants; if not, then it should be for the plaintiff. It had been observed that, if these goods were kept by the plaintiffs in Calcutta on account of its being a falling market, and they fetched a less price when they were sold than they would have done if sold originally, then a part of the loss was not attributable to defect in the manufacture of the goods, but to the fall in the market. That was so reasonable and plain that he (the learned baron) would direct the jury, in point of law, to find that.

HONG KONG GRIEVANCES.

EACH successive mail from Hong Kong brings us accounts of bad trade, houses untenanted, heavy taxation, and, in short, a general decadence in the business of the place. The Chinese, it is said, are leaving by thousands disgusted with the legislation of the Governor Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL. The grievances of the colonists have accumulated to such an extent that it has been considered desirable to form an association to protect themselves against further exactions. The police and lighting rate amount, we believe, to the enormous impost of about ten per cent., and this too upon untenanted buildings. The rate is levied on the landlord, and no matter whether he has good or bad, or no tenants at all, he is compelled to pay quarter after quarter this impost. People in England really cannot believe that such a monstrous injustice should be perpetrated in an English colony, and if the colonists submit to this without appeal to the tribunals of the mother country they cannot expect but that further exactions will follow. Rents are by no means in a flourishing condition; the rentals of China shops in the best part of the Queen's-road and adjacent are, we understand, reduced by about one-half. To add to the hardships now being endured by the owners of property, the Government have called upon them to rebuild the Praya on the sea front, which has been seriously damaged by the late typhoons. Now, if we remember rightly, this Praya was undertaken by the owners on the understanding that they would only build it and not undertake to keep it in repair; and we think the Oriental Bank were the first to lay down these conditions, which other lot-holders followed. In proof of this, the Praya was built on plans and specifications drawn up by the GOVERNMENT SURVEYOR, the owners not even being permitted to construct it after their own fancies, but must spend their money to Government order. No Governor has ever succeeded in pleasing the Chinese or Europeans, but certainly no Governor has, in the same space of time, arrived at the perfection to which Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL has in interfering with the comfort of the residents. There are many reasons to account for it. Under Sir HERCULES ROBINSON things were made pleasant by a full Treasury, but by a corresponding expenditure or outlay on unproductive sources, such as the Mint and the Jail on Stone-cutter's Island—the latter costing about $200,000—the Treasury was speedily emptied, and the goose which laid the golden eggs had flown. The manner in which the first land sales at Kowloong were conducted put a death-blow to its creating powers, and the place is now an unproductive ruin, the speculators who run up the prices having gone the way of all speculators, and the Government are powerless, as the respectable Chinese who were invited to bid returned to Canton and Macao, vowing not to be again cajoled by a Hong Kong Governor. We have already said it is monstrous to squeeze out of the revenue a sum for the outlay of such an affair as the Mint, and the colonists must devote their examination to the expenditure—the revenue will be found ample for all legitimate purposes. The GOVERNOR must now see that the reins have been drawn tight enough, and that if the strain be kept up the respectable Chinese will migrate to Canton and Macao, and leave the English colony to feed on the English and not on them. Property in Macao by daily purchases has already gone up considerably, while at Hong Kong it is all the other way.

JAPAN.

If we could but put our trust in telegrams all doubts relative to the long-debated intention of Stotsbashi to resign the Shiogoonate would have been set at rest by a despatch received from Shanghai, via Galle, and dated 7th December, to this effect:—"Intelligence received here announces that a political revolution has taken place in Japan. The Tycoon has resigned It is supposed that the foreign relations of Japan will not be prejudiced by the change. An adjournment of the opening of the new ports for a few months is, however, considered probable." The pith of this communication is, of course, in the concluding paragraph. If there be any truth at all in it—which, in the absence of confirmation must still be regarded as problematical—the "political revolution" has doubtless been forced on in order to form an excuse for an evasion of that obnoxious measure, the opening of Osaka and Yedo. Beyond this, all speculation as to the real nature of the situation is rendered futile by the hopelessly confused nature of the political news lately received from Japan. Another item of intelligence regarding affairs in the same quarter comes to us from a French source. It is to the effect that the Japanese Christians, who were imprisoned at Nagasaki have been liberated, at the request of the French Minister. As far as the fact of their liberation goes, we trust this may prove correct; but as France is by no means the only Christian nation represented in Japan, we hope it will turn out that the act of clemency was procured by the combined intercession of all the foreign ministers.

FRENCH EXPLORATIONS IN CAMBODIA.

A series of Parliamentary papers has just been published, relative to the proposed route, via Rangoon, to Western China. Details have already appeared in these columns of the commencement of the survey, the suspension of it, owing to the great cost of the proposed railway and the fear of a collision with Burmah, and the unavailing efforts made through various chambers of commerce to induce the Government to resume operations. The present papers, however, throw some light on the efforts of the French to bring the China trade down the Cambodia river, and on that subject the following extract is interesting:—

> The French are disposed to compete with us for the trade of Western China, and may be beforehand of us. An influential French mission was despatched from Saigon more than a year ago to proceed along the course of the Cambodia. This party, which maintains considerable dignity in its style, consists of five officers, with a European staff of 25 persons and a guard of 100 Annamite soldiers. As they have spent 12 months in the leisurely ascent of the Cambodia to Kyang-Hung, it is supposed that they have been busy politically among the semi-independent chiefs on the bank. It was believed that from Kyang-Hung they had turned to the north-west, or possibly due west, intending to strike the Irrawaddy at Bhamo. The native States on the lower portion of that river are partly tributary to China and partly to Cochin-China, but as Kyang-Hung is reached they are nominally under Burmah. The French could quickly assume under their protection the lower chiefs, but the point they must have in view is to enter into communication with the Shan State of Kyang-Hung. This reaches eastward to China Proper, and through it runs the main route of Chinese traffic westward to the Takaw Ferry, and into the true Burman Shan States. The position of the town of Kyang-Hung itself, in fact, is such that it commands the line of trade from the westward to China proper, and to the southern portion of Yunan. A great deal depends on the capabilities of the Cambodia river, for navigation. It is believed that there are rapids in in its course, which may require transshipment of goods in the upper portion of its course between Saigon and Kyang-Hung; but against such obstacles on that route we have to compare the long land journey from Kyang-Hung to the Irrawaddy. The traffic on the lower portion of the Cambodia river is understood to have been considerable in the earlier times, but it has almost ceased since the destruction of Wint-Chian or Chandapoori in the beginning of the century by the Siamese.

WE have from time to time noticed the progress made with the works of the Suez Canal—an undertaking which, as it approaches completion, possesses increasing interest to those interested in our means of communication with the East. The engineers of the canal have now issued their report on the state of the works on the 30th of November last. They calculate that at that date 32,562,631 cubic metres of earth, &c., had been raised, out of a total of 74,112,130 cubic metres to be extracted, leaving 41,549,499 cubic metres still to be dealt with. The number of dredgers at work at the close of November was 39, and 21 others remained to be set to work; it was expected that all these would be in operation by the close of December or the commencement of the current month. The number of workmen employed at the end of November was 8,340, of whom 5,980 were engaged in the Suez division which comprises the last twenty-eight miles of the canal. Five of the dredgers were at work in the Port Said basin, six in the Port Said division of the canal, fourteen in the El-Guiser division, ten in the Ismailia division, and four in a basin which is being formed at Suez.

WE understand that a further reference to Hong Kong has been found necessary, before a decision can be arrived at in the case between the CHIEF JUSTICE of Hong Kong and Mr. POLLARD, Q.C., who returns to Hong Kong by an early mail. Sir BENSON MAXWELL, the Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements, will proceed to Singapore next month.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE PRESS AT SINGAPORE.

The following letter on this subject has been received :—

SIR,—In your remarks on the "Freedom of the Press at Singapore" you attribute blame to Colonel Ord for excluding the representatives of the press from the meetings of the Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements. In justice to the party accused, I have to state that I fear you have been misinformed on the subject. Nobody has been, to my knowledge, prevented from attending the meetings, and the members of the press have been accommodated with seats, &c., whenever they have attended, which I may add was, in my experience, very seldom.

The subject of the press was mooted by myself at the first meeting of the Legislative Council, and it was considered, after some discussion, that it would be best that the secretary should draw up a short statement of the proceedings of each meeting, which should be forwarded to the editors of the respective papers.

In coming to this decision the Governor and Council were guided by local experience, and the editors have themselves to blame if they are dissatisfied with the result, but the apathy shown by them in the case of the Municipal Committee, whose meetings they have never attended, and the absence of a shorthand writer or anybody fitted to draw up a correct report, rendered it obligatory to adopt the course which has hitherto been pursued.

I may add that on the arrival of a shorthand writer at Singapore, and on mentioning that matter to Colonel Ord, he expressed to me his willingness to afford him every facility in his power —Your obedient servant,

London, Jan. 8, 1868. R.

Continental Intelligence.

HOLLAND.

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 6.

The political events which have happened since the last mail started are of high importance. As I said in my former letter, the sitting of the States-General was closed, after the First Chamber had approved of the credit laws and some Bills of local interest. Since a new Minister for Justice has been appointed, viz., Mr. W. Wintgens, Member of the Second Chamber for Delft, to fill the place of the late Mr. Borret. The Ministry had done its utmost to find a Catholic willing to accept this portfolio, but all those who were sounded refused, so that the Cabinet was brought to the necessity of engaging a Protestant. Our population being two-fifths Roman Catholics, they require that at least one member of the Ministry should belong to the Roman Church, in order that a watch may be kept over its interests. When the Roman religion is not represented in the Cabinet it loses the support of the Catholic Members of the States-General, and of the electors too. This last fact is one of the highest importance for the Cabinet. The King having declined to accept the demand for dismissal, which was tendered by all the members of the Ministry after the Budget for Foreign Affairs was rejected, the Second Chamber was to be dissolved, and an appeal made to the country. Under these circumstances, of course the Cabinet needed the aid of the Roman Catholic electors, who without doubt should join the Liberals at the forthcoming elections, when a Protestant should be appointed Minister of Justice, which department is also charged with the administration of that religion, since the department of Public Worship was abolished, in 1860, by Thorbecke, in order to come gradually to a Free Church in a Free State.

The actual Cabinet not being able to find a Roman Catholic willing to accept a portfolio, did not know another medium through which to content the Catholics than to revoke the Royal decrees of 1860, and to re-establish the department of Public Worship, and in consequence thereof Mr. A. F. X. Luyben, M.P., is appointed Minister for the department of Roman Catholic Worship, and Mr. C. T. Baron van Lynden van Sandenburg Minister for other religions. The day after these appointments were gazetted the Royal decree, by virtue of which the Second Chamber was dissolved, appeared in the Staats Courant.

But not only were the Roman Catholics contented with this measure, the orthodox Protestant party is also highly satisfied with it, because it has now become more probable that the law about primary instruction will be altered in such a manner as is wished for by the ultra-Protestant and the Roman Catholic parties, viz., that the liberal law excluding sect schools will be abolished, and that sect schools will be re-established. So much is certain, that of the nine Ministers there are four who will support such an alteration of this law.

The elections for the new Chamber will take place on the 22nd of January, and when re-elections are necessary the 4th of February is fixed for them. I need not say that an extraordinary agitation prevails throughout the country as to the result of the elections. I think it very doubtful whether the Liberals will again succeed in gaining the majority in Parliament, now that they have to fight against the monster league of the Roman Catholics, ultra Protestants, and Ministerialists. When the elections turn out in favour of the Ministry it is more than probable that a press law will at once come in force, in order to oblige the Liberal papers to keep silence about Government matters. And, indeed, the tone of some papers is so libellous, so insulting and affronting to the Cabinet, and even to the Royal Family, that they hand the motives to the Ministry to re-establish the censorship.

Immediately after the King had declined to receive the resignation of the Ministry a despatch was sent to our ambassador at Paris, to the effect that our Government accepted, without the least reserve, the invitation for a conference.

Some days ago the reply of the Minister (Memorie van beantwoording) to the section report about the Budget for India was published. The Minister showed by it that he is a pur sang conservative. He wishes to maintain the system of culture, and even the services, to the India heads (Heerediensten), because he thinks the native population not yet ripe for free labour. The Minister is of opinion that under the actual circumstances the sources of income must be maintained, and that it is highly desirable to raise the income of those sources. I think that these declarations will be read in India with the deepest regret. Indeed, the Conservatives seem to be blind to the wishes of India, notwithstanding that even the conservative Governor-General felt himself obliged to acknowledge that India could not be governed after a conservative rule.

The Trading Company has opened for the first time a public inscription for freights to convey produce from Java to Dutch ports. The profit of this measure for the Government is calculated to be 300,000f., and so it is quite superfluous that our shipowners are grumbling, and in the first place those whose ships are of small charter, because they want higher rates of freights than those who build large ships. The managers of insurance companies are grumbling too, because the Government now insures for its own account 300,000f. on every cargo from the East. A very small sum is of course left to the companies when the insurance regards a small ship, which offers a very small risico, and very large sums are left to them, when with ships of large charter the risico is enormous. The question, if it should not be the most profitable way to thank the Trading Company for its insurances, is now spoken of in the papers.

Our men-of-war and maritime magazines will be provided with breech-loaders.

For some days intense cold has prevailed. The thermometer marks 27 deg.: the rivers are all frozen and shipping is totally interrupted.

A general promotion was gazetted amongst the functionaries of the State telegraph. The minister fixed the price for single telegrams of 20 words at 30 cents instead of 50 cents as hitherto.

Honourable mention has been awarded by the jury of the World Exhibition of Paris to Messrs. Maintz and Co., of Batavia, for tobacco.

The contributions on behalf of the Pope amount now to about 150,000f.

COMMERCIAL.

COFFEE.—The market is quite inactive, in consequence of the season and the frozen water. Prices, however, are maintained. The only transaction to be reported is a lot of 400 b. Padang, ex Gerardina Wilhelmina, at prices that did not transpire. Stock of the Trading Company—unsold, 264,609 b., against 187,900 b. in 1866; and on warrants, 139,275 b., against 114,360 b. in 1866. Deliveries during 1867, 916,653 b., against 843,516 b. in 1866. Private Stock, 36,200 b.

SUGAR (RAW). — The market is dull. Total stock in docks, 27,663,003 lbs., against 32,058,052 lbs. in 1866. The unsold stock of the Trading Company amounted to 20,541 mats, against 16,564 mats in 1867, whilst the stock in the first hand was 18,236 mats.

RICE.—8,200 b. Necransie, ex Rutlandshire, were sold at prices that did not transpire.

SPICES.—The market is unaltered. The 25,000 kilo. Nutmegs and 7,300 kilo. Mace, ex Dordrecht, will soon be brought into the market. Stock: Nutmegs, 864 c.; Mace, 382 c.; and on warrants, Nutmegs, 4,697 c.; Mace, 698 c.; Cloves, 3,081 c.; Cinnamon, 597 mats.

TEA.—China: The stock in first hand amounts to 1,408 quarter-chests Congou and Souchong. Afloat are 6,650 chests from Foocho, per J. H. Schwensen.

TOBACCO.—The auctions announced to be held on the 16th are delayed. The stock amounts to 25,794 bales Java; 40 bales Manila. The lots afloat from Manila are almost all sold, so that the prices will be firmly maintained.

ARRACK.—In the year 1867 was paid for Sourabaya from 125f. to 163f., for Sourabaya Alcohol 135f. to 186f., and for Batavia 180f. to 231f. Imported were during this year 2,346/1 and 508/2 Casas, and sold 3,136/1 and 422/2 Casas. The stock is very small.

COTTON.—The transactions of last week included 650b. East Indian.

TIN (BANCA).—The market was during the last days more favourable, so that it closes at 53f., whilst Billiton is quoted at 52½f. The export from Holland during last year amounted to 4,129 tons, against 5,250 tons in 1866. Trading Company's stock, 35,568 slabs.

HIDES.—1,290 pieces Samarang Rinder, in average 3¼ to 3½ kilo., ex Stad Dokkum, were sold.

MONEY AND STOCK MARKET.—The inquiry for discount in the market is the same as at the Bank, rather quiet, and the rate is unaltered. There is, however, abundance of capital. The position of public securities is looked upon in general as more satisfactory. The transactions are not of much importance, but prices exhibit an upward tendency. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 52½ to 53; Three per Cents., 61½ to 62; Four per Cents., 82½ to 83; Trading Company, 135½ to 136; Rotterdam Bank, 99 per cent.

HAMBURG.

HAMBURG, Jan. 7.

Baron von Annerstedt, first lieutenant in the Swedish navy, whose appointment to a special diplomatic and commercial mission to the Far East I noticed in my last letter, after making a round of visits to the different ports in Sweden, is now doing the same in Norway, to ascertain the wishes of the merchants preparatory to starting on his mission to China.

The Danish official gazette, Departements-Tidende, publishes the original text in the Dutch language, with a translation in Danish, of the treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation concluded at Yedo between Denmark and Japan, the document being signed by Mynheer de Graeff van Polsbroek, the Dutch political agent and Consul-General in Japan, on the part of the King of Denmark, and Sibata Hionga no Kami, Koerimoto no Kami, and Okoebo Taliwaki, the Japanese special commissioners. The treaty secures many manifest advantages to the Danish merchants if they know how to profit by the stipulations it contains, and which have been obtained at the trifling cost of a distribution of three or four decorations of the Order of the Dannebrog, whilst the expense of a special embassy, with a Danish squadron, has been saved, it being at one time proposed to send out a costly expedition, to defray the expenses of which the Government asked the Parliament for the sum of 100,000 rixdalers, but which was refused by the Legislative bodies.

On the 1st inst. many alterations came into operation here, the principal one being the fusion of all the different post-offices in Germany, the department being now carried on for account of the Federal Government, the Postmaster-General being Chancellor of the Confederation, Count von Bismark. At the same time all the multitudinous rates of postage of the different separate States with their cumbersome and antiquated regulations and different monetary systems have ceased altogether, and are replaced by a modernised set common to all. Not the least important alteration is the introduction of one single uniform rate of postage of one groschen for a half-ounce letter, and two groschens for a double letter, being any weight under a pound, if prepaid; if not prepaid, there is an additional charge of a groschen as a fine, without reference to the weight of the letter. These rates are to be charged on letters for all distances, and as the Confederation has concluded postal treaties with Austria and the States of South Germany, a letter may now be sent for a groschen, which is 1 1-5d. sterling, from Memel to the frontiers of Belgium and France, and from Hamburg to Trieste, and even to the frontiers of Greece and Turkey. For the collectors of postage stamps it may be edifying to learn that the stamps issued by the different States are put out of circulation and replaced by a new very simple stamp without any coat of arms, bearing the legend "Bundes-Postbezirk," for which the old stamps may be exchanged or the nominal value returned. Stamped envelopes are also issued, a small charge being made in addition to the groschen stamp to cover the expense of the paper. This is the only part of the arrangement that is open to criticism, and it has caused already a considerable amount of grumbling, not so much on account of the sum charged—which is moderate enough, being only one pfennig or the twelfth part of a groschen—as from principle, it being looked on as shabby and petty. It is however to be foreseen that this cause of complaint will soon be removed as the new system becomes better understood and appreciated, and when the increase in the number of letters be found to make up for the deficit in the receipts by the great reduction of postage. In the meantime the change is accepted as a great boon and most welcome New Year's gift to the German nation. Treaties are being negotiated with other countries for a corresponding reduction of international postages, some of which—Switzerland and the United States of America for instance—have already been concluded and have come into operation. It is to be hoped that they will also soon be concluded, as some anomalies have arisen in consequence; thus as an example I may mention that a letter from any part of Germany to New Orleans or California costs at present less than a letter from Hamburg to London.

Several of the hitherto Prussian Consulates, mostly in the Levant, have now become Federal ones for the whole of North Germany. The only alteration made in that respect hitherto in the Far East is the appointment of Herr von Brandt to be Federal Consul-General in Japan, with his official residence at Yedo.

COMMERCIAL.

Partly in consequence of the holidays and partly owing to the frost, business is confined to the execution of the most pressing orders. An alteration in the quotations is not observable. The natural consequence of this dulness in the produce market is a great abundance of money, which is chiefly employed in discounting at very low rates, whilst the quantity of silver in the Bank is about a million and a half marks banco more than last week.

SHIPPING.

The Hamburg barque Juno has been placed on the berth for Shanghai (in addition to the other vessels loading, as reported in last letter); but as the frost is so severe that the navigation is suspended and the Elbe can be crossed on the ice, it may be a long time before any vessel can get away, and those that arrive have to wait at Cuxhaven for the reopening of the navigation.

Monetary and Commercial.

According to a Customs' return of bonded goods on the 30th of November last, it appears that the quantity of Tea in bond was then 70,411.984 lbs., against 78,678,304 lbs. in 1865, and 95,602,672 lbs. in 1866. Of Coffee there were 43,688,730 lbs. in 1867, against 30,540,545 lbs. in 1865, and 32,205,685 lbs. in 1866. Sugar shows an increase of 60,000 cwt. as compared with last year; and Tobacco a decrease of some 6,600.000 lbs. The deliveries for home consumption during the month of November were as follows:—Tea, 14,757,591 lbs., against 8.985,850 lbs., and 8,985,211 lbs. in 1865 and 1866. Coffee, 1,425,178 lbs., against 1,821,818 lbs., and 1,674,499 lbs. in 1865 and 1866. Sugar, 1,010,776 lbs., against 745,315, and 1,027,225 lbs. in the two previous years.

The Economist says there is no essential change either in the immediate or prospective condition of the money market. As usual during the last days of the year, there was a brisk demand at the Bank by persons desirous of securing whatever may be the advantage of having with their bankers at Dec. 31 a larger balance than usual. Hence the private securities have increased by £2,500,000. There are three principal causes which for some time must tend to keep down the rate of discount, viz. (1) the real and general limitation of transactions arising from dull trade; (2) the very great reduction in prices, and, therefore, in the amount of capital required to hold stocks of goods and to give credit; and (3) the utter extinction, at all events for some time, of the whole class of needy and speculative people, whose sole business consisted in keeping afloat as much paper as possible at any rates that could be managed. A comparison between the condition of the Bank of England at the 1st of January, 1868, 1867, and 1866, is in nearly all the particulars in favour of 1868. An increase of £2,500,000 in the outstanding notes over 1866 tells significantly of the larger actual note reserves kept by country bankers, as compared with the former times, when every spare penny used to be sent up to London brokers, too often without requiring bills to be handed over in return. The events of 1866 ought, at least, to teach country bankers the lesson of not trusting their spare funds on too easy terms in London. No profession is more useful than that of bill broker who confines himself to his proper functions, and by his intimate and extensive knowledge of the real value of signatures current acts as valuable intermediary between those who supply the discount market with money and those who supply it with bills; and, on the other hand, no pursuit can be more dangerous than bill broking expanded into a "great institution of credit."

Our issue of 10th Sept. last contained some strictures on the lamentable deterioration that has lately manifested itself in the morale of the China trade, and especially on the custom of salting invoices; in connection with which we alluded to a report then current that a recent invoice of Mr. Archibald Campbell's had been so dealt with. Mr. Campbell now writes to deny the truth of the charge, in these words:—"No such charge as salting an invoice was ever proved against me." The italics are his own. A reference to the paragraph complained of will show that we did not state that we had proof of any such act, but that a report to that effect was in circulation. This Mr. Campbell, in common with others, is quite aware of. Our object, however, was not to expose any particular act of his, but to call attention to the lax state of trade prevailing in Shanghai.

The Atlantic Telegraph Company have issued proposals for the creation of £1,300,000 10 per cent. preferential capital to rank next to the £641,845 eight per cent. preference stocks now existing. The object is to bring the entire undertaking into one establishment by paying off the shareholders of the Anglo-American Company, which they have a right to do, at a premium of 100 per cent. Under this arrangement the capital will consist of £641,845 eight per cent. preference, £1,300,000 ten per cent. preference, and £617,750 old stock, making a total of £2,559,595.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Syria, from Southampton on the 4th inst., was—in gold, to Alexandria, £300; to Galle, £372; in silver, to Shanghai, £10,645. Total in gold £672; in silver, £10,645.

The following, on the prospects of the cotton trade, is from the Circular of Messrs. Heugh, Balfour, and Co., Manchester:—

The consumption of 1868 cannot materially exceed the consumption of 1867; if, then, the supply of 1868 shall materially exceed the supply of 1867, how is it possible that even the present price can be maintained? It is alleged by many persons, and there are various indications which seem to countenance the estimate, that the American crop of cotton grown in 1867 will reach to nearly 3,000,000 bales. There are well-informed men connected with India who say that we shall have a larger supply from that quarter in 1868 than we have had in 1867 by at least 300,000 bales. From Egypt, Brazil, and smaller markets, we do not hear of, nor anticipate, any material change from the preceding year. If these expectations concerning the two great supplying sources should be realised even to one-half their extent, it is evident that we shall have a very serious addition to our stock of cotton all through 1868; and if those expectations should be realised to their full extent, we must look forward to an increase that will overcome the Liverpool market. The figures would indicate a supply of at least 1,000,000 or 1,250,000 bales beyond the supply of 1867, and this, as we have said, without the smallest appearance of an increased consumption. We cannot but believe, therefore, that, as 1868 advances, we may see lower prices in Liverpool than we have seen in 1867.

The biddings for Government bills on India took place at the Bank of England, and 12 lakhs and a half were allotted to Calcutta. The minimum price was fixed at 1s. 10⅞d. on Calcutta and Madras, and tenders at and above that price received in full. No tenders on Bombay were invited. Though the official minimum was fixed at ⅛d. lower than on the last occasion, £75,000 of the bills offered remain over unplaced, thus indicating a further diminution in the demand for the means of remittance to the East.

At the meeting of the Egyptian Commercial and Trading Company (Limited) the directors' report was adopted. The chairman expressed his regret that, owing to the depressed state of commercial affairs in Egypt, the directors had not been able to realise the assets of the undertaking, and that they could not consequently submit any proposal to the meeting for a further division of the capital. He expected, however, that in the course of the next few months the liquidation will have proceeded more satisfactorily, and that by next May a large portion of the debts due to the company will have been paid in.

The Ocean Marine Insurance Company have resolved to recommend, at their annual meeting on the 30th inst., a bonus of 20s. per share, and 5s. per share interest; also that a further sum of £10,000 be added to the reserve fund, thereby increasing it to £60,000. The usual payment of 5s. per share will be made in July in each year.

A dividend of 4s. per share, equal to 4 per cent. per annum, is to be recommended by the directors of the Universal Marine Insurance Company at the ensuing meeting.

At the annual meeting of the proprietors of the London and Westminster Bank, to be held on the 15th inst., a dividend will be declared of 16 per cent. for the six months ending 31st December last, being at the same rate as for the corresponding period of the previous year, and making, with the 14 per cent. paid in July, 30 per cent. for the year.

A memorial in favour of limiting the hours of London Bank labour by opening the various establishments at ten instead of nine o'clock A.M. is now in course of signature among the merchants and traders of the City. It is addressed to Sir John Lubbock, as chairman of the committee of bankers, and has already received the adhesion of a very large number of most influential firms, including the Lord Mayor.

ARTICLES OF IMPORT.

TEA.—There has been a fair business done, and in most cases without much alteration in prices since our last. Siftings remain firm; also broken leaf. Fair to good common may be quoted a shade dearer. Fair to good flavoury kinds as before. Good to fine Kaisows are rather higher, also finest Pak Lings remain without alteration. Common to fair black leaf kind have sold at a slight advance. Fair to good have been occasionally sold at a decline of about 1d. per lb. Fine have been steady at the late decline. New-make Canton kinds have sold at rather better prices. Oolongs, Souchongs, and Flowery Pekoes show no material alteration, business in them being limited. Scented Capers have sold readily from 11½d. to 1s.5d. for low to good qualities; Foo-chow kinds from 1s. 8d. to 1s. 11d. Orange Pekoes remain difficult of sale. The Foochow kinds have sold from 1s. 8d. to 1s. 11d., being a reduction of fully 2d. per lb. on the better kinds. In Uncoloured Japans there has been no change. Green Teas have not been so saleable, owing to heavy arrivals, and there has been a further decline of 1d. to 2d. per lb. in the Ping Suey kinds. Moyunes have been better supported, but the Young Hysons are quoted 1d. to 2d. per lb. lower. Canton kinds show no change. The public sales on the 7th comprised 7,122 packages, of which 4,040 packages were sold, nearly all without reserve. In reference to the past year, Messrs. Capel and Co. remark:—The trade has again, we regret to say, been unprofitable, and we would once more point out to importers that it lies with themselves to make the result different by spreading the export from China more in accordance with our monthly deliveries, but whilst they continue to compete one against the other to purchase early in the season at excessive prices, and in quantities largely in excess of the deliveries for the time, and on arrival of the Teas in England press sales for fear of the large supplies to come in, we do not see how the result can be otherwise than unfavourable. The experience of the past two years involving heavy losses, will, we trust, be the means of bringing about a better state of things, especially as consumption is overtaking the supply, and our stocks will now gradually work down to a point more in accordance with the modern system of trade, which does not require more than from four to five months' stock on hand at the end of the season, with the certain prospect of an export from China equal to our deliveries. The home trade has been fairly prosperous, for although the price of tea has gradually declined, the trade, as a rule, now hold such small stocks that they are saved from losses of magnitude. The large increase in home consumption has also given a stimulus to this branch, the increase in duty payments amounting to about 9,000,000 lbs. The export trade this year affords but little subject for remark. There has been a steady demand the greater part of the year, but the total quantity shows but little change from last year. The Russian buyers have again taken a large quantity of common to fair qualities of Congou as well as the finer. The statistics are on the whole favourable. The imports show a considerable reduction; the total for the year being 124,744,000 lbs., against 139,300,000 lbs. last year. The deliveries show a large increase, the total being 143,000,000 lbs., against 133,000,000 lbs. The home consumption showing nearly 9,000,000 lbs. increase, whilst the exports only about 1,000,000 lbs. Our stock is 77,359,000 lbs., against 95,600,000 lbs.; whilst the quantity afloat of China Tea is 39,152,500 lbs., against 33,429,000 lbs; and of India Tea 2,356,000 lbs., against 2,593,500 lbs.

SILK.—The Circular of Messrs. Kilburn, Kershaw, and Co., states:—The only noticeable feature is a decided tendency to lower quotations for middle and common qualities, of which the bulk of arrivals consist; on the other hand, fine and best Silks, particularly China and Japan, are very firm at the full quotations annexed. Of the past year the Silk trade has cause to add its word of complaint to the many which has attended its exit; it has been a year of unsatisfactory business, and generally of loss and worry to all concerned, for opportunities to the Importers of selling have been very few, only at moments when a sudden speculative start has taken place, and the opportunity, if not there and then availed of, having been lost for weeks and even months afterwards—then again, the bulk of the Imports have been to a heavy loss; and the speculator who was bold enough to operate has had to fight against a falling market, and what is worse, at times against no market at all, for at periods during the year, particularly in April, June, and July, it was quite impossible to sell any quantity of Silk, owing to the gloomy and depressed state into which everything had fallen. To the manufacturers, unfortunately accustomed now to struggle against difficult times (the inevitable result of high prices), the year can have had but little comfort, owing to the check to consumption which the bad times have brought about, and thus the year 1867 has been generally gloomy for the silk trade as for most others of the great industries of the country. With regard to the course of prices during 1867, there has clearly been a downward tendency throughout the year, only twice stopped by speculative movements which helped to recover some of the lost ground—viz., in May, when the settlement of the famous Luxembourg question, and unfavourable reports of the progress of the European crops, brought buyers on the market, and a large business resulted for a time, but all at once ceasing, and leaving the silk market to drift into one of the most dull and gloomy periods it has probably ever passed through. The extreme moment of depression at this time was during the last days in July, and prices were nominally (for there were no buyers) 2s. to 3s. under the prices of January. The new China Silk beginning to arrive early in August, led to a little business, but very small, and steadily declining from that period until stopped in November, the market dragged along without any one moment of active or good business. The drop in prices by this time from the commencement of the year had reached 5s. to 6s. on most of the middle and common Silks, and about 4s. on the best Silks—and here the tempting prices at which importers were offering new arrivals seemed within reach of manufacturers, and thus the second and last active move of the year set in, and continued more or less to the end of the year. China Silk Piece Goods: In the public sales there were 1,050 pieces of Pongee Silks, 75 only of which were sold at 70s. to 76s. for good silky cloths of usual measurements; all the rest were bought in. For Pongee Handkerchiefs there was less demand than in November, and only 570 demi-pieces were sold out of 2,092 offered. One-half the whole quantity were light common goods, which had been previously offered, and which were allowed to pass the hammer without any bidding. The prices obtained for the 570 pieces sold were as under, the quotations showing generally a good 1s. under last sales:

Figured White	300 pieces	usual size	11⅛ to 13¼ oz.	fair to good	22s. 6d. to 24s. 6d.
Twilled ditto	160 „	ditto	10⅜ to 11⅛ „	good	26s. 0d to 27s. 6d.
Ditto	50 „	7 yds. x 24 in.	9½ oz.	very good	25s. 6d.
Figured Crimson	60 „	usual size	12 „	fair quality	24s. 6d.

Of Black Silk Handkerchiefs 300 pieces were offered, and 100 sold, at 19s. Damasks were quite neglected, and although importers were disposed to be current, the trade would not bid; all were bought in at 105s. Of all China Silk Piece Goods there were both increased imports and deliveries last year, as compared with 1866, notably of Black Silk Handerchiefs and Pongee Silks; a glance at the figures in the annexed stock account will show the progress thus made; good qualities of all classes have commanded attention, occasionally resulting in high prices, especially for Pongee Silks and Handkerchiefs. Damasks have again appeared in the statistics, but, unfortunately, the quality has not been good enough, and some of the patterns are not in favour at the present time; Basket and Old Pine are apparently the only safe styles. Damasks cannot be too rich in quality; indeed, thin poor silks are very undesirable goods to import. Yellow Nankeens: Only 700 pieces were imported during all last year, and these in small lots. A few really fine Leaf Brand goods would sell, if here. The deliveries from the London warehouses from 1st to 7th instant are 412 bales China, 102 Canton, 76 Japan, and 97 Bengal; total, 687.

COTTON.—Taking the season into consideration, the demand has been fair, quotations remaining the same as at our last report.

COFFEE.—The business has been more than usually restricted, and with the exception of a few parcels of colory Plantation Ceylon, which have been sold at full rates, the transactions in colonial descriptions are without interest.

CAMPHOR.—The market for China and Japan is extremely quiet.

CUTCH.—A transaction in fine Pegue at 50s. per cwt. constitutes the only business done.

CINNAMON.—Of Ceylon a sale of 25 bales is reported at 2s. 2d. to 2s. 3d. for seconds, and 1s. 11d. for thirds.

COCOA-NUT OIL.—The quotations for Ceylon are £50 to £51 per ton The business has been very limited.

MACE.—The sales by auction include 8 cases ordinary red Penang of fresh import, which sold at 1s. 11d. to 2s., and 1 case middling red of old import at 2s. 8d. per lb.

NUTMEGS.—At public sale 62 cases Penang, of fresh import, sold at a slight reduction from previous quotations, viz., fine bold 64 to the lb., 4s. 1d., 69 to lb. 3s. 9d., 70 to lb. 3s. 4d. to 3s. 5d., 84-85 to lb. 1s. 9d. 93-94 to lb. 1s. 6d., and ordinary 107 to lb., 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d.

PEPPER.—At the auctions 3,560 bags nearly all sold at steady prices, viz., 3,186 bags West Coast Penang grayish and fair at 3⅛d. to 3¼d., 295 bags Singapore at 3⅜d. to 3½d., and the remainder, consisting of first-class damaged Singapore, at 3¼d. to 3⅜d. per lb. In White Pepper no business of importance has transpired.

PRESERVES.—A sale is reported of 287 cases China Ginger of fine quality at 1s., and 25 tins dry at 1s. 8d.

SUGAR.—The market has been extremely quiet, and sales can only be effected at a large reduction from previous quotations. The business done has therefore been very trifling.

RICE.—There has been a fair trade doing since our last report, but prices have not in all cases been equal to our last quotations; the sales reported on the spot are:—350 tons Bassein, and 100 tons Rangoon at 11s. 9d. ex ship, 100 tons of the latter at 12s. cash, and 1,000 bags Ballam, fair at 10s. 6d. to 10s. 9d., good at 11s. 6d.

TIN.—Messrs. French and Smith state as follows:—"The demand for tin for consumption the entire year was active, and prices have on the whole advanced. At the commencement of the year English common was £87, Banca £87, Straits £86; during January prices stiffened; in February a little weakness amongst holders of foreign was seen, and for Straits £84 10s. was accepted. As the time approached for the Dutch Trading Company's Spring sale, considerable firmness was shown. The price at this sale was 54 guilders for the whole quantity, equal to £94 10s. here. The fear of war in April depressed prices, and a few sales of Straits were made at £82 10s., but these were exceptional transactions, the prices ruling between £85 and £87 all the summer. As the Autumn Dutch Banca sale approached, and it was apparent that the quantities coming forward were less than in former years, a speculative demand took place, raising the price in Holland to 55 guilders cash. At the sale the Banca realised only 54¼ guilders. Straits continued steady at from £89 to £91 per ton until the last few weeks; a report was then actively circulated that shipments were to be made from Japan of about 3,000 tons; although this was highly improbable, indeed all but impossible, it had a bad effect on the market, and as at the same time the tin plate trade was not so flourishing as in the earlier part of the year, the price of tin went back; up to the present moment there is nothing to warrant this rumour. We quote:—Banca in Holland 52¾ to 53 guilders; here £90 to £91. Straits £87."

ARTICLES OF EXPORT.

IRON.—The quotations in London are for Welsh bars, £6 7s. 6d. to £6 10s.; nail rods, £7 5s. to £7 15s.; hoops, £8 7s. 6d. to £9; sheets, single, £9 15s. to £10; Staffordshire bars, £7 5s. to £7 15s.; rails, £5 10s. to £6.

STEEL.—Swedish kegs, £14 15s. to £15.

COPPER.—Sheet and Sheathing, £80 to £82 per ton; yellow metal 7d. per lb.

LEAD, &c.—English pig, W.B., £21 5s.; shot, patent, £22 5s. sheet, £20 5s.; spelter, £20; zinc, English sheet, £26; quicksilver, £6 17s., in bottles of 75 lbs. each.

The following is from the circular of Messrs. French and Smith:—

At the beginning of the past year we had to notice a great reduction in the value of all the important metals, and as prices were unusually low, hopes were entertained of improvement; but on the contrary, all continued to decline, Tin only excepted, which rather improved in value. The lower prices have no doubt encouraged exportation, as is apparent by the Board of Trade returns, which show larger figures than in the year previous. There can, however, be little doubt that the home consumption of metals has fallen off, as railways and other great works have been compelled to buy sparingly. The rate of discount, which at the commencement of the year was 3½ per cent., was reduced on the 7th February to 3 per cent., again on the 30th May to 2½ per cent., and on the 25th July to 2 per cent., at which it has since remained.

IRON.—The consumption of Scotch has been pretty steady, but the price is from 2s. to 3s. per ton lower than a year since. Welsh: Rails and Bars have been fairly in demand, with scarcely any alteration in quotations. Staffordshire, owing to severe competition and the slackness of home demand, has given way about 10s. per ton, but may be considered firm at present quotations. The total shipments during the year 1867 we estimate 1,900,000, against in 1866 1,682,000 tons.

COPPER.—It was thought that in 1866 the price of this metal had touched its lowest, when English Tough was sold at £79 per ton; but last year a lower depth still was found, and Tough was sold as low as £74 per ton, which is the present quotation; but even at this rate buyers would scarcely be found for large parcels. We quote—Ores, 14s.; Chili Slabs, £67 10s.; English Tough, £74; Australian, Wallaroo, £79; Burra, £80; Kapunda, £86 to £87.

MANCHESTER MARKETS.

The general tone of this market is steadier. For known good makes of shirtings an advance of 3d. per piece from the previous lowest point is demanded, buyers do not show much disposition to place orders at the full increase quoted; but manufacturers do not press sales, and hold firmly for the improvement. Spinners show greater steadiness at full prices, but with more disposition to meet buyers.

Quotations are:—Grey Shirtings, 7 lbs., 7s. 1½d. to 7s. 10½d.; 8½ lbs., 8s. 10½d.; Cotton Yarn, Nos. 16-24, 11d. to 12d.; Nos. 28-32, 1s. to 1s. 1½d.; Maddapollams, 3s. 3d.; Long Cloths, 8s. 9d.; T-Cloths 5s. 9d.; White Spot Shirtings, 9s. 9d.

FREIGHTS AND CHARTERS.

The following is from the circular of Messrs. Stringer, Pembroke and Co.:

"A review of the coal shipments from this country to the principal Eastern ports during the past year exhibits an increase of rather over 50 per cent., say 796,000 tons, as against 527,000 tons during the year ending 31st December, 1866. Noticeably this increase has been greatest to those ports which are affected by the war in Abyssinia, but the same feature, although in a less degree, is to be observed of other ports, and this may be undoubtedly traced primarily to the rapid growth of steam shipping which is now extending to more distant ports, and consequently large shipments of coals may be looked for. Nor is the development of steam confined to Great Britain, for not only are ships of war but those for mercantile purposes of other nations largely augmented in number and add considerably to the consumers of English coals. Hitherto the coals obtained in Australia, though the quantity has been considerable, has not affected the East Indian markets to any great extent, as they have not yet been found to give such satisfactory results for steam shipping purposes as English coals, and the export of coals from Japan, which proved of very good quality, and which at one time promised to be of much service to the China ports, is for the present almost entirely suspended, whilst the same remark applies to the Labuan coals, which being of such good quality might, if more actively worked, be of material advantage for steam purposes in the same direction. Looking then to the foregoing facts there can be no doubt that the quantity of tonnage required for coals during the ensuing year will be a full average. At present, however, the ports above alluded to are well supplied and the stocks kept up with the prospect of the demand for the Abyssinian requirements, so that at the moment it cannot be expected that the inquiry for tonnage would be considerable, which causes a temporary depression in rates, yet a good outward business may, it is reasonably expected, be looked for during the year.

Current rates of freight for vessels on the berth:—To Yokohama: 40s. weight, 50s. meast. To Nagasaki: 50s. meast., 40s. weight. To Shanghai: 40s. weight, 45s. meast. To Cheefoo: 60s. weight or meast. To Hong Kong: 40s. to 45s. weight, 35s. meast. To Manila: 80s. weight, 50s. meast. To Singapore: 35s. weight, 30s. meast. To Penang: 40s. weight, 35s. meast. To Ceylon: 20s. to 25s. weight, 35s. meast.

The current quotations for coal, &c., are as follows:—From Wear or Tyne per keel.—For Yokohama: £54. For Shanghai: £55. For Hong Kong: £45. For Saigon: £50. For Singapore: £33. For Batavia: £32. For Colombo, £30. For Galle, £34. From Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea, per ton.—For Yokohama: £2 12s. 6d. For Shanghai: £2 15s. For Chefoo, £2 15s. For Hong Kong, £2 5s. For Manila, £1 15s. For Saigon: £2 8s. For Singapore: £1 13s. For Batavia, £1 10s. For Trincomalee, £1 12s. 6d. For Galle, £1 14s. For Colombo, £1 8s. 6d.

The Admiralty have invited tenders for the conveyance of 17 tons weight small arm ammunition, 3 tons meast., carriage, &c., 14 tons naval masts and timber, 4 tons naval cordage, 18 tons weight and 33 tons meast. naval common stores, from the Thames to Trincomalee; also of 45 tons weight, small arm ammunition, 8 tons meast., iron carriage slides, to Hong Kong

CASUALTIES.

The Glendoveer, Wilson, which sailed from Sunderland for Singapore, Jan. 1, put into Grimsby Roads, Jan. 5, leaky, through a defect in water-closet pipe.

The Bilderdyk, Victor, from Amsterdam to Batavia, has been frozen up in the Great North Holland Canal, near Alkmoar.

The Gabrielle Alice, Lancelot, from Saigon to Bordeaux, which put into Mauritius, Nov. 16, leaky, would have to discharge and be docked to repair.

The Monarch, Macey, from Manila to London, put into Queenstown Jan. 1, and was towed into a dockyard there.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The next inward mail (French), with Hong Kong dates to Dec. 26, may be expected about the 5th proximo. Telegrams in anticipation of the P. and O. mail of Jan. 1 were received on the 20th. The correspondence from Shanghai of Oct. 16, via San Francisco, was delivered this morning.

ALTERATION IN THE NEW MAIL SERVICE.

THE time-table originally prepared for the new postal service having proved in some respects unsatisfactory as regards the Australian mails, a new table, slightly altered, has been issued by the P. and O. Company at the request of Government. Under the previous arrangement, the inward Australian mail would have arrived three to four days after the despatch of the outward one, causing a delay of more than three weeks in answering the homeward letters. In order to obviate this, the second outward China mail under the new contract, which would have been despatched on Friday, the 20th March, is postponed until Friday, the 27th. There will thus be an interval of three weeks, instead of a fortnight, between the two March mails for China, but after that they will leave London every alternate Friday, in accordance with the original scheme.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

The Japan news by the present mail has been anticipated by the Pacific route, which has brought intelligence from Yokohama to the 6th December. The following is a summary of it:—The Shiogoon has resigned his governing power into the hands of the Mikado. The government of the empire will henceforth be carried on, under the Mikado, by a council of Daimios, or nobles. There are many rumours afloat of troubles at Kioto, the metropolis of the empire. Some assert that the death of Stotsbashi has taken place, but it is not generally believed. Osaka and Hiogo will certainly be opened to foreign commerce on the 1st of January, 1868. The United States' Minister, with several of his colleagues, will proceed there in a short time, to be present on the occasion of the opening. An army and a large naval force will be present in case of trouble. The opening of Yeddo is deferred until the 1st of April next. The new port to be opened on the west coast of the empire is Neegata, as named in the original treaty; but the harbour at that place being unsafe for foreign ships coming in, that of Ebisunito, on the island of Sado, 30 miles distant, is to be made the port of entry in its stead. This port and harbour are to be opened on the 1st of April. The reason for the delay given by the Japanese is that they cannot prepare the settlements before that period. There are a good many robbers in Yedo, and some fear lest they should come to Yokohama.

Several mercantile houses intend opening branches of their establishments at Osaka and Hiogo; among others three American houses whose headquarters are here. General Van Valkenburg, the United States' Minister in Japan, was married on the 25th of November to Mrs. Schoyer, widow of the late Raphael Schoyer.

YOKOHAMA.

Advices from this port by the mail delivered to-day are to the 28th November. The outward mail of Sept. 26 was delivered Nov. 21. We have now detailed accounts of the political revolution, in which—for the first time—the local journals agree.

The Japan Times, which long ago announced, and has all along adhered to, the fact of the Shiogoon's resignation, says:—"The statement made by this journal that Stotsbashi had resigned the Shiogoonate, which was so circumstantially and positively denied by the Gorogio and the French Minister, has been now officially admitted to be correct. The history of the transaction is as follows. The Prince of Tosa, representing a confederation of several of the most powerful Daimios, presented a memorial to the Mikado urging upon him the necessity of Stotsbashi's retirement and of a radical change in the Government, that change which we have never ceased to advocate as of prime necessity to our continued peaceful intercourse with Japan. Stotsbashi resisted for some time, but finally yielded, and having tendered his resignation and received the Mikado's acceptance of it, now holds office only till the new Cabinet can be formed and the new system inaugurated. As there is no doubt that the movement is one which the most powerful men in the country have combined to make—one clearly advantageous to their pecuniary interests and tending to the developement of the country's resources, it will probably be effected without much difficulty and result in nothing but good. What the Japanese have most to dread is some unwarrantable interference by some of their Western allies; and as French policy is, absolutely and in all its details, subverted by the victory of the Liberal party—there is some reason to fear on this score. Neither the Mikado nor the council of Daimios is likely to sanction the expenditure of the public funds for the completion of the contracts entered into by the late Shiogoon. It would be absurd to expect Tosa, Satsuma, Kanga, Echizen, or Higo to permit their people to be taxed, or their custom dues mulcted, to furnish the Tokugawa family, already too strong, and whose yoke they have only just succeeded in breaking, with a dock, an arsenal, an iron clad fleet, and a large corps of naval and military instructors, the pick of the French scientific schools. All contracts for such, made by the late pseudo-government of Japan, the real rulers of the country, will be perfectly justified in repudiating, and MM. Roches, Coullet, Louis Napoleon and Cie, must claim on the private estates of Stotsbashi and his family for whatever damages they sustain. It will be the duty of the other Western Powers to see that these claims are not enforced with undue harshness; there must be no introduction of "a man in possession;" and as neither England, Prussia, nor America could view without apprehension the establishment of a French depot of any importance in the Pacific, it is improbable that the attempt will be made. Still proper precautions must not be neglected.

"Thus his Majesty the Mikado, Satsuma, Tosa, Echizen, and Stotsbashi himself will, it is believed, constitute the Cabinet; to Chiosiu is to be committed, it is said (but this is rather doubtful), the command-in-chief of the Imperial armies; the Council of Daimios will undertake the administration of minor details, and so, from the demi-theocratic system of government, Japan has advanced to the Venetian. In these days of accelerative progress, how many years will elapse before we see it under the rule of a constitutional monarchy? Surely this may come to pass in our generation. And then, when the fulness of time brings forth its Japanese Beales, perhaps the Demos will rule Nippon, and the coolie will be at least as good as the Daimio.

"If we could cease at this point we should do so with unalloyed satisfaction; but the report of Stotsbashi's assassination by a party of Satsuma and Tosa men comes to us from too many sources to allow us altogether to discredit it. The Gorogio, who so distinctly contradicted last month our announcement of the abdication, and have now officially to admit it, deny that Stotsbashi has been killed, but say that he is "sick." We fear that his sickness—as has always been the case when a Shiogoon is in question—is unto death. It is stated to us that the event occurred on the 19th day of the Japanese month, the 14th instant. The news was transmitted to Yedo, it is said, in the almost incredibly short space of 54 hours. We give the report, it must be understood, with the reservation that we sincerely trust it may not be true, and that we cannot vouch for it with certainty. Our opinion of this talented young statesman is on record, and none desire more earnestly than ourselves that his valuable life may long be preserved for the service of his country.

"The question of the opening of the new ports and the plans of the foreign concessions there have become additionally complicated since we last wrote on these subjects. In view of the revolution just accomplished, which virtually abrogates the treaties of 1858 and their corollaries, it is doubtful whether the ports can be opened at all before the Mikado has formally adopted the agreements made with the Shiogoon, and even then it may well happen that some other less under the control of the Tokugawa family may be selected for the new points of contact with the foreigner. Already we have official information that neither Yedo nor Nee-e-gata will be opened till the 1st of April, and we doubt much whether the Daimios will allow Osaka to become a port for foreign trade so long as the castle, and with it the military command of the town, remains in the hands of Stotsbashi. This is, however, a matter of detail not likely to be difficult of arrangement.

"To sum up in a few words the events of which we have written above—whether Stotsbashi be alive or dead, it is certain that he is no longer Shiogoon; the party opposed to the opening of only Shiogoon's ports is supreme in the country. It is most probable that the office of the Shiogoonate will be either abolished altogether or undergo a great diminution of power; the Kokushi Daimios are the masters of the situation, and it remains for them to decide whether the old power of the Mikado shall be re-established and the treaties with foreigners observed in their true spirit, or whether a futile, suicidal effort shall be made to drive us altogether from Japan."

The Japan Herald, which has persistently denied the possibility of the changes, says:—

"The excitement of the past fortnight has been the reassumption by the Mikado of the powers which have been for the last two centuries and a-half vested in the office of Shiogoon and which have been during the last week or so voluntarily resigned by Stotsbashi. This important change in the Administration has naturally caused the circulation of vague reports of disturbance, confusion, and even assassination, all of which are entirely without foundation, as here, and also at Yedo, affairs are perfectly quiet, and there is, so far, every appearance of the existence of general order.

"An assembly of the Daimios has been ordered by the Mikado to meet and deliberate on the details of the future constitution and Government of the empire. It were of course premature to anticipate the result of their labours, though the present state of affairs would seem to point to the Daimios having for the future a recognised voice in the legislation and administration of the country and to the Shiogoon, Stotsbashi retaining an important position in the Government. It is certain that Stotsbashi has been requested by the Mikado to continue to direct the affairs of State much the same as heretofore, in conjunction with officers of the Mikado's court, and to devote to the service of his country the undoubted talents that he possesses for administration.

"Stotsbashi has arrived at the wise conclusion that the changes consequent on foreign intervention should be effected boldly and openly, and with the concurrence of those who, from their position, have a right to a voice in the representation of the country. This decision is, in our opinion, indeed, a sagacious one, and it is now therefore a National Assembly that is to decide the future relations which Japan shall adopt in her relation with Foreign Powers.

"Stotsbashi, leaving to the national movement its full liberty and prestige, has resigned to the Mikado the powers with which as Shiogoon he had been invested; he has, nevertheless, at the express request of the Mikado and the Gorogjio, retained the direction of the affairs of the State until the meeting of the national assembly above referred to. Tranquillity and peace reign supreme at Kioto and Yedo, and we fail to see any signs for cause of apprehension or difficulties.

"It is certain that henceforth the treaties will be respected and we believe that the outgoing mail carries a manifest from the Japanese Government to the European Cabinets, which will tend to throw more light on the actual position of affairs. Whilst, however, accepting Stotsbashi's resignation, the Mikado—or rather his counsellors, he being a youth of about nine years of age,—expressed the hope that he would still afford to the country the advantage of his able advice and co-operation in the Government, and it is more than probable that Stotsbashi and his Ministers will in reality continue to hold the reins of Government until the details connected with the new form of administration have been finally settled."

The Japan Times thus describes an important municipal reform that has been inaugurated in Yokohama. It was decided last June that it was impossible for the existing Municipal Council to remain in office without some radical change. The following resolution was therefore adopted :—

"It being evident that with existing receipts only, the Municipal Council cannot meet their necessary yearly expenditure, and having no means for levying rates for municipal purposes, it is proposed that they resign office, and the land renters memorialise the different Foreign Ministers, requesting them to call upon the Japanese Government to take upon themselves all the duties of the municipality, proper guarantees being given that the Japanese Government will effectually drain the settlement, carry out all measures necessary for sanitary purposes, maintain an efficient European police, and further, that they shall establish a Government office specially appropriated to municipal affairs, at the head of which shall be an European Surveyor of Roads, &c., to whom all complaints regarding roads, drains, &c., can be referred."

In pursuance of these instructions, the committee addressed to the Ministers the following letter, in which they enclosed a summary of the debate and minutes of the proceedings. The Ministers having taken this letter and its enclosure into consideration, in concert with a commission specially appointed by the Japanese Government for the purpose, replied in a collective note dated November 4th, from the French Legation at Yedo. This commenced by informing the Committee of Land-renters that the foreign representatives had agreed to recommend to the Japanese Government the adoption of the following measures, as being essential in the present circumstances to the maintenance of order and the public health in the Settlement.

Arrangements for the Establishment of a Japanese Municipal Office for the Foreign Settlement at Yokohama.

I.—That an office to be called the Municipal Office be formed under the Japanese Government at Yokohama and placed in the charge of a Foreign Director, who will be subordinate to the Governor of Kanagawa.

II.—That the said Director acting under the authority of the Governor of Kanagawa shall see to the repair, cleanliness, and efficiency of all the streets and drains in the Foreign Settlement of Yokohama. He shall be authorised to receive such complaints relative to police or the state of drains and thoroughfares as may properly be addressed by Foreigners to the local Government direct, and in the name of the Governor of Kanagawa will prosecute Foreigners before their own authorities for nuisances or any infringement of police order.

(Here is interpolated a Memorandum recommending Martin Dohmen, Esq., of H. B. M. Consulate, for the office).

III.—The said director, acting under the advice of the Governor, will have the charge and direction of all foreigners employed as police in the foreign settlement, or for the repression of disorderly conduct on the part of foreigners within the port of Kanagawa. Whenever a subject of a Treaty Power is arrested in the commission of an offence the person so arrested must be conveyed at once to the Consul of his nation, who will take steps for his detention until he can be prosecuted.

IV.—The Governor of Kanagawa, acting with the advice and assistance of the said director, and with such advice as he may obtain from foreign Consuls, will exercise jurisdiction—both criminal and civil—over the subjects of China and the subjects and citizens of other non-Treaty Powers residing within the said settlement or within the Port of Kanagawa.

V.—The land rents payable by foreigners will be collected by the said director, as they become due, for the Governor of Kanagawa, and will be empowered to sue foreigners for default of payment before their own authorities.

VI.—The Foreign Consuls will confine within the narrowest limits compatible with public convenience, the number of licenses issued by them for the sale of spirits and liquors, &c. A copy of every license will be furnished to the Governor of Kanagawa, and the director will inform against any person who sells liquors or keeps a house of entertainment without the license of his authorities.

VII.—The Government will arrange for the safe storage, at reasonable rates, of gunpowder or other explosive substances imported into Kanagawa, and steps will be taken to prevent foreigners from using any other place for the storage of these substances.

The note is signed by the Ministers of France, England, America, Prussia and the Netherlands. A meeting of land-renters that was held to consider it, expressed entire satisfaction, and passed a vote of thanks to the Ministers.

In prospect of the speedy opening of the new ports, the following particulars relative to Neegata, which have been communicated to the Evening Express of Nov. 23 by a gentleman who has visited the place, will be read with interest :—

Neegata was the port on the west coast originally selected for foreign commerce, but like that of Osaka, it s opening has been postponed from year to year, and frequently objected to on the ground that it is not a good harbour for vessels of large size. It has, however, the advantage of being a great rendezvous for native craft, the only imperial port on the coast, and therefore the only one at absolute disposal of the Yedo Government, and moreover it is opposite the island of Sado, which has several small but secure anchorages, which are convenient for ships in bad weather.

It has been surveyed by Commander Bullock, of Her Majesty's ship Serpent, to whose ability and persevering discharge of the double duty of surveyor and commander future navigators will be deeply indebted; indeed, it is our intention, on another opportunity, to notice the Serpent's services in comparison with some of Her Majesty's ships upon the China and Pacific stations. That active British representative, Sir Harry Parkes, also visited the place, to satisfy himself of its eligibility.

Though lying some two hundred miles S.S.E. from Hakodate its climate is said to be far more rigorous, and the summer shorter, the high ranges shutting out the morning rays of the sun. The prevalence of northerly gales off the bleak chill district of the Amoor, and the cold current setting on this coast from the northward, are some of the chief causes of a far different climate from Yokohama on the east coast in nearly the same latitude, the latter having the benefit of the warm current from the tropics. The fall of snow is greater than at Hakodate, and the abundance of timber enables the residents to construct better houses to resist the severity of climate; the injury from earthquakes is less frequent than in many less mountainous parts of Niphon. Gold, silver, and many useful minerals are said to be abundant, also timber; the produce of the immediate district is comparatively scanty, but it is, however, frequented by great numbers of native vessels, and a large trade is said to be done in exchange of commodities from the various parts of the country.

The inhabitants have the character of being very orderly and hospitable. Their personal appearance is superior to those of the east and south coast; indeed it is from this district that the greater number of the beauties of Yedo and Osaka are purchased when young, the climate and mountainous character of the district tending, as in other countries (the Alps and interior of China to wit), to a fairer complexion and superior physical development.

NAGASAKI.

Dates from this port are to the 1st December. The sale of the steamer Kiangsoo to Prince Satsuma is reported at $155,000,—half cash, half in three months. We take the following from Messrs. Alt and Co.'s circular of Nov. 30th :—

A most important political movement is now going on at Kioto. A general council of all the Daimios whose revenues exceed 100,000 kokus has been convoked by the Mikado to assemble as soon as possible, and the result of their deliberations will, we feel confident, be an entire change in the style of Government in Japan. We have had repeated reports of the abdication of the Shiogoon, whose action hitherto in regard to foreign relations with Japan, the Daimios maintain, has been an entire usurpation of power on his part; and the abolition of the Shiogoonship will in all probability be one point insisted upon by the Daimios. The changes, whatever they may be, that take place will, we believe, be favourable to foreign trade with the country.

IMPORTS.—Our piece goods markets have been very dull during the past month, and the supplies having exceed the demand for most descriptions of cotton and woollen fabrics, prices have declined. Grey Shirtings form an exception to the general rule, 8¼lb. makes having commanded considerable attention, and having found buyers in fair quantities at firm rates. Light makes of the same goods are not inquired for. Small sales of T-Cloths have been made, but supplies are more than required. White Shirtings have declined, and are only saleable in small quantities. White and Dyed Spot Shirtings and Brocades are also neglected, and only a few pieces could be disposed of at a reduction upon last month's rates. Taffashellas and T. R. Cambrics have also declined rapidly during the past three weeks, owing to the market being over supplied. Camlets are in a very depressed condition, the native dealers all being holders of large stocks, besides which heavy supplies are also held in first hands. In Long Ells little has been done, and prices remain nominally the same. Saltpetre is in fair demand, and there is but little in the place. Hoop, Bar, and Rod Iron are taken readily in moderate quantities at quotations, and stocks are small. No English Coal on offer. Lead is in small supply, and could be quitted in moderate quantities at quotations.

EXPORTS.—In our produce markets Tea and Wax have attracted most attention during the past month. Tea has been taken in fair quantities, principally in barter against goods; and as holders continue to be more anxious to realise than exporters are to buy, prices have still further drooped in favour of buyers. Stocks of fair and medium Teas continue to increase. Wax has been taken in large quantities at former rates. All the Gall Nuts offering have been taken at last mail's rates. In Tobacco operations have been unimportant, stocks being very low. There have been no sales of Camphor and Sulphur.

CHINA.

TIENTSIN.

The appointment of Mr. Burlingame, the U.S. Minister at Peking, as Chinese Ambassador to all the European Powers having treaties with China, which has been noticed by us in a previous issue, is now confirmed, together with the report of an attack upon him by local banditti on his way from Peking to Tientsin. The facts are stated as follow :—Mr. Burlingame and his family, Mr. Salter, U. S. Consul at Hankow, and Mr. Bradford, with their escort—four of the British Legation Guard—were blockaded by a body of rebels estimated at 300 or 400 strong, in a place called Hoo-shee-woo, about half-way between Peking and Tientsin. Lieutenant Dunlop, of H.M.'s gunboat Dove, with twenty blue jackets and a detachment of native drilled cavalry, at once went up from the latter port to their rescue, and the U. S. sloop Ashuelot left Shanghai directly the news arrived. The party were, however, in less danger than was rumoured, and have, we believe, since reached Tientsin by another route.

Digitized by Google

But the fact of the main road to the capital being blocked indicates a great strength and boldness on the part of the rebels. The 300 or 400 men who are said to compose the assailants do not, of course, count for much; but the Government must be singularly weak, the rebels bold and confident, and the country very disturbed, before so small a party would venture to throw itself on the main road between Tientsin and Peking.

The Shanse men and other inland traders have nearly all left, and the business now daily done is of a very restricted character. Rates for manufactures are daily giving way. Some Tientsin speculators are buying goods to hold till next season, under the hope of a profit, which, however, is very improbable, judging from the news from Shanse and the aspect of trade in England.

The last sailing vessel has left the Tientsin anchorage. We still look for the Nanzing, Ying-tze-fei, and Szechuen returning this season as far as the Takoo inner anchorage, but after their departure we shall scarcely expect another steamer this year. The sailing vessels are leaving Takoo as fast as possible, and I do not suppose we shall see this winter any foreign craft caught in the ice, as was the case last winter. As no sand grouse have yet appeared in the Tientsin plain, we are led to think that no snow of any consequence has yet fallen in Mongolia.

It is reported from Chefoo that two of the Europeans who were on board the General Sherman when she was taken by the Coreans are still alive. The information is not certain; but measures will, we believe, be at once taken to sift it. If it be true, probably one of the survivors is the Rev. Mr. Thomas, who, it will be remembered, spoke the Corean language.

The northern branch of this river, known to the Chinese as the Peiho, as well as the Southern branch known to the Chinese as the Yunho, are both frozen over. The river from here to Takoo, known to Chinese as the Hae-ho, is only partially frozen over in places. Some junks which are making for the owners' houses are cutting their way through the partially frozen parts of the river. The steamer Shanse is lying in the inner anchorage at Takoo, and it is expected that the Hon. Anson Burlingame and suite will go by her to Shanghai. Business of all kinds is now virtually at an end for the season 1867; and it is now of no use attempting to give quotations for manufactures, to serve as a guide for future imports of these goods.

SHANGHAI.

The London mail of 17th Oct. arrived out on 5th Dec. The latest dates are down to the 9th.

The North China Herald of 30th Nov. and 9th Dec. contains the following items:—

The Chamber of Commerce held their annual meeting on the 28th, when the report and accounts for the past year were tendered and accepted. Every subject referred to in the report has been so fully commented on at different times during the year that no further notice is called for. We are glad to see that the Chamber is increasing in numbers, and that its accounts are flourishing. The total income during the year ended 30th June last was 3,937.22 taels; and the expenditure 2,606.07 taels, leaving a surplus of 1,331.15. A rather absurd proposition that sellers should in future refuse to pay brokerage was brought forward at the meeting in terms of rather questionable taste, but found no seconder.

Some surprise has been expressed that the desirability of opening the Yellow River to foreign trade has not been advocated by the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce, as a desirable concession to be obtained when negociating the revised treaty next year.

A fire, which appeared to have originated in a tea shop, broke out in a block of Chinese houses at the corner of one of the streets leading out of the Rue de Consulat on the French Concession. The wood was so dry that the fire spread rapidly, and several houses were burned down before it could be got under.

Admiral Keppel arrived from Hong Kong in the Salamis. He will leave again in a few days for Japan, to be present at the opening of the new ports.

After Mr. Klecakowski had given over charge of the Customs, some suspicion was cast on the accuracy of the accounts during the term of his office. No definite charge was brought during his life; but an investigation has been insisted on by his representatives since his death. The result has been to exonerate him from all suspicion. A committee, consisting, we believe, of the different secretaries of legation at Peking, examined the accounts, and found that there was no evidence to support the charge.

The residents at Kiukiang have followed the example of merchants at other ports, in addressing a memorial to Sir Rutherford Alcock regarding the revision of the treaty. The transit due grievance, and the excessive duty on dust tea are complained of; and the navigation of inland waters and the free admission of coals destined for steamer use are asked for.

We have received the usual Customs reports of trade during the month of October at the different treaty ports—except that on Shanghai; which was not ready in time. As it is on this that interest, here, principally centres, we shall not attempt to analyse the returns from the other ports; further than to say that the notices are generally favourable. At Foochow, larger imports of opium and piece goods, and larger exports of tea are reported. The export of tea from Amoy for the American market has also been large. An abundant rice crop is expected, and rates are consequently low. An allusion is made to the destruction of the Titan light-house at this port. Native pilots are believed to have been the culprits. The Chefoo report mentions that Yellow River has burst its banks near Tsinan and done great injury. The Hankow Commissioner writes as follows:—

There has been considerable diminution in the quantities of Cotton and Woollen Fabrics during the month, the number of Grey Shirtings imported having been but 8,400, against 84,948 pieces during the previous month. The quantities imported to date since the 1st January, however, contrast well with last year for there have been 646,843 pieces Grey Shirting, against, for for same period in 1866, 459,000 pieces; whilst of T-Cloths there are 161,974 pieces, against 47,000 pieces for the same period in 1866. Towards the end of the month prices have slightly improved for Cotton Goods. Raw Cotton has been extensively imported, and rapidly disposed of on arrival. In Metals,—Tin, of which there had been none imported for the previous five months, 204 piculs were imported. Of Sugar there has been a fair quantity arriving, 178,000 piculs having been received since the 1st Jan. of brown, against 134,000 piculs in 1866 to same date; and of White Sugar 81,000 piculs against 35,000 piculs. The importation of Sea-weed has fallen off from 71,000 piculs to 39,000 piculs this year to date, though this month shows some recovery, being double the quantity of last month's arrivals. The trade in Needles that commenced in the spring has become more developed—50,700 mille having been recently imported, against 2,300 mille imported in the early part of this year.

In the case of Dent and Co. an adjourned meeting of creditors has been held. Claims by Sir R. Alcock for 172.97 taels, and by Lady Alcock for 55.67 taels were admitted. A claim by the Union Insurance Company for 46,854 taels was also admitted. At the request of the creditors the meeting was then adjourned to January 13, 1868.

In reference to the affairs of Mackellar and Co. the Chief Judge has, we hear, decided to allow the appeal against the decision of the Hankow Bankruptcy Court.

A deed of assignment of the effects of the firm of Thomas Knowles Holdsworth, of Shanghai, has been made for the benefit of the creditors, and duly registered in the Court on 29th November.

The firm of Meadows and Co., Tientsin, have been adjudicated bankrupts.

A steamer has been laid on for Osaca (Hiogo), calling at Nagasaki and Yokohoma.

We have to note the marriage of Sir Edmund Hornby, Chief Judge of H.B.M. Supreme Court, to Miss Mary H. Hudson, which took place on the 3rd December.

A sale of land and houses belonging to the estate of Daw and Co. is announced for the 20th December.

An adjourned meeting of the creditors of Mr. C. T. Jones was held on 25th Nov. The judge having remarked that the cause must be again adjourned, the bankrupt asked that he might at least be considered to have passed his first examination, as several adjournments had already taken place. If any creditor wished to oppose his discharge, this could be done at the second examination. The Court assented, and fixed the next meeting for the 21st December.

In the Admiralty Court Mr. Knox, H.M. Consul at Bangkok, claimed the barque Cutty Sark as confiscated to the Crown, her owner having been convicted of felony. Mr. Myburgh, on behalf of Mr. Knox, produced a copy of the registry in Hong Kong, showing that no mortgage on the vessel was registered. Peter Orr, master of the Cutty Sark, stated that Scott was the only registered owner. He is the same man who was convicted of felony at Singapore. The Court ordered that the plaintiff be put in possession of the ship.

The Supreme Court and Consular Gazette of 7th ultimo gives the following details of an action brought by Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., against Captain Burke, of the Strathmore:—

This was a claim for $52,50, commission on a charter of the ship Strathmore. The following evidence gives the facts of the case. Charles George—I am shipping clerk to Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co. The Strathmore was consigned to us, and we have acted generally as consignees of a ship are accustomed to act. The captain consulted us generally. With one exception, he has refused coast employment when I offered it to him. I spoke to him in particular of a charter to Amoy and told him the terms of two I was in a position to offer him. He refused, saying he wanted to go to Hong Kong in ballast. He cleared out nominally, however, for Amoy on the 23rd Nov. I produce a charter party dated on the same day, which embodies a charter to the very same parties that he had refused one from when offered by us, and to the same port, Amoy. The amount is higher than I had offered him, but I have no doubt I could have got him the same or a higher figure from the charterer had he not refused altogether to go to Amoy. The commission charged is 2½ per cent. Ours would have been 5 per cent., as is the usage. It was on the 22nd that he refused to go to Amoy. On the 23rd he took the very charter that we offered. We sue him for 5 per cent. on the amount of the charter, namely, $1,050 or $52.50. We have applied for payment, but without success.

Captain Burke said, I arrived on the 2nd October from Australia with sandal wood for Shanghai and lead ore for London, with liberty to tranship the latter. I was under the impression that the plaintiffs were the agents of the shipowners, and I put the ship in their hands. I was anxious to load for London, but they would do nothing. I could not accept coast employment on account of my part cargo for London, as there were no ships in the port that I could tranship it into. Several Chinese charterers had been applying to me to charter my ship, but I declined them all. I was ready for starting and had gone aboard to start for Hong Kong, when the pilot told me that a Chinaman had been on board offering $1,000 and what was otherwise a good charter for Amoy. I returned ashore and finally arranged with the Chinaman as per charter party put in. I pay 2½ per cent. to the Chinese charterer as commission, and declined to pay the 5 per cent. that the plaintiffs claim. I have paid to plaintiffs commission on my inward cargo, amounting in all to 2½ per cent., and I think that is enough for all they have done.—Judgment was reserved.

The second number of the Shanghai News Letter was published for the Costa Rica on 27th November for San Francisco and United States. It is a very neat production and we extract the following:—

NAVAL.—The U.S. Str. Ashuelot will await the coming of the American Minister, Mr. Burlingame, expected here by the Shanse, with his family, from Peking. Our Minister will likely visit all the treaty ports on the Yangtsze and China Coast in the Ashuelot, preparatory to the general revision of treaties next year at Peking.

We are advised that the U.S. squadron will rendezvous at Nagasaki within the coming month, to make preparations to proceed, in connection with the English and French fleets, to Osaka and Nagata, the new treaty ports guaranteed to be opened by the Japanese on the 1st January, 1868. The Hartford, Capt. Belknap, flagship of Admiral Bell; Monocacy, 10, Capt. Carter; store-ship Onward, Lieut. Com. Pierre Gisaud, are already at Nagasaki. The Iroquois, 8, Capt. Earl English, just out from home, and Shenandoah, 6, Commodore Goldsborough, were soon expected to arrive.

The number of vessels entered at the American Consulate from September 30th to November 26th, 1867, were 59, and cleared 61. The aggregate tonnage entered was 68,848 tons. Cargoes inward, 14,876,301 taels, 1m. 3c.; cargoes outward, 6,909,124 taels, 0m. 9c.

Passengers sailed for New York:—J. A. Cunningham, S. Rawson, W. F. Lowry, Mrs. H. A Holcomb, Charles Holcomb. For San Francisco: Allan McLane, Mrs. McLane, Miss Annie McLane, Miss Harris and Miss Knight.

SWATOW.

About 11.30 P.M. on Sunday, the 1st December, the quarters of the interpreter at H.B.M. Consulate, Swatow, were attacked by a party of some twenty robbers armed with matchlocks, spears, and axes. They were heard on their approach, and when surrounding the house Mr. Cooper fired two pistol shots at them without effect. Having lit some oiled papers twisted up in the form of torches that they brought with them, and blown in the door with a bag of gunpowder, they burst into the house. On the foremost reaching the top of the stairs Mr. Cooper stepped out of the door of his bedroom and received them with his Colt, with which, after thrusting aside the man's spear, he blazed into the breast of the first comer, who, falling back on to the second, started him downstairs, both dropping their weapons, that of the second being an ugly-looking axe. Their intended victim urged him on with a shot from above aimed at the vicinity of the collar bone, from which the muzzle of his pistol was distant but about two feet; on this they all fled. The sound of the pistol reports and the unwonted glare aroused the alarm of other residents and of the commander of H.M. gunboat Bustard, and within a few minutes a considerable force of foreigners were assembled at the spot. The robbers were pursued, but, owing to the darkness, unsuccessfully, even though, as it was afterwards learnt, one of their wounded had to be carried off. The object of their visit is a mystery, as no money, and but few valuables were on the premises, and nothing was taken. It has since been supposed that the attack was made by a band of hired assassins—Mr. Cooper having brought considerable odium on himself from his endeavours to stop the exactions of black-mail on foreign-owned sugar coming down from the country, and from the assistance he has afforded the native authorities in the suppression of coolie traffic. If this be the case, he has had a most fortunate escape, his wife, two amahs, and two children being besides him the only persons in the house. It is to be hoped that H.M's authorities will cause a thorough investigation of the affair, and will insist on the apprehension and punishment of the culprits.

HONG KONG.

The London mail of 17th Oct. arrived out on the 30th Nov. The mail of 26th Oct. was hourly expected. The appointment of Mr. Burlingame had attracted much attention. The China Mail says:—

The mission or Embassy, as it is termed, is to consist of the following members:—The Hon. Anson Burlingame, Ambassador-in-Chief; J. Mc. C. Brown, Esq. (Assistant Chinese Secretary H. B. M. Legation), Chinese Secretary; E. de Champs (Customs Kiu-kiang), Interpreter; Chikiang, a Manchow of the fourth rank, and Sun-kia-ku, a Chinese of the fourth rank, both employes of the Tsung-li-Yamen, are to be raised to the dignity of red button, and sent as assistant ambassadors; and twenty-four Chinese will go as secretaries, &c. The post of French interpreter was offered first to M. Le Maire, of H.I.M. Legation at Peking, but declined; and was then offered to, and accepted by, M. de Champs, who in company with Mr. Bowra accompanied the unofficial mission last year.

Mr. Burlingame will leave Hong Kong for Europe by the last mail in January, and as no precise date is assigned for his return, and his salary ($40,000 per annum) is to continue so long as he may be absent from China, we may safely infer that he will not revisit this colony for a year or two at least. We hear that the British Minister, Sir R. Alcock, has telegraphed to Lord Stanley announcing his approbation of the scheme, while the French Minister, the Comte L'Allemand has telegraphed to his Government his emphatic disapproval of the whole affair. The influence of Mr. Hart with Mr. Burlingame has long been known and commented on, and unfriendly critics have been wont to assert that the virtual envoy of the United States to China was the Inspector-General of Customs. But under any circumstances we must congratulate Mr. Hart on the choice made—if indeed the choice of a minister has rested with him.

The cotton combination has succumbed, owing to the adverse stand taken by the native authorities at Canton, but the large hongs still refrain from purchasing at this, hoping by this course to divert at least a portion of the trade to Canton. The losses by the late fire have been very heavy, underwriters suffering to the extent of over half of million of dollars, while the uninsured loss is estimated at fully two millions more, though this latter may be somewhat exaggerated. Two large hongs are reported to have closed in consequence of these and other losses, and others are said to be likely to follow. Money continues very scarce, and, in view of the approaching New Year, merchants are averse to making purchases beyond those necessary for their immediate wants. The amount of business transacted has been less than during any preceding fortnight for years past, and there are but few articles that do not show a decline in value.

Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co. have prepared a separate and independent memorial to the Governor of Hong Kong, for the perusal of the Secretary of State at home on the subject of the revision of the treaties. Its general purport is in accordance with that of the Hong Kong and Shanghai memorials from which it differs mainly in the amplification of considerations relating to the residence of foreigners inland. It dwells urgently on the importance of establishing the right of such residence, as the next step in advance to be accomplished in the approaching negotiations.

An officer of the Mint, Mr. Langdon Davies, who was superintendent of the Bullion-office, has been forced to resign, without receiving the compensation due to him under his agreement, by a threat of suspension from the Executive Council. The offence which he is alleged to have committed is set forth in certain correspondence which has been published, and his defence has also appeared in the paper. The general feeling is—can hardly be otherwise on the facts brought to light—that Mr. Davies has been a victim of persecution on the part of his immediate superior, and of unfair, perhaps illegal, severity on the part of the Government.

The annual general meeting of the China Traders' Insurance Company was held on the 2nd December. The printed report of the committee having been taken as read was adopted by the meeting. Messrs. Hitchcock and Kaye were unanimously re-elected as directors, and Messrs. Taylor and del Banco as auditors. After a few remarks from the chairman, congratulating the shareholders upon the satisfactory progress of the company's affairs, votes of thanks were passed to the secretary and agents, and the meeting separated.

A special meeting of the Union Dock Company was held on the 14th December, when the chairman stated that the first business of the meeting was the alteration of the 58th clause of the articles of association, touching the period of notice to be given for calling a meeting. It was then proposed by Mr. Kresser, and seconded by Mr. Heard, that the time should be ten days, instead of twenty-one, as before. This proposal was carried unanimously. After Mr. Heard and Mr. L. Beyer had refused to act on the direction, Viscomte do Cercal proposed, and Mr. Armstrong seconded, that Messrs. Kresser, Sage, and Cook be elected as directors, to fill up the vacancies caused by the resignation of the old board. The directors now are—Messrs. Kresser, Sage, Sassoon, Cook, and Baron do Cercal.

A most diabolical attempt at incendiarism was made lately by burglars and thieves, on the premises in Duddell-street lately in the occupation of Messrs. Vaucher and Co. The house is at present empty, and advantage was thus taken (we believe successfully) of the chance of escaping from detection. Other attempts have also been discovered.

A fire broke out on the morning of the 8th December, about nine o'clock, in the shop of a Chinese carpenter, Webster's Bazaar. Its origin is not satisfactorily known; and, although the authorities say it was caused by the purely accidental ignition of some loose shavings, it is the opinion of some that this does not fully explain its rise. Whether or not caused by accident, it was very promptly got under by some members of the police, whose engine, fortunately enough, was stationed on the Praya at the scene of the great fire.

It is notified in the Gazette that the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Victoria has, by virtue of his letters patent, appointed the Rev. John Henry Gray, M.A., Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Chaplain at Canton, to be Archdeacon of Hong Kong.

Another breach of the Passenger Act has been detected and punished. Captain Hiemsoht, of the Siamese ship Canton, was summoned for having cleared and attempted to sail from this port with a larger number of passengers than he had stated on clearing his vessel at the office of the Harbour Master. Defendant pleaded that he had left the passenger department to the supercargo; that he did not know how many passengers were on board, although (knowing there was a certain number) he put it at twenty on getting his clearance; and that he therefore had committed the offence unwittingly, and without the intention to evade the law. The Magistrate, however, imposed the penalty of £100; which proceeding, we should fancy, ought to have the effect of enforcing caution on every master mariner sailing from this port.

The long pending question as to the disposal of the second moiety of the Canton Garden Fund, has, we understand, been finally settled by the grant of the $10,000 to the American community at Canton, and according to the one version which has reached us, the question as to the entire sum of $27,000 has been by consent of the British and United States Ministers referred to arbitrators.

A brush with river pirates occurred on the 1st Dec. in the Canton River, near the second Bar, in which the Chinese steam-gunboat Feiloong, Captain Edwards, assisted by a number of Chinese police junks, was engaged. Several piratical snake-boats were seized, and some prisoners were captured. It is satisfactory to find the Chinese Government availing itself at length of its own resources toward the suppression of piracy, and we trust that the gallant and energetic commander of the Feiloong will continue to be thus employed.

Chenk Akai, the pirate of the "stone junk," who was sentenced to death at the November criminal sessions for piracy and murder committed off Pedra Branca, was executed at the magistracy compound. The morning was sharply cold, and very few Europeans were present, but the usual miscellaneous crowd of canaille swarmed on the lower road under the gallows. A body of Sikh police (under Superintendent Jarman) were formed in the compound, and a body of Hindoos were placed on the lower road under an inspector. No officials put in an appearance except the sheriff (Mr. Tonnachy) and the gaol governor (Mr. Douglas).

A meeting of the Legislative Council was convened on 5th Dec. to amend the Bankruptcy Act by giving power to the governor to appoint an assignee other than the Registrar. The case arose from Mr. Alexander, the registrar, objecting to act in the case of Lyall, Still and Co., owing to his relationship to one of the partners. We hear that a private examination in this estate took place before the Chief Justice. Reporters applied for permission to be present, but were refused. It is said that the immediate object of the examination of the "witnesses" is to get some information affecting the alleged improper transference of certain documents by the local representatives of the firm to local banks with whom they did business.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

The London mail of 11th Nov. arrived out on the 13th Dec. The dates are down to the 22nd. The chief item of interest is the publication of the estimates for 1868, an account of which we are compelled to postpone for want of space.

The Legislative Council (says the Straits Times), after passing the Passenger Ship Act and the Supply Bill of the year which authorises the expenditure during 1868 of the sum of 1,292,343 dollars—the expenditure estimated by the Budget, has been prorogued. The prorogation was a formal one, having been declared by his Excellency the Governor in the presence of a large concourse of the public who had been notified of the intended ceremony. The attendance was large, because it was kown that the Governor would, in releasing the members of Council from their labours, make a formal address which it was expected would contain matter of much general interest. In one respect the public was gratified, but in another it was disappointed. The Governor did make his address—a very well-spoken one it was, but he had evidently thought it prudent to imitate the characteristics of a Royal speech, and, except upon one point, avoided any declaration of principle, or of policy. The exception was an unhappy one in so far that it was an allusion to the manner in which he would direct future taxation were that found to be necessary. Now, as the Budget for 1868 shows an abundant revenue, more than equal by a long way to meet the estimated expenditure, the public naturally fail to see the force of any allusion to fresh taxation at all. But this was not the worst. In continuation of this view he said, that while he would not resort to such a means while direct taxation was left him, he, nevertheless, could not concur in the widely professed opinion, that import of other duties upon shipping would have any very disastrous effects upon the trade of the Settlement. If a bomb-shell had been thrown from Government House into the centre of Commercial-square it could not have produced more amazement than this unlucky, and we must think ill-judged—as it was uncalled for, declaration of opinion. It has aroused, too, a painful feeling of mistrust which unfortunately cannot be dispelled until another public ceremony will afford his Excellency an opportunity of explaining his grounds for so great a heresy against the fundamental laws of our commerce and the traditions of the place.

The Navarino, Captain Young, which left Singapore for Hong Kong on the 4th of December, returned in the afternoon in tow of the Government steamer Rainbow, a frightful catastrophe having occurred on board. By the pilot's evidence, when he got on board he considered the second and chief mates not in a condition to get the ship under weigh; but this was eventually done by the captain, who after doing so went down below to get rest. The two mates appear to have followed him, where they began to blackguard him, and the second mate seized him by the throat. Upon this the captain seized a bayonet from the arms' rack, which was close at hand, and stabbed him (the second mate) in the throat, with such effect that he died in ten minutes after. The chief mate then began to struggle with the captain, and was stabbed through the back, and now lies in a very precarious state. The captain, after the two mates were disabled, went on deck and ordered the helm up and stood back for Singapore, at the same time hoisting the signal of distress, the Union upside down. Some distance outside the harbour limits, when nearly becalmed, the vessel was boarded, and towed in by the Rainbow, and on arrival the captain was taken into custody. The first mate was placed under medical treatment by the surgeon of H.M.S. Zebra

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—The market continues in the same dull state as at the close of last mail, and although a considerable decline has taken place in the value of Mexican dollars, no corresponding improvement can be reported in the import trade. The depression previously existing has been increased by the unsettled state of political affairs and the consequent unwillingness of native dealers to hold stocks. Grey Shirtings remain in moderate request, and former rates are fully maintained. Cotton Yarns have suffered a further decline in value for all counts, Nos. 28 to 32 continuing the only description for which any inquiry exists. All kinds of Woollens and Fancy Goods are extremely dull, and quotations mostly nominal. There is some slight inquiry for Nail-rod Iron and Lead, and Malacca Tin has been taken to some extent for re-export. Quotations are:—G. E. Grey Shirtings: 7lbs., $3.20 to 3.30 per piece; 8lbs., $3.60 to 3.75 per piece; 9lbs., $4.15 to 4.20 per piece. G. E. White Shirtings: 56 to 60 reed, $3.30 to 3.60 per piece; 64 to 72 reed, $3.70 to 4.10 per piece. T. Cloths: 6lbs. to 7lbs., $2.70 to 3 per piece. Cotton Yarn: Nos. 16 to 24, $58 to 60 per picul; Nos. 28 to 32, $66 to 70 per picul; Nos. 38 to 42, $58 to 63 per picul. Camlets, BBB and S, $18 to 18.75 per piece; ditto, SS, $16 to 17.50 per piece; ditto, SSS, $14.50 to 15.50 per piece.

SHANGHAI.—Since the departure of the last mail transactions in Grey Shirtings have been on a limited scale, chiefly owing to a bareness of stocks. Latterly these were all but exhausted, and prices advanced to Tls. 2.42 for 7 lbs. and Tls. 2.65 per piece for 8.4 lbs. The arrival of the James Shepherd has caused a decline, and the dealers are not willing buyers, at Tls. 2.56 to 2.60 for 8.4 lbs., and Tls. 2.35 to 2.38 for 7 lbs. We expect a further decline, as the northern demand has quite ceased for the season. T-Cloths have changed hands to a small extent, but the demand is far from active. 8 lbs. are lower, with a fair inquiry. White Shirtings.—The lower counts have been asked for, and sales are reported at quotations. The higher reeds are not wanted. White Figured Shirtings and White Brocades are lower in value, and have changed hands at Tls. 2.20 to 2.35 per piece respectively. Dyed Figured Shirtings are also lower, sales having been made at Tls. 2.35 per piece. Dyed Brocades have been in more inquiry, and the best goods show a slight rise in price. For other Fancy Goods the inquiry is of a retail character. Woollens generally are much depressed; Camlets only being sought for at the low figures lately ruling. Metals.—Iron: The James Shepherd does not add to stocks of Nail Rod, and dealers are anxious buyers to arrive at Tls. 3.10 per picul. Coals.—Quotations mostly nominal for cargoes of Cardiff, part cargoes have been sold at Tls. 14 per ton from ships' side, a small cargo of American at Tls. 15.50, and part cargo of Australian at Tls. 9.50. The Royal Diadem brought 675 tons S. Wales. The Mary, 1,636 tons patent fuel; Sir Ralph Abercrombie, 920 tons Cardiff; Hindustan, 752 tons Cowper's Hartley; and the Chillingham, 678 tons Hartley.

HANKOW.—No new feature of interest has characterised the fortnight. The inquiry for both Cotton and Woollen fabrics has been, as usual at this season, on a small scale, and prices have varied but little from last mail's quotations. Grey Shirtings: 7 lbs. have been wanted, and an advance of 2 to 3 candareens per picul would have been readily obtainable for any on the spot; 8 lbs. 4 oz. and 8 lbs. 8 oz. have been taken sparingly at about previous rates. White Shirtings: The lighter reeds only have been asked for, and have realised former prices. T-Cloths: 7 lbs. of fine make at an advance of 1 mace per piece; 8 lbs. show a further decline of 5 candareens at 1 mace per piece. Drills unchanged; small sales have been made of both American and English. Fancy Cottons: Dyed Brocades still wanted, but none of suitable pattern on offer. Camlets have been looked at by the dealers, but little business has resulted. Lastings nominally as last quoted, but the inquiry very small. Long Ells difficult of sale unless a lower value is accepted. Spanish Stripes neglected. Figured Orleans nominally unchanged. Crapes have latterly met with more attention. Metals: Lead improved in value in consequence of a speculative inquiry, and best brands may be quoted tls. 5.40 to 5.60 per picul. Quicksilver: Demand subsided, and the value is tls. 52 per picul. Tin in limited request, and a small quantity placed at tls. 20 to 20.25 per picul.

FOOCHOW.—Import sales are as follows:—Grey shirtings, 1,000 pieces, 8.4 lbs., $3.40 per piece. Lead, 700 pigs, $7.60 to $7.75 per picul.

HONG KONG.—The stagnation in the import market noticed in our last has continued. The much talked of cotton league is said to be broken up, though no particular benefit to Hong Kong has become apparent; the combined effects of the great fire, the approach of China New-year, and the general distrust and want of credit prevailing amongst native merchants and dealers, and their customers up-country, have been quite sufficient to neutralise any advantage caused by the return of the cotton trade to the colony. Hardly any sales have been effected, save of damaged goods at auction, and quotations for imports of all sorts, cotton, woollen, and metal, are quite nominal. No material improvement can be looked for now until after China New-year, when it is to be hoped that a very different state of things may be inaugurated, although much of a rise in rates for Cotton Fabrics can hardly be expected, in view of the low prices lately ruling in Manchester, and large shipments on the way. Raw Cotton: The market is in a somewhat better state, owing to the breaking up of the combination of Canton cotton merchants above referred to; but so many of the local merchants and dealers have been "burnt out" by the fire, and trade has been so much interrupted thereby, that but few purchases of sound staple have been made. Large auction sales of damaged cotton saved from the fire have taken place, $5 to 7 per picul being about the price obtained; but it is said that buyers have made re-sales in Canton at a handsome profit. Coals: A cargo of Cardiff Coal has been sold at auction at $14.75 per ton, and another has been placed privately at $13.90; the latter price, however, is decidedly below current rates, which remain as before reported. Australian continues in moderate supply and steady demand, at former rates.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—There has been a fairly active demand, and settlements are computed at 4,200 piculs, consisting principally of good medium and fine sorts. The native dealers have shown somewhat more disposition to do business, and although no very important decline has taken place, there is an evident indication of weakness, which would have been more decidedly marked but that the market has been to some extent strengthened by the advance in the value of native currency. Arrivals have been upon a smaller scale, and may be stated at 3,000 piculs, leaving an unsold stock of about 6,000 piculs. Quotations are:—Good common, $20.00 to 23.00 per picul; medium, $24.00 to 26.00; good medium, $27.00 to 30.00; fine, $31.00 to 33.00; finest, $34.00 to 36.00; choice, $37.00 to 44.00.

SHANGHAI.—Black teas: The favourable advices of sales of new Monings at home have sent more buyers into the market, and the stock, to which the additions from the river ports are now very scanty, is being slowly absorbed. Settlements have been very irregular; a few first-crop teas that have been stored five and six months have been sold at about a par with their London value; but most of the settlements are still 1½d. to 2d. above last home quotations for similar tea, and we quote the market generally fully one tael up. Settlements have been as follows:—Exchange at 6s. 1d. and freight £3 per ton; 2,500 chests common Oopack and Ningchow at Tls. 18.0.0 to 23.0.0, equal 1s. 1d. to 1s. 4d.; 7,000 chests common Oonam, at Tls. 16.2.5 to 18.6.0, equal 1s. to 1s. 1¼d. Green teas: The effect of the excellent reports and sales of these kinds received from London has been somewhat counteracted by the unsatisfactory tenor of the New York advices. In consequence, buyers have been less anxious to pay the extreme prices previously current, and we quote a drop of fully three taels in finest teas from the highest rates of the season. The purchases made reach a fair total amount, and consist chiefly of medium and fine Moyunes, a larger proportion than before of the purchases being for England. Medium teas have fetched quite up to former prices, and the Pingsueys are relatively dear. The settlements for England show a margin of 10 to 15 per cent. on London sales. Though the season is very early, there can be no doubt now that the total yield will not exceed 380,000 to 400,000 packages, say 23,000,000 to 24,000,000 lbs. The settlements comprise:—22,600 half-chests, fair to fine Moyunes, at Tls. 36.0.0. to 43.5.0; 2,600 half-chests, common to fair Fychows, at Tls. 27.0.0. to 35.5.0; 600 half-chests, fair to fine Teenkais, at Tls. 38.5; 1,800 half-chests, common to fair Pingsueys, at Tls. 31.7.5; 1,500 half-chests, common Shanghai-packed, at Tls. 33.7.5.

HANKOW.—Business in tea had been most meagre in extent, settlements amounting only to 1,500 chests common Oonam at full prices, 300 chests having been shipped on native account, and only 1,500 chests remaining in stock. Quotations were:—Oonams, common, 12.2.0 to 13.0.0, equal to 1s. 0¼d. to 1s. 0½d. per lb.

KIUKIANG.—Black Teas: The only settlement has been that of a small chop of Hankow at the equivalent of Tls. 16½ (equal to 1s.), leaving no stock. The export for the season from this port is 553,000 lbs. below last year's. Green Teas: Only 3,000 packages have been settled at about the equivalent of the Shanghai market, while 17,000 packages have been shipped on by natives to Shanghai. Total arrivals will probably be the same as last year's, say 155,000 packages.

FOOCHOW.—Congou: Upwards of 18,000 chests have changed hands. Prices continue without material change, but the general quality is inferior. Several of the teamen report that the arrivals during the remainder of the season will not exceed 10,000 chests. Souchong: The unsold stock is reduced to little over 1,000 chests. The teamen are advancing in their demands. Oolongs: Nearly 5,000 half-chests have found buyers, at prices which, quality considered, show an advance on previous rates.

CANTON.—No change has taken place, and we have again only to note moderate transactions in Canton-made kinds at about previous prices. Holders of country Congous continue firm in their demands, and the stock remains without alteration; there not being apparent any desire to purchase except at prices greatly below those asked. Of country Greens the 800 packages old tea still remain in stock, and it now appears certain that none of the present season's crop will be directed to this port.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—For a few days subsequent to the departure of last mail holders showed great anxiety to realise and were willing to accept much lower prices. Considerable purchases having been made at a reduction of $20 to $30 per picul, dealers stiffened their demands, which at once checked business, and the advices by the mail of 26th September having caused buyers to be more indisposed to operate, except at reduced rates, prices are again lower. Settlements for the fortnight amount to about 500 bales, of which a considerable quantity has been shipped on native account to America. Supplies have continued on a moderate scale, and the unsold stock (including a large quantity under foreign lien) amounts to nearly 2,000 bales. Quotations are:—Mybash, 1, 2, 33s. 1d. to 34s. 1d. 1, 2, 3, 29s. 10d. to 31s. 9d.; Sinchu, 2, 3, 4, 26s. 6d. to 28s. 5d.; Oshu Best, 31s. 0d. to 32s. 11d.; Oshu Medium, 26s. 6d. to 29s. 1d.; Oshu Inferior, 24s. 7d. to 26s. 1d. Laid down in London.

SHANGHAI.—Mr. Holdsworth's Circular is as follows:—The latest dates received from Europe since my last circular of the 22nd November are by letters to the 11th October, and by telegrams via Galle to the 8th November, and via Kiachta to the 5th idem, the latter reporting very unfavourably of the home market and "war inevitable." The telegrams above referred to caused a total cessation of business for the time; subsequently, the silkmen seeing the determination evinced by foreigners not to purchase unless at a considerable reduction in prices, became very anxious to realise their stocks, and consequently business was transacted, though only to a limited extent, the settlements being estimated at 600 bales, of which fully 200 to 300 bales are on native account. Prices have been irregular, but as the mail is closing they show a decline of fully Tls. 20 to 30 for Tsatlees, Tls. 15 to 20 for Karshing Taysaams, Tls. 20 to 30 for Hainings and Yuenfas, and Tls. 15 to 20 for Hangchow Tsatlees; other classes of silk showing but little change. Rates for Chop 3 Tsatlee remain unaltered, Tls. 515 it is reported having been paid for "Silkworm" Chop No. 3 Tsatlee. The unsold stock is estimated at 3,000 to 4,000 bales, but further supplies are supposed to be close at hand, only waiting for higher prices to rule in this market, when they will be brought forward. From the interior the advices report but a very limited business being transacted, owing to the extremely high prices asked by the producers for their Silks. The estimate for the total crop, given by reliable Chinese, is 40,000 bales.

CANTON.—Transactions have been sufficient to keep prices at nearly the same figures as those at which last settlements were made. The bulk of the settlements of Loongkong and Kowkong are intended for the Indian market. Finer parcels, which are called "Curio" kinds, are attracting some attention, and there are some purchases of this sort reported. Stock of really fine silk is rather scarce. In Re-reeled Cumchook there is but slight change to note. Some parcels have been taken at $515, but the quality is inferior. The native dealers report prices much the same in th country, but with large stocks, for this season of the year, and the approaching Chinese holidays we hope to see a decline in values, unless foreigners operate largely. We give the following as the settlements for the fortnight:—Tsatlee reel, No. 1, $480 to $530: sales 270 bales; Loongkong No. 1, $480 to $495: sales 60 bales; Re-reeled Cumchook, $515 to $530: sales 300 boxes; Waste silk, $45 to $65: 200 piculs.

REPORTS AND CASUALTIES.

HONG KONG.

The American ship Surprise, from New York, Aug. 25, reports, on Oct. 2, in lat. 30 S., long. 23 W., exchanged signals with the British ship Colonial Empire, from London, bound to Sydney, 49 days out; and on Nov. 23, in the Straits of Macassar, fell in with the Dutch schooner Jeanette, short of provisions and water, and supplied her.

The British barque Falcon reports having left the Mersey on July 6. Experienced fine weather down Channel and as far as lat. 48 N., where squally weather was encountered. Light N.E. trades as far as 11 N., and thence had a very tedious time getting to the southward, crossing the equator in 28 W. on Aug. 15. Fresh S.E. trades as far as 28 S., and passed the meridian of the Cape Sept. 11, in 38 S. Met with heavy gales and high seas running down the Easting, and moderate weather from Amsterdam to Anjer, where the anchor was let go on October 21. Proceeded again on the 23rd, and met with light winds with sultry weather, rain, thunder, and hard squalls through Banca Straits. Came up the China sea by the Palawan passage, and while there had strong N.N.E. winds with very heavy sea, continuous rain, thunder, and lightning, &c. Thence moderate weather to Cape Bolanao, and after that strong N.E. gales, with very heavy sea during the remainder of the passage. On November 24 in lat. 8·46 N., long. 116·25 E., spoke the American barque Maud Hellen, from New York, bound for Hong Kong, having been in company with the same vessel at Anjer.

The barque Mikado, the first vessel which has arrived in China waters under the flag of the North German Confederation, arrived here on Dec. 4th. She is a new vessel built and owned in Hamburg. She reports having left the mouth of the Elbe July 24th. Experienced moderate weather in the North Sea and good N.E. trades. Crossed the Equator August 25th in 20 W. Strong S.E. trades as far as 28 S. Passed the meridian of the Cape Sept. 22nd in 42 S. Thence to St. Paul's 14 days, with strong S.S.W. winds. Sighted Dirk Hartog Island on Oct. 19th, and passed through Lumbock Straits on the 27th. Anchored in Basilian Straits Nov. 12th on account of light winds and a strong current, and proceeded next day. Nov. 14th, when in lat. 8 N., long. 122 E., a strong westerly gale sprung up with a high cross sea, and continued until the 18th. On the 15th, being on a lee shore, ran into Iloilo harbour, and anchored until the 22nd. From Cape Bolinao met with fresh N.E. breezes until arrival.

The British ship Syree Singapura, from Bangkok, Oct. 12, reports having experienced a series of terrific gales when off the coast of Manila, from November 17 to 25, in which the bulwarks were completely washed away and deck swept of every movable.

The Prussian ship Avon lost sixteen of her passengers through sickness during the passage from Havana.

The Danish barque Johanna Marie reports having left Hamburg July 2. Crossed the Equator Aug. 10, in 27 W., and passed the meridian of the Cape of Good Hope Sept. 10; St. Paul's and Amsterdam on the 28th. Passed Anjer Oct. 16, and on the 20th, in Banca Straits, spoke the Prussian brig Margot, from Cardiff bound to Hong Kong, 124 days out. Experienced moderate weather to the latitude of Singapore, on the 22nd, but after that a succession of heavy gales. Passed Pulo Sapata Nov. 5, and on the 16th to 17th, when to the southward of Manila, experienced a heavy typhoon, and since that time strong gales, with a tremendous sea.

LEGAL.

IN RE THE BANK OF HINDUSTAN, CHINA, AND JAPAN.

This matter came on to be heard upon a summons taken out by Mr. Ross, who had been the manager of a branch of the Bank of Japan. The bank contracted with Mr. Ross for his services in May, 1867, for three years certain, at the rate of $800 per month, and he was to have a furnished house found for him. In fact, his appointment was guaranteed to him by the bank, which, however, was now in the course of being wound up by the Court. The liquidators offered to release Mr. Ross from his engagements with the company, but he declined that offer, and returned to England. The summons, which was adjourned from chambers into court, asked for an order directing the liquidators to pay Mr. Ross the balance of his expenses for his passage from Yokohama to London, and his salary at the rate of $800 per month from the 31st of May, 1867, to the 30th November, 1867, less the amount received by him on account of the salary, and for directions as to its future payment. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. C. T. Simpson appeared for Mr. Ross, and contended that the contract with him was still subsisting, and the bank were bound to pay him his salary in accordance with it. Mr. Green, Q.C., and Mr. Lindley were for the official liquidators of the bank. The Vice-Chancellor, after some considerable discussion, made an order for payment by the liquidators to Mr. Ross of the sum of £3,000 and his costs, and directed Mr. Ross to stand as a creditor of the bank for the £3,000, with interest at £5 per cent until the payment of the debt.

JONES V. JUST.—CONTRACT CASE.

This was a case as to the alleged warranty of the quality of hemp. The contract—both parties being in London, and the hemp expected to arrive in a vessel—was for a quantity of "Manila hemp," at a price per ton (£38 10s.), nothing being said as to the condition or quality. In point of fact the hemp had been damaged by reason of a wreck in a previous voyage, before it was shipped on the present contract, and the consequence was it was greatly reduced in value. But neither of the parties was aware of this, and neither of them knew anything about the hemp. The plaintiff, a rope manufacturer, had purchased the hemp for ropemaking, and, of course suffered considerably. It was proved that the hemp could not be used for the purposes to which hemp was usually applied—as, for instance, ropemaking—without a large admixture of other hemp, and that it was not worth above three-fourths of the price contracted to be paid. The action being brought by the buyer for an alleged breach of an implied warranty that the hemp was fairly merchantable, the objection was taken that there was no such warranty accepted in law, and that it was enough that the hemp was saleable as hemp. On the other side it was insisted that the sale of hemp did not mean damaged hemp. The learned Judge before whom the case was tried at Liverpool (Mr. Justice Blackburn) directed the jury that upon the contract the purchaser was entitled to expect hemp which was fairly and reasonably merchantable; and that whether it was so or not was for them to determine, because it was a question of degree, dependent upon practical knowledge, and which could not possibly be a matter of law. Upon this the jury found in favour of the plaintiff that the hemp was not reasonably merchantable. Upon this the point of law arose, whether there was any implied warranty that it should be so, subject to which the plaintiff recovered a verdict for £760; and the point now came on to be argued.—Mr. S. Temple, Q.C., and Mr. Charles Russell were for the plaintiff, the purchaser; Mr. Brett, Q.C., and Mr. Holker were for the defendant, the seller.—The argument lasted until the end of the day.—The Court took time to consider their judgment.

IMPORTANT CONTRACT CASE.—DRAKE AND OTHERS V. TAYLOR AND OTHERS.

This case, recently tried in the United States Circuit Court, possesses considerable interest. The plaintiffs were Messrs. Drake, Kleinwort, and Cohen, of London; the defendants, members of the firm of Taylor and Hubbell, of New York, and their assignees. In April last the plaintiffs, through their agent at New York, Simon de Visser, issued a credit authorising drafts on them, on account of Taylor and Hubbell, to the extent of £30,000, against produce, bills of lading for which were to be sent to De Visser. Hubbell agreed to provide funds to meet the drafts. The sum drawn for and accepted by plaintiffs was over £29,000, against a cargo of hemp and sugar per Hotspur from Manila to New York. The bills of lading were sent to De Visser and the cargo insured in New York in Hubbell's name. Ship and cargo were lost on the voyage, whereupon Hubbell demanded the bills of lading of De Visser that he might obtain the sum insured. He delivered to De Visser, in exchange, the following extraordinary document:—

"Received from S. De Visser, &c., the following merchandise (quantity &c. specified), which we agree to hold on storage as the property of Messrs. Drake and Co., with liberty to sell the same and account to S. De Visser, or to them for the proceeds, until the bills drawn by Peele, Hubbell, and Co., or Drake, Kleinwort, and Co., for purchase of said goods shall have been duly provided for. We agree to keep the property insured against fire, policy payable to S. De Visser in case of loss; the intention of this arrangement being to preserve unimpaired the lien of Drake, Kleinwort, and Co., on said property.—Aug. 1, 1867.—H. W. HUBBELL, ROBT. L. TAYLOR."

Whether any additional agreement was made between Hubbell and De Visser on the delivery of the bills of lading was a point in dispute. Hubbell received the bills, and collected, on behalf of himself and Taylor, the insurance, amounting to $200,000, and applied it to paying joint debts of himself and Taylor. The drafts drawn on the plaintiffs were not provided for, and on the 24th of October last, Hubbell and Taylor each made a separate assignment to the other defendants, conveying all his property intact to sell it, and apply the proceeds towards liquidating the debts of the firm. The bill of complaint alleged that the value of the properties in the hands of the assignees was $135,000, that only $50,000 of that amount was the property of Hubbell. It claimed that the plaintiffs had an equitable lien upon the insurance money, and it prayed the court as follows:—First, for an injunction restraining any disposal of the property by the assignees as should not leave in their hands enough to pay them the $260,000; second, for the appointment of a receiver of so much of the assigned estate as shall pay them the $260,000; third, for a decree that plaintiffs are creditors of Taylor individually for the $200,000, and are entitled to be paid before the payment of any debt for which Taylor and Hubbell are jointly liable.

The Court found that the $200,000 having become so mixed up with other moneys that it could not be traced separately, the plaintiffs could have no special lien upon it, and therefore the injunction could not be granted; they were, however, justified in their claim to priority as creditors of Taylor individually to the extent of $200,000, before claims against the joint estate were satisfied. The Court remarked on the strange nature of the paper above described, which purported to be a receipt for goods which all parties knew to have been destroyed.

DIVORCE CASE.—GUTZMER V. GUTZMER AND CRAWFORD.

This was the husband's petition for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent. The respondent traversed the adultery. The co-respondent did not appear. Dr. Swabey appeared for the petitioner, and Dr. Tristram for the respondent. It appeared that the petitioner was an engineer, and married the respondent, then a widow, on November 9, 1856. After the marriage the parties resided in Liverpool, and there were three children, the issue of the marriage, born. They resided together in Liverpool until 1861, when the petitioner took an engagement as an engineer on board one of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamers. In that vessel he went out to China, and was absent from England until October, 1866. His pay was £12 per month, and the respondent had the half of it the whole time he was away. On returning to England he found his wife living at Stockport. After residing with her there for some weeks the petitioner went on business to Liverpool, where he remained for some days. On his return to Stockport he found that his wife had eloped with the co-respondent, taking with them all the furniture and the children. They were traced to Bolton-le-Moor, where they put up at the Temperance-hotel, and occupied the same bed-room. They were afterwards traced to a house in Bark-street, Little Bolton, where they were living as man and wife. These facts having been proved, the Court pronounced a decree nisi.

CAPTAIN LECKIE, R.N.—The services of the late Captain Charles Taylor Leckie, of the Royal Navy, who died lately at Edinburgh, are as follows:—Entered the service as midshipman, 1834; served on board her Majesty's ship Portland, in the Mediterranean, until March 22, 1837; West Indies, June 1841; in China, from December 1841 to June 1843; mate in her Majesty ship Cornwallis, in China and East Indies, from June 1843 to November 1844. Promoted to lieutenant on November 12, 1845, by Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Bart., G.C.B., with a high compliment in the presence of the officers of her Majesty's ship Hibernia. Promoted to commander March 24, 1854, after having been acting-commander for eighteen months on the West Coast of Africa. Commanded Her Majesty's ship Teazer, tender to Penelope, for two years, and was at the destruction of Lagos, December 1851. When in command of Her Majesty's ship Ferret, on the West Coast of Africa, from October 20, 1854, to February 9, 1856, was ordered to release a British subject worked in chains by natives of Nunez River. This was accomplished without force, but with difficulty, after taking the Ferret to the head of that dangerous river. For this service he received the thanks of the French and English merchants, the Governor of Sierra Leone, and the approval of Commander Adams. Assisted the Governor, Colonel O'Connor, to quell disturbances at the Gambia, and captured the only slaver taken at that period under difficulties at the head of the river Pongas. Commanded Her Majesty's ship Fury from July 28, 1855, to December 12, 1858, and convoyed a gunboat to China. Was engaged in the Fury's boats in the actions of April 25 and 27, 1857, in Escap Creek, Canton river. At the battle of Fatshau, June 1, 1857, and one of the lead of the advance in attack on the front, also of the first and second fleet of junks. Was mentioned in the despatches of Vice-Admiral Sir M. Seymour, G.C.B., and by Commodore Sir H. Keppel, K.C.B. Was sent to Ceylon during the Indian mutiny, and received the thanks of Sir Henry Ward, the governor, for his services. Was mentioned by Vice-Admiral Sir M. Seymour for his conduct at the capture of the Peiho forts and advance to Tientsin, in 1858. Promoted to captain September 17, 1858. Was afterwards employed against pirates, and commanded boats of the Magicienne and Fury against a pirate town, near Swatow, and landed his force. Destroyed a fleet of twelve pirate junks in the Canton river which obstructed the trade of Macao, and had the gunboats Firm and Bustard under his orders on this occasion. Commanded her Majesty's ship Leopard, from October 10, 1862, for four years in China and Japan, and did the duty of senior officer at each of the ports. Was in the action of Simonoseki, for which he received the Legion d'Honneur, and was honourably mentioned in the despatches. The Leopard was paid off September 30, 1866. Captain Leckie was thirty-three years in Her Majesty's service, and had the China medal and clasps for Fatshar, 1837, and Peiho, 1858.

REEFS IN PHILIPPINE ARCHIPELAGO.—The following communication from Captain Fagg, in command of the Spanish steamer Sud Oucie, running between Manila, Cebu, and Yloilo, has been forwarded for publication:—"Reef off St. Fernando, in lat. about 16.35 N., lon. 0.45 W. of Manila. This reef I passed one morning under full steam, when my attention was called by seeing the bottom quite clearly. I immediately stopped the engines and took the following bearings:—South point of the isthmus of San Fernando S. 50 E. and the church of San Juan to the northward E. 10 N. These bearings are, of course, only approximations. I sounded first in 5 fathoms, continued my course dead slow to the southward, and had 5, 6, 6, 7, 9, and from thence out of soundings to 50 fathoms. Another reef, also, exists to the southward of the island of Sibuyan, bearing from the Cresta del Gallo N.E. four to five miles. I have several times gone across this bank, lying immediately on my track from Romblon to Zebu. The least water I have found on it has been 5½ fathoms. On Wednesday, July the 24th, when returning from the village of Tibia, where I had been to try and salve the cargo of the schooner Isabel Segundo, lost on a reef of rocks that extends to the N. and N.E. of the island of Batbatan, I found myself suddenly on a reef of coral, the bottom plainly visible. I immediately stopped the engines, and took the bearings of the pueblo or village of Nalupa, distant about two to two and a-half miles E. by S. Some of the rocks seemed awash, and where the steamer was I had 1½ fathom soundings varying. This reef is well known to the small coasters on this coast, although not marked in the charts.—Yloilo, island of Panay, July 31, 1867."

THE CHINA TREATY.—A sub-committee, appointed by the Tynemouth Chamber to consider the proposed revision of the treaty with China, recommend that in no case, as regards shipping dues, shall British subjects be required to pay higher dues than the subjects of the Empire; that, as regards the case of any British merchant vessel being concerned in smuggling, the owner of the vessel shall not suffer penalties unless it can be shown that such owner was interested in or cognisant of such contraband transaction; that, as regards the proposed penalty for the captain of any ship presenting an "incorrect" manifest to the Chinese Customs' authorities, the penalty shall only attach where it has been done intentionally; that with regard to the penalty for neglecting to lodge the ship's papers within twenty-four hours after arrival, the penalty shall only attach where it is proved there has been wilful neglect. With regard to the penalty for opening a hatch before the Customs' permit has been obtained, the committee suggest that, instead of the penalty being imperative, it be left to the authorities, with the consul to waive the penalty where circumstances justify such a course. As regards the prohibitory clause against British ships carrying pulse and bean cake from Tungchaw and Newchwang, the committee recommend that the clause should be expunged, as various members of the chamber have had vessels engaged in such trade without either let or hindrance on the part of the Chinese authorities. The sub-committee make other suggestions, and conclude with remarking on the necessity for the British Government seizing the opportunity of the renewal of the treaty to insist on British ships being permitted at Chinese ports, and in Chinese waters, the same privileges given to foreign flags in British ports and British waters. The report was adopted by the meeting, and ordered to be forwarded to Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

JAPANESE CONSUL AT SAN FRANCISCO.—The New York Observer says that Charles Walcott Brooks has been regularly appointed Consul-General for the Empire of Japan in San Francisco city. This is said to be the first appointment of the kind ever made. The Government of Japan confers exclusive powers upon its agent in a letter of instructions which accompanies his commission. The document was issued by a Council of State, composed of seven Princes of the Empire, who constitute the governing power in Japan since the abdication of the Tycoon. The latter says, in substance, that as the United States was the first Power to conclude a treaty with Japan, opening the land to foreign commerce, a representative of Japan should be located in that country and at San Francisco, as the city of America nearest to Japan and with which there will be the most frequent intercourse; and since the establishment of a steamship line between San Francisco and Yokohama it is expected that trade and friendship will increase between the two countries and will largely augment the travel of the Japanese to America; the Council, therefore, judge it best to create a Consulship at San Francisco.

APPOINTMENTS.—The following appointments have been gazetted:—William Keswick to be member of the Legislative Council, Hong Kong; Francis Gerhard Myburgh, Esq., now Her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa, to be Her Majesty's Consul at Hiogo and Osaka; Lachland Fletcher, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Consul at Yedo and Kanagawa; William Willis, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Yedo and at Kanagawa; and John Frederick Lowder, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Hiogo and Osaka; Sydney Locock, Esq., now Secretary to Her Majesty's Legation in Japan, to be Secretary to Her Majesty's Legation at the Hague;

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 24.

According to a statistical review of our trade in 1866 the general import amounted in that year to 528 millions of guilders, the import for consumption 425 millions, and the general export 426 millions of guilders. The import augmented in that year about 6 per cent., the import for consumption 5 per cent., and the transit 4 per cent. The import of cotton yarns augmented 7 millions, rice 6 millions, cotton manufactures 6 millions, raw cotton 5 millions, and coffee 3 millions. The export decreased for cotton 13 millions, sugar 4 millions, but cotton manufactures increased 19 millions, cotton yarns 4 millions, refined sugar 4 millions. The imports from England amounted to 147 millions of guilders, being 8 millions more than in 1865, and the export to England 120 millions, being 3 millions less than in 1865.

At the yard of Messrs. C. Gips and Zonen, at Dordrecht, another steam screw man-of-war will be built for account of the Japan Government. You will remember that some time ago the said shipbuilders delivered the Kai-yoo-maroo.

According to a Ministerial report, the Minister of the Colonies intends to build four iron-clads for the maritime service in India, besides some monitors; the latter are especially destined to defend the harbours.

On the 9th July the Trading Company opened for the first time a public tendering for freights to convey produce from India to Dutch harbours. Tenders were offered for 33 vessels, the freights varying from 93f. to 120f. for Amsterdam; 89f. to f.104.84 for Rotterdam; 91f. to f.109.43 for Dordrecht; 90f. to f.104.84 for Schiedam; 94f. to f.104.84 for Middelburg. The Trading Company chartered only two vessels for Amsterdam, viz.: Nederland and Orange, at 93f.; Goede Verwachting, at f.94.79; for Schiedam, Erasmus, at 90f.; for Middelburg, Honigby, at f.94.89.

The military contingent for the East India army, which will be sent from here, is fixed at 2,000 soldiers, including 312 artillery, and 140 cavalry.

COMMERCIAL.

COFFEE.—The market is firm under the influence of the declaration of the Dutch Trading Company that at the sale of February only 135,000 b. will be offered, against 172,568 b. in February, 1867. There was some demand for consumption and for export, but there was little offered, and the prices are very firm. 600 to 700 b. Java (Tjilatjap) No. 23 of the November sale have been taken for America at 44c.; and of private imports 500 b. ex Stad Dockum very good ordinary greenish at 41½c.

SUGAR (RAW).—With some imports for private account; and 2,500 b. Java, ex Priam and Annie Story, were sold at private terms. The market value is 1f. under the November sale.

RICE.—The arrivals from Java were very important. 6,720 b. Kandanghauer table, ex Jason; 5,500 b. Java, per Priam; 6,147 b. do., ex Koerier; 12,015 pic. Sourabaya, ex Java; 2,172 b. Java, ex Finella; were sold at private terms. The valuation is 9½f. to 10½f., according to quality.

SPICES.—Quiet; 16,000 b. Pepper imported from Java, per Priam. The quotation is for Nutmegs 1a, 76 to 80c.; ditto Mace, 115c.; Cloves No. 2, 28c.; and Pepper, 17c.

TEA.—Quiet, but firm, with good demand for consumption.

TOBACCO.—On the 30th inst. will be offered for sale 5,640 b., and on the 13th February 11,083 b. Java, of different trade marks.

DRUGS.—With a trifling business. For 350 kilo. Bourbon Vanila 1½f. to 9f. was paid, according to quality.

ARRACK.—The market was firm, but without transactions.

INDIGO.—With more demand for fine sorts, but the stock is very unimportant.

COTTON.—1,400 b. Java were sold for speculation at very firm prices.

MANUFACTURES with little transactions.

TIN.—The prices are unaltered; 1,400 slabs Banca were sold at 52½f.; 100 slabs Billiton, 51¼; and 500 slabs floating for Yedo.

HIDES.—1,435 p. Sourabaya (damaged) ex Herald of the Morning were sold from 41½c. to 52c.

MONEY AND STOCK MARKET.—There was a somewhat better tone in the markets, and an increased business took place at somewhat improved prices. Home stock was higher. The transactions are, however, not yet of so extensive a character as they were in the early part of January. The rate of discount at the Bank is still unaltered; the demand was not large, whilst in the open market the supply was very full. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 53¼; Three per Cents., 63; Four per Cents., 83½; Trading Company, 135¾; Netherlands Bank, 233; East India Comp. of Adminis., 95.

'CHANGE.—London, 3 mo., f.11.83½; 2 mo., f.11.84½; short, f.11.90. Paris, 3 mo., 47f.; 2 mo., f.47.05; short, f.47.25. Hambro', 3 mo., f.34.95; 2 mo., 35f.; short, f. 35.20; Bremen, 3 mo., 190f.

RUSSIA, GERMANY, &c.

HAMBURG, JAN. 24.

As but little more than two short months have to elapse before the 1st of April—nomen et omen—when it will become imperative on all German vessels to hoist the Federal flag as their national colours, the Chancellor of the Bund has circularised the governments of the German maritime States on the subject, requesting them to take the needful steps with their respective shipowners to show proper honour to the new flag, which has already been recognised in the usual diplomatic manner by all the maritime States of Europe, and most of those in in other parts of the globe In pursuance of this communication the Senate of this city has issued a decree calling upon all shipowners hitherto entitled to wear the Hamburg flag to instruct their captains and skippers, especially those now absent on distant voyages, to conform to the new order of things, and to give them positive orders to use exclusively on and after the 1st of April next the German flag, printed and coloured copies of which may be obtained from the Board of Trade.

In a former letter I gave your readers an outline of the Federal law for the regulation of the German consulates in foreign countries. Only half a dozen consuls have as yet been appointed, chiefly in the Levant—with the exception of Herr von Brandt, hitherto Prussian Consul-General in Japan—and the commercial world are wondering why the others are not yet named. But some unforeseen difficulties have arisen, which have to be overcome, and hence the delay. When the negotiations were pending this time last year, it was announced here with a loud flourish of trumpets as a great concession to the Hanseatic cities on the part of Prussia, that Hamburg and Bremen, who have a numerous and efficient staff of consuls in all parts of the globe, should be consulted and have a weighty voice in the appointment of the Federal consuls. But Count von Bismark, who has more knowledge and experience of the diplomatic than of the consular service, got a crotchet into his head that for the due performance of the official duties, the honorary or unsalaried consuls, who are to be selected from among the German merchants established at the port in question, shall be supported by a paid chancellor who has studied the law and taken the degree of at least LL.D.—or as it is called in German parlance Juris utriusque Doctor—at one of the German universities, or been employed in the service of the state to which he belongs in certain capacities specially enumerated in the Bill. Senator Kirchenpauer, the Hamburg Plenipotentiary, and his colleague for Bremen, vainly endeavoured to persuade the Count to abandon this crotchet, which they maintained could never work well in practice, as it would subject such consuls to the humiliation of feeling that they were no longer independent officials, but under the control of a subordinate, who under the plea of having studied the law might make frivolous objections to the legality of his acts and decisions. It now appears that these predictions are fully verified, and that there is a hitch somewhere, which accounts for the delay in making the appointments. I learn from reliable authority that several of the most eminent German merchants residing in foreign ports of importance—among whom are some in China—perfectly able and willing to undertake the consular duties without any remuneration and from pure patriotic motives, have declined the honour of the appointment if they are not thought capable of fulfilling the duties of the office—which some of them have done for many years to the perfect satisfaction of their respective Governments—but be placed under the watch and ward of a paid subordinate who may cavil at their decisions as illegal and be officially constituted as a spy on their actions.

The Hamburg Correspondent publishes some official statistics of the navigation of this port in the year just elapsed, in anticipation of the tables printed at a later date by the Chamber of Commerce, from which it appears that the number of vessels that arrived here from all over-sea countries was 5,055 of 636,100 lasts of 3 English tons each, and the number that sailed was 5,071 of 637,583 lasts, and manned by 63,858 men, being as nearly as possible in the proportion of one man to 10 lasts, or 30 tons. As compared with the navigation of the preceding year there is a trifling falling off in the number of arrivals of 130 vessels, but this is more than compensated by an increase of the tonnage, amounting to above 46,000 lasts, or 138,000 tons, showing a very decided tendency towards the general use of larger vessels instead of small ones. This tendency has been observable for several years past, as may be seen by comparing the annual tables, but was never so strongly apparent as in the present instance. Some curious alterations in the form of these navigation tables have become necessary from altered circumstances. Among others, the arrivals under the Prussian, Hanoverian, and Schleswig-Holstein flags, that in the specification table of former years were given separately, are now lumped together under Prussia; whilst in the tables of next year not only will those three flags disappear again, but also those of Hamburg, Bremen, Lubeck, Mecklenburg, and Oldenburg, as well as the privileged separate flags of the ports of Rostock and Wismar, belonging to Mecklenburg-Schwerin, which for the future will all merge into the black, white, and red new federal German flag, and be classified under one single head.

The arrivals from the Far East are a few more than in 1866, being 9 from China, 4 from Netherlands India, 5 from the Navigators' and the Sandwich Islands, and 22 from Singapore, Bangkok, Baly Badong, and Rangoon, making 40 vessels against 37 in 1866.

COMMERCIAL.

A thaw having set in, navigation has recommenced, and our markets exhibit a little more life, though there is no alteration to notice in prices. An arrival from China has brought 2,700 chests of cassia lignea, which come to hand at a favourable moment and cannot fail to find buyers at remunerative rates. In spelter no transactions are reported, but the market is firm. Money market is easy. The latest returns of the Bank of Hamburg show an increase of more than a million marks Banco in the value of silver bars in their cellars. Discount 1¾ per cent.

HONG KONG GRIEVANCES.

WE understand that a number of owners of land in Hong Kong who are at present in this country, merchants, and others interested in the welfare of the colony, intend shortly to hold a meeting in London to discuss the various questions that have lately been agitated with regard to taxation, &c. This movement is independent of the proceedings of the recently formed "Hong Kong Association;" but we presume that a committee will be elected to take such action as may be considered desirable, and that the two bodies will eventually act in concert. Among other propositions likely to be brought forward, we believe one is to the effect that some competent person should be appointed special agent for the colony to represent its interests in London. We have received several letters prompted by the article under this heading in our issue of the 10th instant, and in another column we publish two, the writers of which discuss the question from different points of view. That of "D.G." tells its own story, and requires no comment; while "MERCURIO" appears to be in some degree actuated by a misapprehension of the tenour of the article above alluded to. It was not our intention, as "MERCURIO" seems to infer, to lay all the miseries under which the colony groans to the sole charge of the present Governor. On the contrary, we have always recognised the fact that the disorganised state in which Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL found the colony impelled him to legislation of an exceptional character; still, we wish to point out that although many of the oppressive measures complained of originated from causes beyond his control, he has the power of putting an end to such of them as are clearly unjust, and should lose no time in doing so. The taxation of untenanted houses precisely illustrates this. It was no fault of Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL'S that he found the Colonial Treasury empty; or that an increased scale of taxation was requisite to meet the calls on it; or that, owing to the impossibility of recovering arrears of taxes from tenants, it became necessary to collect them from the landlords. But he will incur a lasting reproach, unless he can devise same plan—and that speedily—for the exemption of uninhabited houses from the impost.

JAPAN.

THE telegram received via Galle, announcing that a "political revolution" had occurred in Japan, and that the SHIOGOON had resigned, has been in most respects confirmed by intelligence conveyed by the Pacific mail steamer dated Yokohama, December 6, and received here on the 13th inst. This asserts not only the resignation of the Shiogoon, but that in future the Government would be administered by the MIKADO himself, with the aid of a Council of Daimios. If we accept this account as correct it implies not merely the resignation of STOTSBASHI, and a consequent change of dynasty as regards the Shiogoonate, but a complete abolition of the office, and a full re-assumption by the MIKADO of his rightful power and privileges as absolute sovereign; and the Council spoken of will perhaps be an amalgamation of the Great Council of State, the Gorogio, and the Gosankay—in fact, a sort of select House of Peers. This is a "political revolution" indeed, and in our present state of uncertainty as to its end and object, any speculations as to its effect on the foreign relations of the country would be futile. It is far from being unlikely that a further re-modelling of the Treaties may be rendered necessary; and it is greatly to be wished that our Minister may at once adopt some defined policy with regard to the establishment of free intercourse with such of the DAIMIOS as desire it. So long as the SHIOGOON was an actual and recognised power, there was nothing for it but to accept his proffered friendship, and make the best of whatever concessions could be obtained from him; but if the Shiogoonate is to be swept away, it behoves us to see that the monopoly that has so vexatiously restricted our intercourse with the nation at large falls with it.

FIRES AT HONG KONG.

"WHY is there no Fire Brigade in Hong Kong?" was the question asked on all sides when a large portion of the town of Victoria was laid in ruins by the fire of the 30th October, 1866; and notwithstanding the sad lesson conveyed by that disaster, it is a question that still remains without a satisfactory answer. Now that another great fire has occurred, involving a loss to the colony, directly and indirectly, of something like a quarter of a million sterling, perhaps something will be done; but it is a pity that the residents did not awake a little sooner to the fact that "prevention is better than cure." Volunteer fire brigades have been formed at other ports, and have worked satisfactorily; why not in Hong Kong? Not, we should think, because the energy requisite to form one is wanting, for on each of these sad occasions energy enough has been manifested; but being misdirected and void of control, it was useless, and in many cases did more harm than good. What with an unpopular Government, an empty treasury, a discontented populace, and a depressed trade, the colonists are truly in an evil plight at present, and it may seem an inopportune moment to take them to task for their shortcomings; but the truth is that neither poverty nor misgovernment (supposing such to exist) can be admitted as valid excuses for such a spectacle of utter helplessness as they have presented to the world on these two occasions. If the leading residents, with the co-operation of the representatives of the various fire-assurance companies, cannot originate a movement by which the able-bodied residents generally would be enrolled as members of a volunteer brigade, why cannot Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL be requested to take the initiative? It used to be jokingly said, with reference to oft-recurring railway accidents, that no line would be safe until one of its directors had been smashed; let us hope that the spectacle of a Governor half drowned may lead to some reform in the management of fires at Hong Kong, and inaugurate a new and improved system of "fighting the flames." Unlike many of the institutions that Anglo-Saxon energy raises and supports in China, a fire-brigade would pay. At present, fire assurance rates in Hong Kong are enormous; on certain classes of property they are no less than five times as high as in London. A properly organised brigade, by reducing the risk of loss by fire, would necessarily lead to some modification of the present scale.

FROM St. Petersburg we have, in the guise of an item of China news, a statement equally remarkable for its vagueness and its audacity. The journals of that city publish intelligence said to have been received from Taschkend, in Tartary, dated the beginning of December, and asserting that "military measures are being taken by China which are interpreted by the Russian correspondents as being directed against Russia." The same advices allege that China has contracted a treaty with the Turkomans, and that fortifications are being constructed on the Russian frontier. The meaning of this—if it have any meaning at all—is, either that Russia is on the watch for an excuse for a further "rectification" of her Mongolian frontier, and that accordingly some harmless movements of troops, or necessary repairs to fortifications are interpreted by these "correspondents" into a casus belli; or else, that Russia has already shown a design to make further encroachments on Chinese territory, and that some military precautions have been taken to check the movement.

A DEPUTATION of merchants connected with the Straits Settlements is, we believe, in formation for the purpose of representing to the SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES the injurious nature of several Acts lately passed by the GOVERNOR and Legislative Council at Singapore.

WE beg to call the attention of our readers to the programme of the Telegraph and Courier Service, via Kiachta, for 1868. The line will be opened in London on Tuesday, the 18th February.

TREATY REVISION AND THE APPOINTMENT OF MR. BURLINGHAME.

WE now resume our consideration of the proposed alterations in the treaty, a subject invested with fresh interest by an important item of news that comes to us from St. Petersburg. It is announced that the United States' Minister at the Russian Court has received official advices from Peking, to the effect that the Chinese Government has decided to send a special embassy to Europe, in connection with the impending revision of the treaties. The mission, however, is not to be entrusted to native hands; Mr. ANSON BURLINGHAME, the United States' Minister in China, has been appointed special Envoy for the purpose, and will leave for Europe without delay, accompanied, no doubt, by a Chinese suite. It is added that the arrangement is approved of by all the other foreign Ministers at Peking, among whom Mr. BURLINGHAME is very popular. The despatch of a duly accredited Chinese diplomatist to Europe—could one of sufficient enlightenment, combined with suitable standing, be found—would indeed be a matter for congratulation, inasmuch as the observations and experience of a really intelligent native envoy could hardly fail to produce a beneficial effect at Peking on his return, however trifling might be the immediate results of his mission; but how any good can possibly accrue from the visit at the present juncture of a foreign Ambassador, is exceedingly difficult to see. Not that we can take exception to the selection of Mr. BURLINGHAME, either from a personal or a political point of view. It is, we believe, perfectly true that he has made himself deservedly popular, not only with his official colleagues, but with all who have come in contact with him. It is obvious, too, that neither the British nor the French representative at Peking could return to his own Court as the representative of China; besides, it is not long since England and France were at open war with China, while the United States remained neutral; and if therefore the services of a foreign diplomatist in Europe are required at all, an American citizen is best of all qualified to render them. But, cui bono? The treaty was made at Tientsin, why should it not be revised there? The United States, we may fairly presume, require amendments to their treaty, precisely similar to those we require to ours; and not a few of the demands made by either nation are likely to be contested by the Chinese Government. How then can Mr. BURLINGHAME properly represent both sides of the question, so as to do justice alike to his own countrymen and his temporary clients, the Chinese? Again, supposing him to be able to reconcile (to his own satisfaction) these conflicting interests, on what basis can he open negotiations with any European Government—say, for example, our own? It would seem very unlikely that Lord STANLEY, in the absence of all data, and without the opportunity of consulting Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, would consent to open any discussion here with reference to the necessary revision. Our Minister at Peking has, or ought to have, proper authority to negotiate for a revised treaty there, where the joint experience of the several foreign Ministers, the recommendations of the Consuls, the demands of the merchants, and the knowledge of the Customs' officials, can all be brought, as it were, into a focus, under the influence of which something like a satisfactory arrangement might be accomplished.

Some of the requirements embodied in the several memorials will very likely be met at once with a flat refusal. Such, for instance, as the demand for permission to work mines in the interior; for when so much repugnance is shown to the mere travel or residence of foreigners anywhere beyond the limits of the ports, how much more aversion will probably be displayed to what would appear like a taking possession, not of the surface only, but the very bowels of the land? Then, as regards railways and telegraphs. A request for the admission of these on a small scale, as an experiment, might have received consideration; but the Hong Kong memorialists boldly demand permission "to construct railways in all parts "of the empire and obtain an Act giving any company formed "to carry out such undertaking all needful privileges," and "to carry telegraphs through any part of the country." It is not easy to conceive the Chinese Government passing an "Act" giving to "any company" the privilege, say, of making compulsory purchases of land along a track some hundreds of miles in length, and ejecting peasant landowners by the thousand. Such sweeping demands as these, are certain to be rejected; but a concession might be asked for a single short line, which if it once proved a success would be the sure forerunner of a gradual extension of the system. We must not make too big a beginning, or we shall frighten the Chinese into a determined and lasting opposition. Even as it is, they may perhaps fail to appreciate the perfection with which we manage our railways at home, and may class the reckless destruction of property—gigantic works begun and abandoned—defrauded creditors, and ruined shareholders—among those "blessings of civilisation" that they can for the present dispense with. But if these are points on which we must prepare for some disappointment, there are other suggestions of such undoubted propriety that their fulfilment should be sternly insisted on—among which we may instance the necessity of putting Protestant missionaries on an equal footing with Romanists, and the entire remodelling of the Articles relating to cases of Customs' seizure. These, if literally interpreted, at present admit of the absolute confiscation of vessels and cargoes when such measures are wholly unmerited, and they cannot be perto remain in the revised treaty.

Much more might be written on this and kindred subjects, but there must be a limit to our remarks. Before closing, however, we would once again revert to what we have already alluded to as a noteworthy feature in these memorials, namely, that they all agree in taking a hopeful view of the future of the China trade, provided the suggestions they contain are carried out. We would remind the memorialists that their trade needs reforms—and reforms of a vigorous nature too—from within, as well as from without. New concessions, wider fields of enterprise, additional facilities, lighter imposts—these alone will not set the China trade on its legs again. It was a flourishing trade in the olden time, when hampered by tenfold the restrictions that are now so loudly complained of; for then the operations of the merchants were conducted on sound principles. Commercial integrity and commercial prosperity then went hand in hand. If China speculators—merchants no longer, in the legitimate sense of the term—persist in their late insane career, no amount of "treaty revision" can save the once-honoured China trade from complete ruin and disgrace. In order to avert this it must be clearly understood, once for all, that such practices as "salting" invoices, and "hypothecating" constituents' goods, are incompatible with honest trading. The first is near akin to fraud; the second, to put it in plain English, is an act of illegal pawning, and, as such, is not very widely removed from felony. These, and other malpractices that of late have crept into the trade, must be rooted out. How is this to be accomplished? The voice of public opinion, and the power of the press, has done much towards it; but something more is required—some internal influence and control. In an admirably written article in the January number of St. Paul's, entitled "Business at the Present Day," an excellent suggestion, bearing on this point, is put forth. The writer shows how, in former times, the ancient guilds and companies not only promoted the interests of merchants, but regulated their actions. No one could then enjoy repute as a merchant without being a member of a guild, and such membership was in itself a guarantee of experience, probity, and responsibility. Things are changed now, and these guilds have long ceased to exercise any control over our commerce; but why cannot the Chambers of Commerce take their place?—or, at least, to a certain extent, perform similar functions? As it is, SMITH, BROWN, or JONES, being ambitious to became a "tai-pan," adds "and Co." to his name—announces in the local prints that he "has this day established himself"—gets a little business together, persuades native merchants that he is worthy of credit, and soon develops into a full-blown mercantile firm—speculating largely, without either prudence to guide or capital to back him. Such traffic is of course utterly hollow, and must inevitably collapse at the first breath of an adverse wind. It ought not to be possible, and would not be, if Chambers of Commerce properly fulfilled their mission. Let the Chambers frame stringent rules for the conduct of business; let every deviation from these, when satisfactorily proved, be a signal for the expulsion of the offender, whose dishonour otherwise taints the whole body; let it be a sine qua non that every person who aspires to be recognised as a merchant or mercantile agent be a member of the Chamber, and we shall soon see an improvement in the morale of the China trade. Firms failing to comply with this requisition should be tabooed—Chinese should be warned not to give them credit; European houses not to employ them as agents; banks not to recognise their existence. Chambers of Commerce, under this plan, instead of being mere associations for the protection of commercial interests generally, would become mercantile tribunals of almost unlimited power. We repeat, that the need of some internal reform, such as we have here indicated, is urgent; and we recommend it to the consideration of our readers as being worthy of at least as much attention as they have recently devoted to the subject of treaty revision.

THE CIVIL SERVICE IN CHINA AND JAPAN.

THE letter in our lsst issue from "H.K.G.," on the culpable neglect manifested by the Civil Service Commissioners with regard to one of the most important branches of the service, is well worthy of notice. The advantage of encouraging the acquirement of the languages of China and Japan by candidates for official appointments in those countries cannot well be over estimated, and although the attainment of a good practical knowledge of either language is confessedly a work of several years, there is no earthly reason why a commencement should not in all cases be made before leaving this country. That the commissioners should systematically discountenance such a course seems almost incredible; yet "H.K.G." assures us not only that a knowledge of Chinese on the part of the candidates is not recognised, even as a supplementary subject of examination, but that even when it exists it is totally ignored. This is a display of official imbecility that would be absurd, were it not likely to be fraught with such serious consequences. It is daily becoming more necessary that all members of the diplomatic and consular services in China should possess a knowledge of the native tongue. Such knowledge is far more readily acquired if the study be commenced and a groundwork formed, while the learner is going through a regular course of education at home. It is far easier for a young man to begin a difficult study like Chinese under an experienced European tutor, than for him to commence it under a native who knows not a syllable of any foreign language, nor is able to tell a noun substantive from a verb. And under this system the Government employé is expected to take kindly to a most barbarous idiom in a highly oppressive climate, where he has other duties to perform for several hours daily. No difficulty can arise in making a commencement before leaving England, for a Professor of Chinese has long been attached to King's College, and the chair is ably filled at the present time. In what more legitimate and useful way can he be employed than in preparing our future representatives in China for the career they are entering upon? The truth is, that these Civil Service Commissioners may do very well to examine into the fitness of candidates for the Customs or Post-office, but they should not be allowed to interfere with Eastern appointments at all. The examinations for these should be under totally different management—a much higher class of attainments, including at least a rudimentary knowledge of Chinese being required. As regards Japanese, nothing can of course be said at present; but with so many intelligent Japanese in England, we do not despair of seeing at no very distant date the requisite facilities for teaching that language also. The entire question deserves the careful consideration of the Foreign-office.

IRRIGATION IN CEYLON.

THE much vexed question of irrigation in Ceylon appears to be approaching a satisfactory settlement. The scheme propounded by Sir HERCULES ROBINSON as the mouthpiece of the Executive will, if effectually and systematically carried out, go far to remove those drawbacks which have hitherto militated against successful grain cultivation in the island, and add to an almost inalculable extent to the advancement of commercial interests. A broad principle has been laid down to commence with, that all works necessary for establishing a complete and effective system of irrigation are to be constructed at the expense of the Government, which is to be reimbursed by easy instalments extending over a period of ten years; thus modifying the proposition of the sub-committee appointed to report upon the subject, which was to the effect that the expenses of works costing less than £100 were to be defrayed by the Government, while the cost of works amounting to more than that sum was to be borne by the districts enjoying the benefits conferred by their construction. Upon this point our opinion coincides decidedly with that of the Government in opposition to the sub-committee, it being obvious that the latter plan, in addition to being cumbersome, and to a certain extent illiberal, would be productive of endless disputes between those districts where the works would be constructed by the Government and those having themselves to bear the burden of their establishment and maintenance. Again, it is evident that, were the suggestion of the sub-committee adopted, the Executive would be frequently called upon to authorise the construction of works in places where they were really not required, and thus the Colonial Exchequer would have a burden imposed upon it with no benefit to the community accruing in return. On the contrary, Sir HERCULES ROBINSON'S plan secures a just distribution of payments falling equally upon the districts improved by the operation of the scheme. We fear, however, that the estimate of £20,000 fixed as the probable annual cost resembles the original estimate for the railway in respect of being somewhat under the mark. This is a matter demanding careful consideration as the elaborate series of calculations made by His EXCELLENCY, which show that after the tenth year the scheme should be self-supporting, will, if the amount expended should prove in advance of the estimate, fall to the ground. We perceive that the arrangements for carrying out the plan are to be placed under the control of the Board of Works, a mode of action evincing praiseworthy economy, and which, we have no doubt, will meet with universal approval as rendering unnecessary the organisation of a special administrative body entailing a large expenditure of the public funds. Reserving the one question we have referred to, namely, that of cost, we have nothing but praise to bestow upon this liberal and comprehensive scheme, which more than counterbalances the many shortcomings that have been justly laid to the charge of the Government. It is unnecessary to add one word to what has been urged again and again in these columns, with reference to the advantages which the completion of an irrigation system will confer upon the colony by the re-establishment of grain cultivation. This effected, the one great drawback to commercial advancement will have been removed, an impetus given to extended enterprise, and a road to certain ultimate prosperity fairly thrown open to the community.

THE NORTH CHINA INSURANCE COMPANY.

MESSRS. ASHTON and Co., the London agents of the North China Insurance Society, have issued a circular in reference to the proposed change of the agency for the next term, 1869-71. We have already stated that this step is a very unadvisable one on the part of the directors and shareholders, and the circular will afford the shareholders important information, which will probably induce them to reconsider the resolution arrived at at the meeting on the 18th November. The following is an extract from the circular:—

"We commenced this agency in 1863, and, up to the present time the premiums have increased nine-fold, and our own contributions have amounted to considerably over a quarter of the total amount for the whole period.

"Remuneration by a percentage must necessarily stimulate exertion to the utmost, and prosperity as the result, is a bad reason for a change in management. It is said that a salaried secretary, with the necessary staff, would save money, and the approximated estimate is mentioned as £3,000 to £3,500; but there are incidents belonging to a 'London Office,' which if taken into account would increase the estimate some fifty per cent.

"The other reason alleged for the change is that merchants do not like to expose their business by effecting insurance through another merchant. This appears to us a very weak objection, but whatever force there may be in it must apply to every assurance office, we believe, in the world, since all have merchant directors, who overlook, more or less, current business.

"We have put this estimate before many persons well competent to judge, and all agree in the total amount very nearly, though differing as to particular items."

Secretary, Treasurer, and Underwriter, combined in one person, salary per annum	£3,000
Three Directors, to form a Consulting Board, being Shareholders, as proposed	600
Three Clerks	300
Offices, Rent, Coals, Gas, &c.	500
Stationery, Books, &c., &c., &c.	200
Total ...	£4,600

We understand that Mr. J. THORNE has addressed a letter to Messrs. ASHTON and Co. in reply to their circular, in which he endeavours to uphold the resolution and views of the shareholders expressed at the meeting in Shanghai.

THE appointment of Colonial Secretary at Hong Kong, vacant by the resignation of Mr. W. T. MERCER, has, we believe, been conferred on Mr. AUSTIN, formerly Goverment agent in China for emigration to the West Indies. We may also state that although the "Coolie convention" has not yet been repealed, it is expected to be modified at the request of Lord STANLEY, and that one or two vessels may be despatched this season to the West Indies.

WE hear that active measures are being taken towards bringing certain irregularities, alleged to have taken place on the trial of the Erin barratry case at Singapore last January, before the competent authorities, in order to induce a re-hearing of the case, or, failing that, a reconsideration of the sentence.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

WE have from time to time recorded the progress made towards the completion of the Suez Canal, and lately took occasion to point out that however problematical the success of the scheme might be in a financial point of view, there could be no doubt of the vast and substantial nature of the work done, or of the extraordinary energy and skill by which it had been accomplished. Our attention is now called to yet another view of the undertaking, namely, the desolating effect it is beginning to produce upon Egypt, owing to the absorption of so vast an amount of capital. If the statements contained in a letter recently written by a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, be not exaggerated, M. LESSEPS and his company will have to answer not only for the social and financial ruin of the country, but in all probability for a political convulsion of a very serious nature also. The following is an extract from the letter, which is dated Alexandria, January 2 :—

"I have had an interview with a very intelligent man who has been engaged on the Suez Canal works for some time past. He tells me that the undertaking is evidently pressed for means, and that the dredging is found to yield unsatisfactory results. Large stones are turning up under the mud; these break the drags, which have then to be sent away for repairs. I think he said that out of thirty-eight drags between Port Said and Ishmailieh only eight are actually at work. The water has been let into the channel too early—the excavation would have been carried on better without it; and on the lakes, in parts, as the soil is dredged out the pressure from the eastern side raises the bottom again. My informant stated that in his opinion it would take twenty years to finish the canal. . . . . There is a limit to all things, and the Canal Company having got £8,000,000 sterling out of Egypt, has had enough, and should not be allowed still further to cripple the resources of the Government, the diminution of which is already working the most serious evils in this country. What is taking place in the villages to get money in advance out of the fellahs is atrocious. No man's denial of want of means is heeded; his boxes, if he has any, are searched, and even the floor of his dwelling dug up. Flogging is then tried, and it is only after his failing to produce money under that infliction that he is given up as hopeless. The villagers are also being made to give bonds for recouping the Viceroy those he gave to the bankers, and others on the collapse of the cotton affairs, in repayment to them of the sums they alleged to be due to them from the villagers for money lent. The original debtor, if he has no sufficient substance, is disregarded and his liability transferred to his village, among the inhabitants of which the amount is arbitrarily distributed, the men being flogged if they refuse to seal a bond for their assigned shares, and kept under the Aoorbaj until they consent. With all this, Ismail Pasha is not a man of courage, and is said to be constantly manifesting signs of apprehensiveness of what might be the result of the discontent he is conscious he is creating. He has fixed himself at a new palace at Gizeh, so as to have the river between him and the population of Cairo, and no one with a gun is allowed to cross the river in that direction. A fortnight ago, also, the Viceroy on his road to the Abbasieh, just as he quitted the town, heard the near report of a gun. Cawasses were instantly sent to search for and bring the person who had fired it, nor would his Highness believe that he had only been shooting a dove until the dead bird was also brought.

"M. Mirzan, a broker of this town, on the 23rd of December last, issued a printed statement of the debts of the Government, which, he adds, having previously submitted to the Minister of Finance for correction without having been honoured with a reply, he now submits to the public. The total of the debts, loans and floating, he makes to be 667,850,000 francs—£26,714,000; but I have it on credible authority that the department of the Viceroy's Government immediately concerned with his finances estimated his total liabilities at £36,000,000. The month of Kiack (Coptic), 10th of December to 10th of January, is just passing, and no signs of a dividend from the Azizieh Company, which, by the statutes, should be paid in this month.

"I have learned, through a channel which to my mind precludes doubt, such further circumstances of the means which are being resorted to under the Viceroy's authority for compelling the unhappy villagers to minister to his demands, that I add another note for the sake of exposing such conduct. As a last resource, and when every means has failed with the men, the wives and other females of the family have been brought forward and told to produce their ornaments. No excuse is received. They may allege that they have already sold them to satisfy former Government demands, but they are not believed. They are told that they must have concealed them, and are held down by cawasses and flogged with a heavy koorbaj over the breech until the wretch who is vicariously ordering and superintending the infliction of the torture thinks their endurance has been sufficiently tested. They are then cut loose and left to be carried away by their friends. Will such things be credited in England? Let Lord Stanley call for a report of what is going on in the villages; not from the Consul-General only, but from every consul, vice-consul, and consular agent in the country, with instructions to refer especially to the treatment to which the villagers are subjected, in the collection of the Government dues, in their persons, property, and labour, and his lordship will then learn what Egypt is suffering to-day."

HONG KONG GRIEVANCES.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—In your issue of the 11th inst. appears the ominous heading "Hong Kong Grievances," and, while fully endorsing your general remakr thereon, permit me to supplement a few others: First, I would suggest to the Young England of the colony, especially that portion representing absentees, to be more courteous and less abrupt in their representations to the Colonial Government; and now that the double calamity has befallen Hong Kong—a great fire and a tempest, the latter destroying the esplanade, or Praya,—this is the fitting time for a general rate to be levied on the colony (rather than an abatement of present taxation), with temporary special exemption to sufferers by fire. Do not infer from the foregoing remarks that I approve the imposition and annoyance of an intricate Stamp Act in a free port, frequented and mostly inhabited by emigrants unlettered Chinese middlemen, and traders; into whose written tongue it would be almost impossible to translate this Stamp Act, of upwards of thirty sections, with an equally long schedule. But, if the Act is to remain in force, section 3 of its schedule should be amended, and the amount, or nearly so, of the English stamp duties on bills of exchange substituted for the present inconsistent charge. Query, if section 13 of the schedule would not add grist to the mill by the addition of "succession duties."

Watching, lighting, and water-rates, assessed on unoccupied houses in Hong Kong, are every quarter levied and recovered, together with the costs of the levy, from the unfortunate owners of unoccupied property; contrary to the recognised law here, as "property which is not beneficially occupied, and of which there is no ascertainable occupier is not assessable to the poor-rate the same is exempt from the general district rate." I am informed the above injustice is continued by virtue of Colonial Ordinance of the year 1865, which has received the Royal assent? And to this injustice is added the insult to the Colonist of toiling up the hill to the Government offices to pay the tax—demand and collection of rates being ignored.

It is most unfortunate for the colony that fire and tempest should have conspired together, and within two months of each other destroyed the best part of her native traders' quarters and a portion of her Praya. I remember that twelve years ago a similar fire occurred in Hong Kong in the same locality, and the debris being thrown into the harbour adjacent became the nucleus of the present (partially destroyed) Praya—a public work projected by Sir Henry Pottinger; urged upon the Admiralty by Commodore Sir E. Belcher, R. N.; approved by Lord Stanley, Sir J. F Davis, and the then leading mercantile firms; sneered at by Mr. Montgomery Martin, 1843 and '4; advanced by Sir Geo. Bonham, encouraged by Mr. T. C. Anstey, and unblushingly designated "the Bowring Praya;" and finally sanctioned by Government in 1855 and '6, in spite of the objections of the then leading mercantile firms and marine lot-holders. The Praya, notwithstanding its honourable sponsors, is now offered by Sir R. G. MacDonnell, C.B., to the few marine lot-holders to mend, and medicate, and further entangle with equities against the rights of the public, instead of boldly proclaiming the four miles of strand road public property, setting about its efficient repair, and providing more adequate surveyors for its conservation when finished. The pecuniary difficulty must be overcome by a general rate; and I do not hink a slight impost on shipping in the shape of tonnage dues damagingt to the colony, especially as the Junk Ordinance is in operation. It was the year of initiation of this Praya—1856—that Hong Kong was first able to decline the Parliamentary grant; after which the Secretary of State for the Colonies sanctioned Governor Bowring's recourse to the marine lot-holders "for the means whereby the 'Praya' might be executed at the least possible cost to the public."—(Lord Stanley's despatch of Jan. 3, 1844.) Do not shrug your shoulders, Mr. Editor, and think I am about to ask the British taxpayer to help to pay for the beautification of the city of Victoria, Hong Kong. No, but I crave their attention in its hour of need to the following extract from Letter No. 82, dated Downing-street, July 29th, 1856, to Governor Sir J. Bowring, Hong Kong, from the Right Honourable Henry Labouchere, M.P., paragraph 13:—"The island is held by the British Crown, not at all because of any natural advantages which it possesses, but simply as subsidiary to the intercourse between the British and the Chinese Empires. In this point of view it is of great importance. Great commercial interests and the future progress of civilisation throughout the East, are, to a great extent, involved in the maintenance of British rule and of orderly Government in Hong Kong." Our Gibraltar, contiguous to China, must have its (Praya) sea-wall, batteries, and dockyard. My letter is already over-long, and I conclude by earnestly requesting the representatives in England of the wealth and interest of Hong Kong as well absentee landowners, as heads of mercantile establishments, at once to meet together to discuss Hong Kong Grievances, and, if necessary, form a "Hong Kong Association in England," to cooperate with the association recently established in Hong Kong. The Liberal Member for Brighton, James White, Esq., is interested, and, no doubt, would preside on the occasion; let the good work begin at once in readiness to back up the incoming petition from Hong Kong or otherwise to vary its prayer. One hint as to the fire before quitting my subjec The danger of conflagration in the Chinese portion of Hong Kong is inhanced by their fragile tenements and their indiscriminate storage of enflammable goods. The surveyor to insurance offices must teach Chinese the "classification of goods," and the Government must insist on saltpetre oil, camphor, brimstone, and such like, being stored in a less central part of the city; and, in reconstructing the present site of the fire, its narrow streets and alleys should be remodelled.—Yours, &c., D.G.

London, Jan. 19, 1868.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—In your issue of January 11th you recapitulate in extenso the chapter of Hong Kong grievances, but you put the matter in such a manner before your readers, and connect it in such a way with the name of Sir Richard Graves MacDonnell, that it might almost be inferred from its perusal that all the evils under which that unfortunate colony is now labouring are, in some way or other, connected with that gentleman's administration of affairs. I submit, Sir, that such an inference would be as totally false as it would be unjust. Surely when we find a succession of financial corporations and "merchant princes" passing through the Court of Bankruptcy, such as we have witnessed in Hong Kong within the last few years, we need not look far for the cause of the great depression of trade, of the depreciation in the value of property, and of the migration of the Chinese population. Instead, therefore, of blaming the present Governor of the colony for misfortunes the origin of which date back to a period before his accession to power, it would, I apprehend, be more consonant with justice to sympathise with him that his lot should have fallen in such hard times.

You put forward the police and lighting rate as being in its amount "enormous." As I have had to pay it, I can readily concede that point; but the enormity existed long before Sir Richard came into office; and he must have appreciated its magnitude, for when he wanted to raise more revenue instead of increasing that rate he introduced a stamp-tax. The influential opponents of that measure, however, demanded that the police and lighting rate be increased, and that the stamp-tax be withdrawn. Mr. Gibb, in the Legislative Council, actually asked that the police and lighting rate might be increased, if more revenue must of necessity be had. The Governor, however, persisted with his stamp-tax; which shows that if the police and lighting rate is not at this moment even higher than the "enormous" percentage at which it now stands, it is because Sir Richard himself refused to increase it.

As to the rate being levied on the landlord, all I can say is that it was not so in my time, for I have paid (as tenant) the tax repeatedly. But at the period that Governor MacDonnell came into office it came to pass that, whilst there was not even a mite in the Treasury, there were outstanding (uncollected and uncollectable) arrears of rates amounting altogether to that quantity which mathematicians frequently express by the letter x, but which was, by shrewd guessers, variously stated at from $12,000 to $30,000. These arrears had accumulated during the interregnum of smiles which immediately preceded Sir Richard's reign. If, therefore, the rate is now levied upon the landlord instead of upon the tenant, it is, no doubt, because it has been found very difficult, or wholly impracticable, to collect it from the tenants—a class of people that, amongst the Chinese, are, be it understood, of a very mythical character.

I do not know, Mr. Editor, whether people in England "really cannot believe that such a monstrous injustice should be perpetrated in an English colony," but I know that some of my neighbours and myself, who live on the property of a noble duke near the Strand, would very much like to see the houses which the said duke keeps untenanted for years together in our vicinity rated along with the rest, as we feel that their exemption makes the rate heavier for those who do pay.

That rents do not keep up in a town where half the merchants have failed, or are expected shortly to do so, cannot be wondered at; but it diminishes largely the extent of this misfortune to know that in this same Queen's-road of which you speak rents had been screwed up to quite a staggering elevation, and that their sudden toppling down was an event long looked for, and therefore not very surprising in itself.

As for the Praya, it is merely the old story over again of the present colonists (governing and governed) having to suffer for the sins of their (colonial) forefathers. Several fortunes were made by the building of the eyesore that is now misnamed a sea-wall—it was patent, from the first, to the merest tyro that the whole thing would come down in some typhoon—but yet as corruption was the order of that day, the officials and contractors who pocketed the dollars were quite content to hazard their professional reputation, as, at all events, it (the wall) would last until they were over the hills and far away. The water-front people, actuated by the same imperception of five years hence that seems to dictate all measures in Hong Kong, were too glad to obtain the present use of the valuable quay to be at the time very particular as to the conditions upon which they obtained it; and so a thing was constructed, at an enormous cost, that resembles a garden wall, instead of being as a sea-rampart to guard the city from the encroachments of the winds and waves. Ever since it was finished, you might, after a shower of rain, sink up to the knee in the soft loose earth with which this "sea-wall" was backed up; how, then, can it be wondered at that portions of the wall have been washed away? Well, now the gap is made, it is clear that the Governor must see it repaired; and upon referring to his Attorney-General, he learns that the lot-holders are the responsible parties. Is he not, therefore, acting as any other business man would act in asking them to rebuild it? What oppression is there in this?

I concede the truth, Mr. Editor, of your allegation that "no Governor has, in the same space of time, arrived at the perfection to which Sir Richard MacDonnell has in interfering with the comfort of the residents." If the old Scottish saying, that "the clartier the cosier" may be applied to morals, there can be no doubt that it well represents the prevailing tone of Hong Kong society, and, such being the case, Sir Richard and his supporters will not care to extenuate his crime. Neither had the present Governor any hand in wasting the public resources upon the Mint and the Gaol on Stonecutter's Island; he found both of these abortions ready made to his hand. From one of these burthens (the Gaol) he extricated himself with creditable alacrity, and displayed an equally creditable desire to get rid of the other, but has not yet, unfortunately, succeeded. Could none of the patriots of Hong Kong point out the way to deal—satisfactorily to all parties—with this last-named incubus?

That the "respectable Chinese" (whatever that may mean) will leave Hong Kong for Canton and Macao is quite natural, when trade forsakes Hong Kong, and probably their going and coming will be regulated by the degree of prosperity of trade in the last-named place; but, as I have already observed, the present low ebb of prosperity has been caused by occurrences over which Sir Richard had no control, and for which he cannot by any means be made accountable. As for the "respectable Chinese" that evacuated the colony, on its becoming known that the tails of confirmed thieves and vagabonds most frequently came off a few hours after entering Victoria Gaol, the decrease thus caused to the population was a positive gain to the community.

You say, Mr. Editor, that "the colonists must devote their examination to the expenditure—the revenue will be found ample for all legitimate purposes." Now I think I am in a position to aver that Sir Richard has always given the public every facility for the examination of public matters, and no one can deny that he is always open to any suggestion, either from "gentle or simple." It is very likely a rare privilege for the lowest citizen to be able to confer at any time with the highest authority of the land, but it is one that every resident of Hong Kong is able to enjoy. Publicity through the public press has been specially provided for.

I believe, Sir, it is a fact, as stated by you, that property in Macao has "gone up" considerably, and I believe the reason of it is that the formerly tenantless houses are being now used as coolie or slave barracoons.

In conclusion, I will say that in thus endeavouring to point out the rights of the case, I do so simply as a lover of fair play, and not as a partizan of the Governor, who is, moreover, quite able to advocate his own cause.—Your obedient servant, MERCURIO.

THE PRESS AT SINGAPORE.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—The perusal of the letter in your issue of the 11th inst., signed "R." (relative to the freedom of the press in Singapore) induces me to trouble you with a few lines on the subject.

The object of "R.'s" communication is evidently to show that Colonel Ord is not adverse to the publication of the debates or conversations which take place in the Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements, and, from the tone of the letter, it may be inferred that the writer is well able to speak with authority upon the matter. I must nevertheless join issue upon that point, and would call the attention of "R." to the minutes of the first Council meeting as published in the Singapore papers (from copies furnished by the Clerk of the Council), in which a resolution appears, and, if I remember rightly, the very first in point of order, to the effect that no notes or shorthand reports of the proceedings should be taken, but that the Clerk of the Council be directed to furnish the local papers with a copy of the proceedings. This, I submit, is conclusive, for "R." will hardly argue that this resolution was passed without the Governor's knowledge or consent.

I may add, for the sake of further elucidating this interesting question, that I was the only shorthand writer in Singapore at the time of the institution of the Legislative Council, and that therefore the introduction of the words "shorthand reports" in the resolution might be fairly assumed to aim at my exclusion. There could not have been any personal bias in thus depriving me of the privilege of supplying the public with an impartial report of the sayings and doings of their law-makers, as I was a stranger in the colony, and personally unknown to either the Governor or the members of Council; so that the exclusion must have taken place on principle. Being in Singapore at the period of the transfer, it occurred to me that if a full and faithful record were kept of the proceedings of the Council from the commencement of their legislative career it would prove of great benefit to future generations of councillors, as well as of great interest to the public at large; and, acting upon this idea, I resolved to apply to the Governor for the appointment of shorthand reporter to the Council. In order, however, to avoid making any useless applications, I resolved to sound the disposition of the non-official members as to the desirability of having full reports, and to that end waited on Mr. Read, who told me that he would be very happy to see such reports published, and that he had often regretted the absence of a reporter at the sittings of the Municipal Council. I then called upon Mr. Scott, who, however, did not seem to view the proposal with pleasure—in fact, he said that he thought that, as the proceedings were chiefly "conversational," the taking notes of them would be a "breach of privilege." In reply to my question whether he would support my application, he replied that he would not promise as he should wish first to ascertain the Governor's views. The inference that I drew from this conversation was, that Mr. Scott would oppose the publication of reports, and as I felt that my case would be weak if unsupported by even one non-official member, I refrained from taking any further steps in the matter. At the very next meeting of the Council the resolution already referred to was passed unanimously, so that, by letting the matter drop in time, I evidently saved myself unnecessary trouble. It did, however, appear to me to be passing strange that there was not one "No" recorded upon the question being put, considering how favourably Mr. Read had spoken in regard to the desirability of publicity. As I said before, I being the only shorthand writer in the place, considered (especially after having canvassed two members of Council) that whilst strangers in general were, by the terms of the resolution, excluded, I was excluded especially, and therefore I never ventured within the precincts of the Council chamber; so that I cannot dispute the fact (as stated by "R") of "members of the press having been accommodated with seats," &c. I can only say that in the meeting place of all legislative bodies with which I am acquainted "seats," &c. are provided (to a limited extent) for all who choose to go.

In conclusion allow me, Mr. Editor, to apologise for trespassing upon your space to such a degree, in order to bear you out in what is notorious in Singapore itself, viz., that a resolution was passed prohibiting the taking of notes in the Legislative Council; but, as there are many of your English readers who may find it difficult to believe such a thing possible in any English colony, it is perhaps, quite as well to place the matter in an unmistakable light.

Whilst I regret (individually) that "R." did not explain how the Governor's willingness to afford the shorthand writer "every facility in his power" was to manifest itself, in the face of the resolution debarring all notes or shorthand reports from being taken, it is satisfactory to perceive that your correspondent seems to fully appreciate the false position in which Colonel Ord and his Council placed themselves by the adoption of so unusual, and perhaps illegal a measure. It is to be hoped that for the honour of English civilisation, whether the local editors be apathetic or not "fitted" or otherwise, this policy of secret legislation will be forthwith abandoned, and the sooner the better for the credit of all concerned.—I am, your obedient servant, W. F. F.

Monetary and Commercial.

The tea cargo by the Wild Deer from Shanghai, is, according to the brokers' reports, out of condition, and sales have been made "with all faults" at a reduction of 2d. to 3d. The deterioration, it is stated, has been caused by the fumes of wine which had been stowed in the hold and leaked during the voyage. This opinion, however, wants general confirmation, as some parcels are in good order, and others appear sea damaged. We hear that some of the consignees have laid the case before their legal advisers, with a view of ascertaining the liability of the owners of the Wild Deer. Off the Western Islands the vessel met with a gale; one hatch was stove in, and she shipped some heavy seas which obliged her to throw a portion of her cargo overboard.

The last mail brought us a very curious revelation as to the working of the Hong Kong Stamp Act. Mr. Crawford was fined $25 for accepting a Bill before the proper stamp was affixed. The Commissioner of Stamps, the magistrate who inflicted the fine, and the Attorney-General have certainly distinguished themselves in a most unenviable manner. In England it is not incumbent on the acceptor of a foreign bill of exchange to see that the stamp is affixed on accepting, but only on payment of the same. Foreign bills are daily accepted before the stamp is affixed, and there is surely no reason why the Hong Kong Act should involve an annoyance that is not experienced elsewhere.

The application of the liquidator of the Commercial Bank to pay a further dividend of 2s. in the pound, will come before the court this week, and, if unopposed, it will be at once issued as the funds are in hand.

Mr. Robert Watmore and Mr. Samuel Brown, who have been appointed respectively manager and assistant manager to the Union Insurance Society, proceed to Hong Kong by the first mail in February. The management of the Union is to be conducted on a basis similar to the North China, the London agents being, as heretofore, Messrs. Dent, Palmer, and Co.

The plan which we noticed lately for forming a new company to purchase the plant and rights of the Labuan Coal Company has not been sufficiently supported, and is abandoned. The time for the sale has not yet been announced by the Court of Chancery.

At the meeting of the Union Bank of London, the report showed an available total of £101,190, and a dividend was declared at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum, leaving £11,190 to be carried forward. The deposits held are £12,071,097, and the liabilities on acceptances (covered by securities amounting to £7,605,784) are £5,298,743, making a total of £17,369.840, against £19,267,467 at the corresponding period of last year, and £17,957,123 on the 30th of June last. The paid-up capital is £1,200,000, and the reserve fund, invested in Consols, £300,000. A strong discussion ensued on some of the recent arrangements of the board, but the report was ulti mately adopted.

At the late meeting of the London Joint-Stock Bank, the report showed an available total of £63,102, and a dividend at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum was declared, to provide for which, however, a withdrawal of £4,397 from the guarantee ound was necessary. The report will be found in extenso in another column.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Ceylon, from Southampton on the 20th inst., was—in gold, to Alexandria, £36,000; to Madras, £145; in silver, to Hong Kong, £470. Total in gold, £36,145; in silver, £470.

EXPORTS OF COTTON TO THE FAR EAST.

Mr. Sam Mendel's table for the month of January contains the following details of the Cotton Goods exported from London, Liverpool, Southampton, and the Clyde, to Hong Kong, Shanghai, Japan, Singapore, Batavia, Manila, and Ceylon during the month ended 16th January, compared with the corresponding period of the two previous years.

The annual tables have also been issued, giving details of the shipments of Plain Cottons and Cotton Yarn from the above-named ports to the Far East for the past ten years. We purpose placing before our readers the results for the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867.

ARTICLES OF IMPORT.

TEA.—There has been a very good demand, but business has been somewhat checked by the firmness of importers, who are holding many kinds of Congou for higher prices than the trade are willing to pay at present. The demand has run chiefly on common to fair blackish and reddish-leaf Congous, which have risen fully ½d. per lb. since the end of the year. Congou: Siftings remain firm at quotations both for Moning and Kaisow kinds. Broken leaf have been in request at full prices. Fair to good common have been taken freely at from 1s. to 1s. 0½d. per lb. Fair to good flavoury kinds show no material change. Good to fine Kaisows have been rather more inquired for, and prices have advanced ½d. to 1d. per lb. In Pak Lings there is no alteration to notice. Common to fair black-leaf kinds have been in request, and sales made to some extent from 1s. to 1s. 1d. per lb., the later sales showing fully ½d. per lb. advance; fair to good, of new import, have realised about former prices; in fine there has been rather more doing, and prices have ruled rather higher; in finest there has not been much done. Fair to good Oolongs remain difficult of sale, and prices are rather nominal; fine are in demand at full prices. Common to good Souchongs have been saleable at fair prices; fine to finest remain quiet, the prices wanted being above the views of buyers. Scented Capers have met with a good demand at former prices, both Canton and Foochow kinds. Canton Scented Orange Pekoes remain dull of sale at late prices. Foochow kinds have been sold to some extent, but prices show a further reduction of 1d. per lb. Uncoloured Japans remain without much inquiry. Green teas: In these a fair amount of business has been done, the finer kinds selling at the decline lately established, but the common to fair kinds have been difficult to move, and have occasionally been realised at lower prices. Hyeons have been in demand at full prices. In Canton-made Gunpowders there has been no change. The China tea sales of the 21st comprised 13,422 packages, of which 11,606 packages were sold, all being without reserve, Congous at full prices, but common to fair green Teas went lower. The quantity afloat is computed at 23,000,000 lbs., including the November ships.

SILK.—The Silk Market has been very depressed since last mail, and it does not now seem to be so much a question of price as a determination on the part of consumers, both here and on the Continent, to abstain as much as possible from the purchase of Asiatic silk. In Chinas business has been restricted to a few forced sales, principally from second hands. The disparity in prices between classic and other qualities is unprecedentedly large—so much so, that while No. 3 Tsatlee is still quoted 28s. 6d. to 29s., good Red Peacocks have been sold at 22s. 6d.; medium No. 4 can be bought at 21s. 6d., and 4½ to 5, 19s. 6d. to 21s. The inferior Tsatlees without classification, a good many of which have recently arrived, appear altogether unsaleable. Japan Silk shares in the general depression, but has not declined in value so much as China silk. Deliveries from 1st to 24th, inclusive:—China, 2,198 bales; Japan, 390 bales; total, 2,588 bales.

COTTON.—The market has been fluctuating. A fair demand prevailed at the commencement of the past week, and extensive sales were effected at an advance of ⅛d. to ¼d. per lb., but afterwards the activity abated and prices slightly declined. The inquiry has, however, again been renewed, and rates are about ⅛d. in advance of our last quotations. The sales on the spot have amounted to 18,120 bales and for arrival 3,740 bales. No China has been placed on offer, but 500 bales fair Rangoon have realised 5d. to 5⅛d. per lb. Quotations are for Dollerah, 4½d. to 6¾d.; Tinnivelly, 5d. to 6¼d. The following remarks are from a New York correspondent's letter:—"Many of the soundest men in the trade at home and in England, men whose memories recall the cotton depressions of 1839, 1844, 1848, 1851 and 1857, and their causes, are strongly impressed with the idea that cotton must fall yet lower. It is deemed probable that as in some of those periods when stagnation in trade was the characteristic, cotton fell to and remained for months at so low levels as 4½d. to 4¾d. for middling so now it will fall to 6d. per pound in Liverpool. The Cable already reports 'sales at 6⅜d. basis of middling American to arrive.' Advices have been received of purchases at Bombay at 4¾d. to 5d. for fair Surats, cost and freight to England included, and shippers demand a further decline of ¼d. to enable them to go on with probable safety. This is not panic; that would soon pass and be followed by reaction."

COFFEE.—The quantity offered by auction has been exceedingly light, but buyers are very cautious, and sales difficult to effect. There is no quotable change to note in the value of Plantation Ceylon. Besides the public sales about 80 casks have changed hands privately, and shortly there will be a much better selection offering out of the late arrivals. Native is again rather lower, good ordinary in casks having been sold at 51s. 6d. Except for Native Mysore at low prices, there is no particular demand for East India descriptions. Singapore and Manila are quite neglected. At the public sales of Plantation, 610 casks 75 barrels 422 bags, have gone off at fully the valuations for good colory qualities, but dull or gray kinds were barely maintained; triage sold at 30s. to 57s., ordinary to fine ordinary gray 52s. to 64s., small and grayish 71s. to 73s., colory middling 75s. to 79s., good middling bold 83s. to 83s. 6d., pea-berry 77s. to 89s. 6d. For Native there has been little inquiry, and of 192 casks 5 barrels 949 bags in auction were principally bought in at 49s. 6d. for small to 53s. for good ordinary in casks; about 11 casks and 300 bags being sold, good ordinary 51s. 6d. to 53s., ordinary small 49s. to 49s. 6d., pea-berry 60s. to 64s.

CAMPHOR.—There is very little doing, and the only sale reported is of 30 chests China at £7 recent weights.

COCOA-NUT OIL.—We have no improvement to report, business being still extremely limited at £50 for Ceylon, and £56 to £56 10s. for Cochin.

GALLS.—A private sale of 450 boxes Japan at 51s. constitutes the only business done.

MANILA HEMP.—The recent rather large arrivals have checked the disposition to buy, and prices have a downward tendency. Privately about 300 bales have changed hands at £49, and in auction of 772 bales offered only 50 bales common sold at £45, the remainder fair being bought in at £48, except 110 bales good fair sea damaged, which sold at £46 10s. to £48, for first and second class.

PLUMBAGO.—The market is quiet, and no business is reported in Ceylon.

PEPPER.—Black: The sales privately are insignificant, most orders no doubt being reserved for the parcels now landing, which may soon be expected on the market. No public sales have been held. Of White, 360 bags Singapore have been sold at 5⅛d.

PRESERVES.—253 cases China Ginger were bought in at 10½d. to 11d., also 10 casks at 9½d. per lb. in bond.

RICE.—The market has continued very quiet, and transactions on the spot have been of limited amount at steady prices, viz., 1,800 bags Rangoon at 12s. 4½d. to 12s. 7½d., and 800 bags Ballam at 10s. 6d. For arrival rather easier rates have been accepted—300 tons Dacca Bengal at 11s. 3d., 100 tons middling white at 14s. 6d., 50 tons broken at 11s. 4½d., landed, and 3,500 bags Ballam at 9s. 9d. to 10s. ex ship. A small cargo of Rangoon for early shipment, was sold for London at 12s. usual landed terms.

SPICES.—Cinnamon: Of 96 bales Ceylon only 10 bales sold, first sort 2s. 1d., second 1s. 11d., third 1s. 8d., the remainder bought in, first 2s. 4d. to 2s. 5d., second 2s. 2d., third 2s., fourth 1s. 7d. At the quarterly public sales commencing this day, a large quantity will be offered, amounting to nearly 3,000 bales. Mace: Six cases ordinary Java, realised 1s. 6d. to 1s. 7d., one case being bought in at 1s. 9d. per lb. Nutmegs: Of Java, 28 casks 7 cases sold, good bold 71 and 72 nuts to the lb. at 3s. 2d. to 3s. 3d., middling 96 to 99's at 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d., partly shrivelled 130's at 1s. 1d., shrivelled 150 to 130's at 8d. to 10d.

SUGAR.—Although holders are still willing to promote sales, only a moderate amount of business has been done. Prices have ruled rather irregularly, and without exhibiting a general decline, have in several instances been 6d. per cwt. in favour of the buyer. Manila has been cheaper, and there is some little inquiry for good Clayed at the extreme reduction, at which, however, it is not readily obtainable. Several parcels of Clayed have been offered by auction, of which, however, only the damaged portion was sold, prices being on a par with the business by private contract. 11,567 bags sound were all bought in, principally good quality, import 1863 (duty 9s. 7d.), at 30s. 6d.; import 1864 (duty 8s.), at 30s.; damp, 29s. 6d.; 6,956 bags (duty 8s.) washed were all sold at 28s. By private contract 6,700 bags Clayed (duty 9s. 7d.), have been sold at 29s. 6d., and 1,000 bags fine at 29s. 9d.

TIN.—The market is steady with daily small transactions in fine Straits, at £87. Some parcels containing more scoria than is admissible as good merchantable quality have been sold at £86, and more is to be had at same rate. The sales of Straits during the past week have amounted to about 60 tons.

CHINA GRASS seems still neglected. At public auction on the 22nd some parcels slightly damaged were put up without eliciting a single bid. We hear it was afterwards disposed of at £38 for first-class damaged white, and £36 for first-class damaged green; the sound value may be computed at £42 and £38 respectively.

ARTICLES OF EXPORT.

IRON.—The quotations in London are for Welsh bars, £6 7s. 6d. to £6 10s.; nail rods, £7 5s. to £7 10s.; hoops, £8 7s. 6d. to £9; sheets, single, £9 10s. to £10; Staffordshire bars, £7 5s. to £7 15s.; rails, £5 10s. to £6.

STEEL.—Swedish kegs, £14 15s. to £15.

COPPER.—Sheet and Sheathing, £78 to £81 per ton; yellow metal 6¾d. per lb.

LEAD, &c.—English pig, W.B., £21 5s.; shot, patent, £22 5s. sheet, £20 5s.; spelter, £20 10s.; zinc, English sheet, £26; quicksilver, £6 17s., in bottles of 75 lbs. each.

The following is from the circular of Messrs. French and Smith:—Business continues quiet. Iron is but moderately inquired for. Copper: Chili Bars have improved full £1 per ton. There are now buyers at £69; sellers ask £69 10s. to £70. In other descriptions no change to notice. Lead maintains the improvement mentioned in our last circular. Tin Plates are quiet. Spelter also quiet.

FREIGHTS AND CHARTERS.

Outward freight to the Eastern ports rule somewhat lower, consequent upon the number of vessels disengaged now in port. Coal freights from the northern outports have also declined.

Current rates of freight for vessels on the berth:—To Yokohama: 30s. weight, 40s. and 50s. meast. To Nagasaki: 50s. meast., 40s. weight. To Shanghai: 50s. weight, 45s. meast. To Cheefoo: 60s. weight or meast. To Hong Kong: 50s. weight, 35s. meast. To Amoy: 60s. weight, 50s. meast. To Manila: 50s. weight, 55s. meast. To Singapore: 30s. weight, 35s. meast. To Penang: 35s. weight, 40s. meast. To Ceylon: 20s. to 25s. weight, 35s. meast.

The current quotations for coal, &c., are as follows:—From Wear or Tyne per keel.—For Shanghai: £53. For Hong Kong: £43. For Saigon: £50. For Singapore: £33. For Batavia: £32. For Colombo, £30. For Galle, £35 From Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea per ton.—For Yokohama: £2 10s. For Shanghai: £2 12s. 6d. For Chefoo, £2 15s. For Hong Kong, £2 2s. 6d. For Manila, £1 15s. For Saigon: £2 8s. For Singapore: £1 11s. For Batavia, £1 10s. For Trincomalee, £1 14s. For Galle, £1 12s. 6d. For Colombo, £1 8s. 6d.

The Admiralty have invited tenders for the conveyance of 260 tons navy provisions, &c., 2 tons medical stores, 8 tons (meast.) iron carriages and slides, &c, and 45 tons (weight) small arm ammunition, from the Thames to Hong Kong; also of 14 tons naval masts, spars, and timber, 18 tons (weight) and 33 tons (meast.) naval common stores, 4 tons cordage, 17 tons (weight) small arm ammunition, and 3 tons (meast.) carriage, &c., to Trincomalee; and have ordered the Maiden Queen and Boldon Lawn to be surveyed, the former for conveyance of the stores to Hong Kong, and the latter for those to Trincomalee.

CASUALTIES.

The Glendoveer, Wilson, from Sunderland to Singapore, with coal, which put into Grimsby Roads January 5, leaky, has discharged part of her cargo.

The Neptune, Parkin, from Manila, which arrived at London January 20, was supplied, when off Margate, with two anchors and chains.

The Hendrika, Valk, from Batavia to Holland, which arrived at Deal January 19, had been supplied with two anchors and chains, in lieu of others lost.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR 1868.

The Proprietor has made arrangements to run six couriers per month in May and June, in the event of delay in the transmission of telegrams by the Russian Telegraph Service. It may not be generally known that the delays during the last season were occasioned by the overflowing of the Rivers Irtisch, Obi, and Yenessei; upwards of 800 versts of Telegraph Line were swept away from time to time. As such inundations occur only once or twice in a century, the Proprietor hopes that the precaution he has taken will prove unnecessary. During the latter two months of last season the line worked very well, and Telegrams were delivered to and from Europe in 18 days; the average time being as follows:—

London and Kiachta by Telegraph	2 days.
Kiachta and Tientsin by Courier	12 „
Tientsin and Shanghai by Steamer	4 „
Total ...	18 days.

A courier having been killed by a fall from his horse last year, the telegram bag was lost, and has not yet been recovered. In order to prevent a recurrence of the inconvenience, it is the intention of the Proprietor to open all telegrams addressed to his care, and forward duplicates by the subsequent courier to their respective addresses, unless he be specially notified to the contrary. The number of stations in Mongolia will be doubled this year. Contracts have been made to deliver telegrams between Kiachta and Tientsin in twelve days; the non-fulfilment of the contracts as to time entails a penalty upon the contractors of from 1 to 3 taels per hour (6s. to 18s.), thus giving a guarantee that delay will not occur.

After the first two months of the season, which are the most severe as regards the climate, the contractors will reduce their contract time to ten days.

SIXTY-FIRST REPORT OF

THE LONDON JOINT-STOCK BANK.

At a GENERAL MEETING of the SHAREHOLDERS, held at the Banking-house of the Company, in Princes-street, Mansion-house, on THURSDAY, 16th January, 1868—JOHN KNOWLES, Esq., Chairman, GEO. THOS. BROOKING, Esq., Deputy-Chairman—the following REPORT was presented:

The Directors have much pleasure in placing before the shareholders the annexed statement of the liabilities and assets of the Bank and of the profit and loss account for the half-year ending the 31st ult., by which it will be seen that the Bank has made a net profit of £63,102 4s. 1d., including £2,175 18s. 4d. brought forward from the 30th June; this sum, together with £4,397 15s. 11d. taken from the guarantee fund, the Directors have appropriated in payment of the usual dividend at the rate of 12½ per centum per annum.

In pursuance of the resolution of the general meeting of the 25th July last, the issue of the remaining 8,000 new shares has been made, and the Directors have the satisfaction to acquaint the proprietors that the subscribed capital of the Bank is now four millions, divided into 80,000 shares of £50 each, paid up to the extent of £15 per share, thus making the paid-up capital of the Bank £1,200,000 entitled to participate in the profits from the 1st of January.

The guarantee fund, in accordance with the resolution of the meeting held on the 25th July last, has been credited with £80,000, the amount of premium upon the above 8,000 shares, and now amounts to £418,599 0s. 5d.

The Directors have to announce the decease, during the past half-year, of their much-lamented colleagues, George Pollard, Esq., and Henry Lee, Esq.

The following Directors retire by rotation, under the provisions of the deed of settlement, viz., W. Blount, Esq., G. T. Brooking, Esq., F. J. Jourdain, Esq., John Knowles, Esq., and Robert Ryrie, Esq., who, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

The dividend, free from income-tax, will be payable on and after Friday, the 24th inst., and the interest payable on the new share capital and premium is payable on and after the same day.

The preceding Report having been read to the meeting by the Secretary, a dividend for the half-year ending the 31st December last, after the rate of 12½ per centum per annum, was declared by the Chairman.

Resolved unanimously—

That the Report now read be received, adopted, and printed for the use of the shareholders.

The following Directors having retired by rotation, were unanimously re-elected, viz.:—W. Blount, Esq., G. T. Brooking, Esq., F. J. Jourdain, Esq., John Knowles, Esq., Robert Ryrie, Esq.

Resolved unanimously—

That the thanks of the meeting be presented to the Directors for their efficient management of the affairs of the Bank during the past half-year.

Resolved unanimously—

That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Managers and Officers for their continued attention to the business of the Bank.

(Signed) JOHN KNOWLES, Chairman.
THOMAS BURROWES, Secretary.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—MOMENTOUS INQUIRY.—Surrounded as we are by exciting causes of diseases, it becomes our duty to seek some means of expelling impurities from the body, or rendering them harmless. Professor Holloway has discovered a medicine capable of effecting that all-important point, and has generously placed it within the reach of the poorest. His Pills guard the constituents of the blood, which, when contaminated or destroyed, permits fevers, inflammations, and other maladies to run riot through and undermine the system, or consigns their victims to untimely tombs. In malarious districts and unhealthy towns these Pills, after silently proving themselves the best protectors against fevers, &c., have, within the last few years, been adopted by the profession and the public.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

YOKOHAMA.

By the French mail delivered this morning we have advices from Yokohama to the 16th December (18 days later). The outward mails of 10th and 17th October arrived respectively on the 8th and 12th December, the latter conveying London telegrams to Nov. 8. The interval since last mail had been an uneventful one, and the news is thus summed up by the Japan Times:—

"We have had a most quiet fortnight—it may be a lull before a storm. The Ministers are preparing for their flight southward; Messrs. Satow and Mitford, of the English Legation, left several days ago in the Rattler. Letters have since been received from these gentlemen stating that the works have been recommenced at Osaka and Kobe, and that everything is quiet. Our own despatches from Mr. Seare are only to Nov. 25. Sir Harry Parkes will leave in the Adventure next week; M. von Brandt probably goes with him. The Basilisk went down on the 12th inst. The American ship will take General Van Valkenburgh to the scene of action on the 20th or 21st, and the French Minister is not likely to be far behind his colleagues.

"The anxiety with which we all await the report of the foreign representatives on the political position at Kioto will be readily appreciated by our readers abroad—for most of them share it. Nothing more has been heard, that can be at all relied on, since we last wrote, of the progress of events. The Council of Daimios has not yet been assembled, so far as we know; travelling in Japan is, as yet, still accomplished at a foot pace. The Yedo people are propagating a rumour that their master is to be reinstated as Shiogoon, with fuller power than ever; that he is to be the real master of the country, and rule with the assistance of the kokushi Daimios. Echizen gave the first fatal blow to the power of the Shiogoons, when he freed the Daimios from the obligation of living at Yedo every alternate year and Shimadz Saburo (Satsuma) still further damaged it by procuring the Mikado's order that the Shiogoon should live at Kioto instead of Yedo. That these men should forego the advantage they have gained and voluntarily return under the harrow from which they have escaped is hardly to be credited. That the Shiogoonate, the command-in-chief of the army, will be retained is, of course, likely enough; but that it should be restored in all its old despotic power over the Daimios, as the only executive power in the country, is impossible. It is to be hoped that our Ministers will be cautious how they meddle with the matter; the Princes of Japan will ill brook interference, and some of them are still so ignorant of the power and means of their Western allies as to be quite capable of an attempt to expel us from the country, We cannot but think our appearance at Hiogo in great force is injudicious at this crisis; the opening of these ports might have been deferred with great advantage for three or four months; the concession would have cost us nothing, and would have been well appreciated by the leading men among the kokushi Daimios. The plan we have adopted risks much.

"The Chamber of Commerce has issued a report upon the conduct of the Foreign Ministers regarding the new ports. Sir Harry Parkes has attempted to reply, in a letter, a copy of which he has sent to the Japan Herald, but his despatch does him very little credit. He lays great stress upon a point which he assumes:—that at the meeting which received the report only twelve members were present, and that its adoption was carried by a bare majority of two. He further states that there are over a hundred mercantile firms in Yokohama, some sixty of which are British. Reasoning from these premises, he writes:—'It seems to me therefore that in justice to the many, who do not appear to have taken part in these proceedings of the Chamber, it is not necessary that I should regard this resolution as air representation of the opinions of the community, or at least of the British portion of it, whose interests alone I have to consider.' We do not pretend to know, of course, who has been amusing himself at Sir Harry's expense, but the information on which he has founded his argument is simply worthless. The Chamber of Commerce consists of forty-six members, and of these nineteen were present at the meeting which was called to consider the report of their special committee—a very fair proportion. The report was adopted without one dissentient vote. Sir Harry's calculation of the numbers of mercantile firms in Yokohama is also incorrect; there are about sixty merchants in Yokohama of all nationalities. Sir Harry's letter, to conclude, may read very well at the Foreign Office, where the pretty little fiction of the majority of two will be received as gospel, but it will hardly go down with the House of Commons if any inquisitive member, say the honourable gentleman who sits for London-super-Mare, rise in his place to ask how English mercantile interests are protected in Japan."

It is with the deepest regret that we have to announce the death of the Abbé Prudence Seraphin Girard, for years the respected and beloved chief of the Catholic Mission. Pulmonary disease carried him off, after a very few days' illness, on the 9th inst. He was a true Christian gentleman, and the varied crowd of all nationalities and all faiths which filled the church and its enclosure to the very gates, on the occasion of his funeral, was more than a mere evidence of the general esteem in which he had been held—it was typical of public opinion regarding him during the whole period of his labour here. Amiable, highly accomplished, the first, facile princeps, of all our Japanese scholars, religious of the true religion of charity and love, and a faithful, earnest servant of duty, the Abbe Girard was a friend to all, and no man was his enemy but the base and the mean, to whom virtue is always an offence.

There is more than the average amount of sickness at present in the settlement though the weather is absolute perfection—an "Indian Summer" without its enervating calm.

The following items are from the Japan Herald:—

H.M.S. Basilisk, which left this port on the 11th Dec., en route for Hiogo, returned on the 14th, having narrowly escaped total destruction by fire. On the 13th, when about 130 miles from Yokohama, from the upsetting of a can of turpentine by one of the crew, the vessel caught fire, and was quickly in flames. Owing to the dense smoke that prevailed, it was not until the ship had been half filled with water that the flames were mastered and the fire extinguished. The greater part of the Government stores, sails, ammunition, and officers' provisions have been much damaged; the ship, however, fortunately escaped without serious injury. The flames at one time were within six inches of the magazine, and had it not been for the good conduct and disciplined state of the crew, their prompt attention to orders and the cool manner in which all hands went to work, we should have had to record a more terrible and serious disaster. The Basilisk will probably be ready to leave again for Hiogo in another week.

A case of a somewhat unusual nature has been tried before H.B.M.'s Consul, in which the plaintiff, W. D. Boyd, sued a Mr. Waugh for a certain balance of account due to him. The defendant did not deny the indebtedness, but pleaded that he had paid the amount to Mr. Thomas Eskrigge, who, together with Mr. A. Urquhart, had advertised themselves in the public papers as receivers of the estate of W. D. Boyd and Co., duly appointed as such by the creditors of the above-named firm. The plaintiff argued that any such arrangement made at a private meeting of his crecitors, not being made by deed, he had full power to revoke, and that he repudiated such arrangement. The Court, however, disagreed with Mr. Boyd's vacilating mode of procedure, and gave judgment for the defendant. We hear that it is not intended to let the matter stop here, an action for $10,000 damages being talked about.

We (Japan Herald) understand that a French Club is in course of formation, and from the fact of the organisation being in the hands of an energetic and popular member of the French community (Mr. Ravel), who has been elected chairman by the committee, we have no doubt but that the project will be a success. There are, we hear, over thirty members already enrolled. We have in Yokohama the Club "Germania," where our German friends may wile away their leisure hours at bowls and billiards, and we see no reason why we should not have a similar institution, where dominoes and the carambolage may be the order of the day.

A meeting of American citizens has been held, under the presidency of Commodore Goldsborough, U.S.N., to express regret at the untimely death of the late Captain Watkins, of the Pacific Mail Company, and of sympathy for his afflicted family.

The remains of the late Commodore Watkins were conveyed on board the China for transport to America, where they will be placed in the family vault; during the transfer of the coffin to the steamer all the vessels in harbour struck their colours half mast.

The undersigned, a Committee appointed to take into consideration the near approach of the opening of Osaka and Hiogo, and to embody their views on the subject in a report, find the following facts to deal with:—

1st.—The publication of the Convention which arranged for the opening of these places, made in the local newspapers officially under date of May 16th, 1867. Here it may be stated that the plans referred to in this Convention were not made public.

2nd.—That as early as the 7th of February, 1867, the General Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, in view of the prospective opening of Osaka and Hiogo, addressed a letter to the only representatives of the treaty Powers then present in Japan, namely, those of Great Britain, the United States, France, and Holland, offering to send a deputation from the Chamber to those places.

3rd.—That replies were received to this communication from the representatives of Great Britain and Holland only.

4th.—That no further information has been received by the Chamber from the Representatives of the Treaty powers; that the only direct information received by the Chamber on this subject, so important to the interests of trade in and with Japan, has been supplied by an employe of the Japanese Government, which is pronounced inaccurate, through the columns of a local newspaper, by the Governor of Kanagawa, and although clearly given for the information of all connected with foreign trade, must, while unconfirmed by our officials, of necessity be accepted with some degree of reservation.

An examination of these facts leads the Committee to the following comments:—

1st.—That from the publication of the Osaka Convention, and in consideration of the fact that the foreign representatives alone had access to places unopened by treaty, the foreign communities of Japan had a right to expect from such representatives information with reference to the arrangements for trade at these new places, so that, when going to carry into practical effect the objects for which alone the treaties have been made, they would know at least something of the conditions under which they will have to reside there, and of the provision made for the security of their own property as well as of that entrusted to their care.

2nd.—That the General Committee of the Chamber of Commerce in addressing a letter to the foreign representatives and offering to send a deputation from their body to Osaka and Hiogo to gain such information as was especially within their province as a Chamber of Commerce and the scope of their ability as practical merchants to obtain, did that which it was incumbent upon them to do, and there is no doubt that such a deputation could and would have collected information of much value to those interested in the trade with Japan, as well as have afforded great assistance to the foreign representatives in the arduous duties which devolved upon them.

3rd.—It is a matter of regret that the reply to the Committee's letter received from his Excellency H.B.M.'s Minister should have been of so vague and unsatisfactory a character; and while the promise of assistance in carrying out the views of the Chamber contained in that from the Diplomatic Agent for Holland remains unfulfilled, it must be a source of disappointment to the members of the Chamber that the communication of their Committee to the Ministers for France and the United States was considered to be of so little importance that it remains even yet without acknowledgment.

4th.—In commenting upon this it appears necessary that the Committee should examine the several clauses of the convention providing arrangements for the opening of Osaka.

Articles I. to V. inclusive provide for suitable ground being set apart at both Hiogo and Osaka for the residences and tradal purposes of foreigners going to those places, stating specially in regard to Osaka "that the Japanese Government is willing that foreigners of those nations having treaties with Japan shall enjoy at Osaka the same facilities as are secured to those by treaty at the Ports."

Article X. provides that "insurable warehouses in which the goods of foreigners may be stored in bond will be provided by the Japanese Government both at Hiogo and Osaka, in the same manner as is stipulated in the Convention of Yedo."

These provisions appear clear and well considered, and if faithfully carried out, would doubtless suffice for their object. The employe of the Japanese Government above referred to, intimates however that the details of the arrangement are not yet agreed upon. His letter on this subject is so full and to the point that the committee think they cannot do better than give it entire, adding to it a minute drawn up by order of the Governor of Osaka. In connection with this the committee find it necessary to refer to ground plans of Osaka and Hiogo exhibited within the last few days at H.B.M. Consulate at this port for the information of British subjects. Although not officially in the hands of the Chamber, the manner in which these plans are put forth entitles them to be regarded as authentic. An examination of them shows that no provision is made at Osaka for the bonded warehouses as stipulated by the convention, while the small size and limited number of the lots indicates very clearly that foreigners will not "enjoy at Osaka the same facilities for leasing ground and building houses as are secured to them by treaty at the ports."

In view therefore of these facts and the deductions drawn from them, the Committee deem it proper to report to the Chamber that no positive information of any kind has been received from the Foreign Representatives relative to the important change so soon to be made in the position of foreign trade in Japan. There is nothing to enlighten those who are prepared to employ their energies and risk their capital at these places in order to give practical effect to the several Treaties of Commerce with

Japan, and especially to the Convention of Osaka of the 16th of May last, save the promises made in that Convention.

The committee think that the Chamber has cause for loud and strong complaint against those to whom our Governments have entrusted the interests of trade in Japan for not having supplied the information which it sought, and which it showed itself prepared to assist them in obtaining. The action of the general committee in February last, three months before the Convention was made, and when it first became known that the matter was under discussion in Yedo, shows that the Chamber neglected none of its duties, but endeavoured to give that aid to commercial interests imperatively called for at the hands of a public body so especially constituted for the protection and fostering of trade.

In conclusion the committee recommend that this report be printed, and that copies be forwarded to the foreign representatives accompanied by a letter from the chairman of the Chamber requesting them to transmit the same to their respective Governments. Also that copies of the report be sent to the several Chambers of Commerce in Europe, the United States, and the East, and to the local newspapers for publication.

The Committee in making this recommendation feel that this is the only course for the Chamber to pursue. The opening of Osaka and Hiogo on the 1st January next makes it now too late for any new information to be of service, and it should be clearly recorded that notwithstanding the enterprise shown by those who have developed the trade with Japan into what it now is, they are left in as complete ignorance of the means to be taken even for the protection of their lives and property at the new places to be opened, as they were when they came to Japan under the first treaties in July 1859.

NAGASAKI.

From Nagasaki we hear that the City of Nantes had been out on a trial trip and was reported as sold. The Keangsoo had been taken over and departed for Kagosima. The British Admiral Sir Harry Keppel and his entire squadron left for Hiogo on the 11th Dec.

TIENTSIN.

A letter dated Dec. 7 says :—

Mr. Burlinghame left here in H.B.M. gunboat Dove on the 6th for Takoo. On the Dove passing the American and Danish Consulates their flags were dipped as a farewell mark of esteem for his Excellency the first Chinese Ambassador. In the Peking Gazette of the 29th ultimo there is an edict notifying that Col. Muh-tangah had at Pachow, a district city 100 le from Tientsin, fallen in with the body of mounted robbers who had been lately infesting the route from Peking to Tientsin, and had destroyed over a hundred of them, besides capturing a number of horses and getting possession of a quantity of arms.

The steamer Miaca, which started from here on the 21st, and had her shaft broken while going down the river, will, it is now understood, be able to leave this port under sail for Shanghai, some Chinese having engaged to pull her down to Takoo.

A fire broke out in the north-eastern suburbs of Tientsin on the evening of the 4th, and before being got under destroyed a considerable quantity of house and other property. The weather has become remarkably mild and the river is at present quite free from ice from here to Takoo, so that boats with cargo arrived here this morning (7th inst.) from that place. After the departure of the Szechuen and Ying-tze-fei, we do not expect any other steamer here from Shanghai this season.

We are led to understand that our Commissioner of Customs has already made arrangements to bring the Tientsin mails from Chefoo or Chinkiang during the winter. The U.S. war steamer Ashuelot arrived at Takoo at 11 A.M. on the 6th, and she would leave with his Excellency Mr. Burlinghame and suite for Shanghai. H.B.M. gunboat Dove returned from Takoo to her anchorage off the British Settlement this morning. As there is every appearance of a northerly gale coming on which would close up the river from here to Takoo in twelve hours, the Dove dared not make any stay in Takoo, beyond what was necessary to place his Excellency and suite on board the Ashuelot.

Another letter, dated 14th Dec., says :—

With regard to the 5th clause of the local suggestions by the Tientsin community to his Excellency Sir Rutherford Alcock, to the effect that the public business of the Customs should be carried on in one building, I now learn that Commissioner Dick had already taken steps to have this done ; and that the Inspector-General of Customs, Mr. Hart, had sanctioned his application on the subject. It is, therefore, very probable that by the middle of next season we shall be in a position to transact all our Customs' business in one building, near the river side. The carrying out of this plan will prove of inestimable benefit to mercantile people and masters of vessels, in transacting their Customs' business expeditiously ; and we have therefore again to thank Mr. Dick for attending to the wants of the mercantile public, by effecting the above mentioned arrangement.

We hear of bodies of mounted robbers appearing at several different points in this province ; and there is every cause to fear we shall see this region much disturbed this winter by the depredations of banditti and starving people combined.

There is still a little business doing in manufactures, but the quantity done is indeed of a very small description. The opium market is rather quiet, and, until the river is closed for shipping, rates are not likely to advance.

A French priest, who was travelling between Peking and Tientsin, I understand, fell into the hands of some local robbers the other day, who deprived him of his baggage and personal covering, sending him on his way in a state of nudity—a rather unpleasant way of journeying in the month of December in the province of Chihle. This treatment was bad enough even to make a priest swear. I would certainly consider it beyond a joke to be going through the country in such light marching order.

(To the Editor of the North China Herald.)

Sir,—The following, taken from the "Tientsin Customs Returns" for the month of November, shows a considerable increase in the imports of Grey and White Shirtings and T-Cloths over the corresponding month last year This list includes the cargo ex Our Queen. Since we last had this pleasure, prices of most descriptions of cotton goods have fallen considerably, owing to the anxiety of holders to reduce their stock before the close of the season. We now quote 8 lb. Grey Shirtings 2.34.40 taels, white 66 reed 2.40 taels, and 7 lb. T-Cloths 1.85.90 ; but these figures are all nominal, as there is no demand now for the interior, and the only sales to be effected for the next three months will be small parcels for local consumption.—

Yours very truly,
PLATT and Co.

SHANGHAI.

The dates are down to the 24th December. The London mail of October 29 arrived out on 20th December. Telegrams via Kiachta, from London to 21st November, had been received.

The following items are from the North China Herald :—

Mr. Burlinghame has arrived from Tientsin in the U.S. vessel Ashuelot. His appointment as Ambassador from the Court of Peking to the Treaty Powers of the West is confirmed. Our correspondent gives the following account of the matter :—When the Cabinet were apprised of Mr. Burlinghame's intended final departure from Peking, he was invited to a farewell banquet, during the course of which Wen-tajen, who is the controlling spirit of the Government, expressed a hope that their guest would, in his own country, like Sir Frederick Bruce, continue his friendly offices in behalf of the Chinese Government. Mr. Burlinghame assured the Cabinet Ministers that he would endeavour to do so. It was intimated that perhaps he could be persuaded to render that service officially. Soon after, to the surprise of the diplomatic corps, Mr. Brown, of the British Legation, was addressed on the subject, and next the counsel of Mr. Hart was asked ; and finding that these gentlemen and all the Ambassadors thought favourably of the scheme, and were in favour of the appointment of the American Minister as Ambassador to their respective Courts, the request was formally made to Mr. Burlinghame by Wen-tajen, to accept the mission, and agreed to by the former.

Are we to consider that Mr. Burlinghame has been selected through conviction in his superior intelligence, or because the Son of Heaven still declines to acknowledge equality with other earthly sovereigns, by deputing one of his own subjects to their councils ? That the decision to appoint Mr. Burlinghame was arrived at so rapidly as our Peking correspondent declares, we do not believe for a moment. The Chinese mind is not given to sudden bursts of after-dinner inspiration, and to instantaneous action thereon—especially in so weighty a matter as deputing a representative to the once despised Governments of the outer world. We may be sure that, however suddenly broached, Mr. Burlinghame's appointment has been long and carefully thought over. Our correspondent says : "And next the counsel of Mr. Hart was asked." We would rather believe that the counsel originated in Mr. Hart's own brain. The influence enjoyed by that gentleman at the Chinese Foreign-office is the less known that it has been imperceptibly acquired and is quietly exercised. But instances of its existence do occasionally crop out ; and we fancy the present surprise may be traced to Mr. Hart's initiative. If so, he deserves no less credit that the measure is a half one. In this, as in other respects, we must accept the step gained, and score one more notch in the wheel of progress, hoping that the crank may soon be given another turn. The permission to Chinese subjects to own foreign ships, the appointment of harbour masters at the several treaty ports, the placing of pilotage on a sound basis, have been all so many notches gained during the past year.

A circular has been issued by the trustees of the seamen's church, referring to the successful completion of that building, and asking for help to meet extra expenditure that has been incurred in connection with it; and in order to pay the passage to England of Mr. Kaufmann, whose health has broken down. The successful completion of the church and the establishment of the sailor's library and reading-room in connection with it are greatly due to Mr. Kaufmann's exertions. The institution is a most useful and beneficial one, and we have no doubt the call made by the trustees will be responded to.

A meeting of electors on the French Concession has been held to discuss the contract by which the Municipal Council have guaranteed 8 per cent. to the shareholders in the French Gas Company. A long discussion took place, at the end of which the contract was ratified.

On the night of the 30th Nov., while the ship Hindostan was at anchor under the Saddle Islands, thirteen Chinese came on board her, reported that their junk had been taken by pirates, and begged for protection. This was the second time, they said, they had been attacked on the passage from Chefoo. The first time they got off, after losing only a part of their cargo; but the second time they lost junk and all. The Hindostan saw some junks at a distance, and could see that they were having a battle, but could not give any assistance.

H.P.M. frigate Vineta has got safely into dock. It will be remembered that some doubt existed as to whether the Hongque dock could receive her.

Another gunpowder explosion, on a small scale, has occurred in Hankow. Some soldiers fired a gingal so close to a bucket of powder, that the fire was communicated to it and the whole exploded, hurting a dozen of the men more or less badly.

A Kiukiang correspondent writes:—"Another piracy in the Poyang Lake—the third this year—has dispossessed another teaman of the produce of his year's labour—5,000 taels. This of course implies another chop being sent to Shanghai direct next year via Hangchow. In fact, it is not at all unlikely to influence a large quantity of tea away from this port next season. It would be a shame to add to the number of pirates by putting safe steamers on the lake, and thus throwing more honest junkmen out of employment. Or it might act the other way, and, leaving the rogues no sycee to prey upon, drive away the bands already formed."

Complaints are made of the comfortless barn in which the majesty of British law is vindicated in Shanghai. In a case where three or four counsel are employed, they have difficulty in crowding on to the solitary bench available, and their clients are fain to stand anywhere within hail. As for the representatives of the press, they are lucky if they can get a chair, and are not obliged to use the wall as a table.

The trial Regina v. C. Treasure Jones, for embezzlement of money while in H.B.M. Consular service, has ended in the dismissal of the jury. The jury retired about 4 P.M., and returned in the course of half an hour. They stated they found the prisoner had received the money, and also that he had appropriated it to his own use, but with what intent the evidence did not show. The Judge said this last was the main point to be decided; and they had better retire again and say whether they thought the prisoner took the money with intent to defraud the Crown, or by a mistake. Eventually they again returned about 5.30, and announced through their foreman, that there was no chance of their agreeing on a verdict, as they were divided on the question of "intent to defraud." The chief Judge discharged them, and directed that the prisoner should be kept in custody, until the pleasure of the Crown could be ascertained, as to whether he should be re-tried. Bail would be accepted.

In the Bankruptcy Court, Edmund Warden obtained his discharge. C. T. Jones obtained further time to produce accounts, and on Maitland, Bush, and Co. a divided was declared at 24 per cent.

On promises of good support by the several wharf and dock owners at Hongque, the gas company (British) intend to extend their mains as far as Dents' godowns (S.S.N. Co.'s lower wharf).

A sharp shock of an earthquake was felt at Ningpo. The clocks stopped, chandeliers swayed, and water in earthen jars rippled violently. The barometer at that time stood at 30.30, and the thermometer at 60; the air close and sultry. The shock appeared to come from the eastward, and was evidently felt much more severely at Ningpo than in Shanghai. The Chinese say that a recurrence of the phenomenon will portend the approach of rebels.

A meeting of the land renters has been held at Hankow, to discuss the necessity of repairing the bund, a portion of which had fallen in, and on account of the unsatisfactory state of the municipal finance. The first was ordered to be repaired, but the necessity of providing funds for the purpose does not seem to have been so clearly appreciated.

HONG KONG.

The London mail of 10th November arrived out on the 24th December. The latest dates are down to the morning of the 29th December (Sunday).

The newly-formed "Hong Kong Association" has held a meeting at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, and adopted a Memorial to the House of Commons on the subject of the military contribution. At page 67 will be found a full account, which we take from the China Mail.

The following announcement has been made in reference to the affairs of Messrs. Dent and Co.:—

NOTICE.—John Dent, Francis Chomley, Henry William Dent, Alexander Turing and Hans Peter Hanssen, trading together in partnership as merchants at Victoria, in the Colony of Hong Kong, and in the Empire of China, under the style or firm of Dent and Company, having been adjudged bankrupts under a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy filed in the Supreme Court on the Twenty-ninth day of June, in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty-seven, are hereby required to surrender themselves to William Hastings Alexander, Esquire, Registrar of the said Supreme Court, at the first meeting of creditors, to be held before the said Registrar on the Thirteenth day of January, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty-eight, at eleven of the clock in the forenoon precisely at the said court.

F. S. Huffam, Esq., acting deputy registrar, is the official assignee, and Mr. William Gaskell is the solicitor, acting in the bankruptcy. At this meeting the registrar will receive the proofs of the debts of creditors, and the creditors may choose an assignee or assignees of the bankrupts' estate and effects.

All persons having in their possession any of the effects of the said bankrupts must deliver them to the acting deputy registrar, and all debts due to the bankrupts must be paid to the said acting deputy registrar.

Hong Kong, this 21st day of December, 1867.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The last English mail carried home what was doubtless considered by those interested in China the somewhat startling intelligence that Mr. Burlinghame, the U.S. Minister at Peking, had been "appointed" Chinese "Ambassador" to the Courts of Europe; and the intelligence may have seemed preposterously untrue to those best acquainted with the disposition of the Chinese Government and the estimation in which they hold their Yankee would-be "allies." There is, nevertheless, a substratum of truth in the matter, though it bears but a small proportion to the magnificent dimensions of the rumour. Having been placed in possession of the leading facts by one of the principal actors in the comedy, I am enabled to communicate the real history of the affair, which has been kept with care from publication in the Shanghai newspapers. In former letters I have already touched upon the determination manifested by the French in China to push themselves more prominently to the front rank in influence, and more especially to get a "grip" at the Customs' administration, in which Mr. Robert Hart's brilliant (pecuniary) success has given them good cause for intense envy. M. de Meritens, the ambitious Frenchman occupying the post of Commissioner of Customs at Foochow (and formerly French Secretary of Legation at Peking), has made no secret since the arrival of H.E. the Comte de l'Allemand of the determination existing to push him into Mr. Hart's place, and an opportunity of delivering a blow at Mr. Hart was found and eagerly made use of in the suicide of Colonel Kleckowski, the Commissioner of Customs at Amoy, who was stated to have drowned himself under the influence of despair at the unjust persecution to which he was subjected by Mr. Hart in consequence of a charge of embezzlement. Other and more probable causes are indeed assigned for the suicide, but the responsibility of the act was saddled by the French Legation on Mr. Hart; and M. de Meritens, after holding a volunteer investigation at Amoy, hurried to Peking, where Prince Kung and his Ministers were assailed with such pertinacious fury that, in order to settle the case, a gratuity of fifteen thousand dollars was bestowed on the deceased's family, and full reparation to his memory was declared to have been made. Mr. Hart felt his pedestal, never too secure, rocking beneath his feet; and inasmuch as the intention was well known to exist on the part of the French of demanding an equal share in the supreme management of the Customs when the Treaties came to be revised in 1868, a scheme was concocted in accordance with which the revision should, if only possible, be postponed; and Mr. Burlinghame, who, with the very best results as regards the rapid promotion of his friends and political protegés in the Customs' service, has given Mr. Hart his undivided support at Peking, was prevailed upon to do whatever might be possible in Europe and the United States for the purpose of securing Mr. Hart's position in the Chinese service. Hereupon followed the "unexpected" request at the parting banquet with Prince Kung to "represent" China abroad, the coquetry of despatches, &c., as you will read in the Shanghai newspapers.

That Mr. Hart finds himself very "shaky" at Peking is undoubtedly true, and it is not only highly desirable that he should be so, but also what has long been looked for. His Inspectorship of Customs has almost wholly disappeared from practical existence, and has become merged in the position of unseen manager of the foreign relations and correspondence of the Chinese Government. Only too glad to be rid of the trouble and "bother" of conducting foreign affairs in accordance with the usages of civilised Governments, and delighted to be able to make use of one barbarian for the discomfiture of all the rest, Mr. Hart has been constituted the sole arbiter of foreign relations by the Peking Government. In this capacity he has been enabled, substantially, to reward the support he has received from the U.S. Minister, and the $40,000 salary which Mr. Burlinghame is to receive from the Chinese Government for his expected services is only a small portion of the benefit he has derived from his compact with Mr. Hart.

But Mr. Hart has probably been quite clever enough to foresee that such a position as he has carved out could only be a temporary one, and that personal profit combined with political influence make a fair quarry for the ambition of others. Had his functions (magnificently paid as they already are in a legitimate way) been really confined, as in name they are, to the administration of the Customs' revenue collection, the vastly preponderating interests of Great Britain might have long continued to justify the chief direction being centred in the hands of an Englishman (or rather Irishman); but when political influence is added to the position of a paid subordinate of the Chinese Government, other nationalities infallibly awake to the desirability of introducing their own fingers into the tempting fire, and hence the present situation of affairs. That any efforts will enable Messrs. Hart and Burlinghame to save the Customs from French intrusion must be deemed a vain hope, and, in the course of the next twelve months, we shall probably see the entire institution remodelled. It is to be hoped that when this desirable result is brought about the mischievous and unwarrantable system under which the foreign Inspector of Customs has been allowed to reside at Peking and occupy himself with political intrigues will be brought to an end. British interests have, perhaps, not suffered to a considerable extent by Mr. Hart's unseen dealings at Peking (though upon this point so different an opinion exists that it is only recently the Inspector-General was accused of "Fenianism"); but the yoke of a French conspiracy in the recesses of the Chinese Foreign Office would speedily become too grievous to be borne. The solution of the difficulty will probably be found in reverting to the original scheme of an International Board of Commissioners residing at Shanghai. The institution of a board of this kind would vastly simplify matters and accelerate the improvement of the bona fide Customs' service.

We shall wait, in China, with amusement if not with anxiety, the upshot of Mr. Burlinghame's burlesque mission. As it is well understood that he is proceeding home with a view to political operations prior to the elections of next autumn in the United States, we shall not be surprised to learn that he earns the greater portion of his Chinese salary upon his native soil. What view the French Government will take of these ingenious proceedings is another interesting question.

SIAM.

BANGKOK.

From this port we have advices to the 26th December. The following items are from the Siam Weekly Monitor:—On the 24th November Mons. Duchesne de Bellecourt, Minister Plenipotentiary of his Imperial Majesty at the Court of Siam, exchanged with the Government of this country the ratifications of the treaty recently signed at Paris by the Siamese Embassy. By order of his Majesty a large number of magnificently decorated barges were sent to conduct the French Minister and suite, and any of the French residents of Bangkok who might choose to witness the ceremony, to the Royal Palace. The ceremony concluded, the treaty was honoured by a salute of twenty-one guns; a salute of fifteen guns was also fired in honour of the French Minister. His Excellency and suite were now carried in sedan chairs placed on horses to the Royal Palace, where they were received by his Majesty in person, resplendent with diamonds and jewels, seated on his throne with all his Court around him as on one of the greatest state occasions. Monsieur Duchesne de Bellecourt, in a very intelligible and clear voice, then expressed the pleasure he had in thanking his Majesty, his Majesty's Ministers, and all his Majesty's subjects; congratulated himself on having been chosen by his Sovereign for so friendly and pleasant a mission, and then concluded with cordial wishes for the duration of the friendly relations that had always existed between France and Siam, also for the prosperity of his Majesty's kingdom and Government. His Majesty replied that he quite concurred in his Excellency's wishes, and hoped that the friendly relations that had existed for centuries between his kingdom and the Empire of France would never be disturbed.

We have the pleasure to inform our readers of the arrival of the Portuguese corvette Sa Da Bandiera, Captain D. S. Radrigues, on the 12th Nov., having on board his Excellency Jose Maria de Ponta Horta, Governor of Macao and Minister Plenipotentiary to Siam. This arrival has a stronger bearing on the welfare of our community than some would imagine, as it gives the Portuguese subjects an immense superiority in business transactions over any other, French excepted, and leaves the British subject, of whom there are hundreds here, far behind, in this manner: a Portuguese subject can now lay his difficulties before the Government of Macao with every chance of redress, while, if the affairs of a British subject demand investigation, the whole matter has to be sent to England at an immense expense. We would like to be informed by any of our readers who take interest in this matter, would it not be better for British subjects were the British affairs of Siam, political as well as judicial, placed under the supervision of the Singapore Government? if so, we are of opinion it would facilitate the giving of British subjects in Siam as much liberty as the Portuguese now enjoy.

The direct trade with Europe appears to be still on the increase. The Lammermuir, chartered by the Borneo Company to load home, arrived on the 2nd Dec., and the following vessels had sailed for Europe:—Kestrel, Therese, Emmanuel, Drache, Marmion, Racer, Hanover, Red Deer, and Maury.

The following is from Messrs. A. Markwald and Co.'s Market Report, dated 3rd December:—

RICE.—Our market continued to be fairly supplied with paddy and rice at about former prices up to a fortnight ago. Since then the grain came in more sparingly, but although this decrease in supplies could of course not fail in giving a firmer tone to the market, the more so as the demand for rice both for shipments to China and to Europe continued very brisk, still we are glad to be able to report that the advance in prices thus established does not exceed 5 cents per picul. Single boats of new rice begin already to make their appearance; larger quantities are promised for the end of this month, and with the fact before us, that a crop fully as rich as last year's one has been harvested, we believe to be justified in expecting a most satisfactory state of our market in January, when our new season will be fairly opened, as well with regard to the amount of supplies, as to the rate of prices ruling.

FREIGHTS.—We have to report the following charters with rice since date of our last report:—Glenroy, Mirage, Wm. Chandler, Katinka, Chowfa, Fairy, Stord, Wye, Ceres, Parsee, Rifle, Lyeemoon, Mary Mildred, Alice, and Harriet. A brisk demand for tonnage at firm and rising rates continued throughout the past month, and all vessels offered for charter were promptly taken out of the market. Since a few days the market is, however, weaker, owing partly to the continual discouraging news from the China Rice markets, partly to the greater scarcity of rice and consequently higher prices of that grain here, and at the present moment it is rather difficult to get employment, especially for larger vessels, with rice to China while there continues still some inquiry for smaller sized crafts to the south.

We are of opinion, however, that this momentary weakness of our freight market will not be of long duration. The supply of tonnage hitherto directed to our port has not been out of proportion to the demand, and we may therefore confidently hope to see a new impetus given to our freight market, and an advance in rates established as soon as the new rice season, the opening of which is close at hand, will bring us more plentiful supplies of rice and easier prices, even should the influx of tonnage during the coming months be on a larger scale than it has been during the past weeks.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

Dates from this port are to the 6th January, but our files of local papers have unfortunately miscarried, so that we are unable to give the latest news.

The following is the statement of the estimates for 1868, which was shut out of our last issue:—

The revenue is put down at 1,409,452.34 dols.; and out of that

for expenditure 1,292,343.75 dols. will be required, thus anticipating a surplus of over 117,000 dols., and it will be very creditable to the Administration if the result turns out as anticipated. The land revenue is put down at 52,506 dols.; rents exclusive of land, 22,794 dols.; the opium and other farms at 728,912 dols. They have just been let in Singapore for 43,817 dols. per month and the returns from Penang and Malacca will make up the amount; stamps, 114,560 (the new Stamp Act, No. 26 of 1867 comes into operation on the 1st of January next); port and harbour dues, 21,825 dols.; postages, 65,010 dols.; fines, forfeitures, and fees of Court, 50,150 dols.; naturalisation fees, 1,000 dols., and on this item a considerable increase could be obtained if those who are required to be naturalised were compelled to take out the necessary papers and pay the fees. The practice in the Colony in this respect is much too lax. Funds recoverable on account of convict expenditure from the Indian, Ceylon, and Hong Kong Governments, 114,650 dols.; and value of convict labour on public works, 155,751 dols.; and with the product of the gaol manufactures and other services of this department the sum is 161,634 dols.; reimbursements, 105,911 dols.; sales of Government property, 40,650 dols.; loans from court deposits, 45,000 dols., made up by 25,000 dols. to meet the estimated expenditure for the year on the new Government House, and 20,000 dols. for the new steamer; the difference between the purchase price of the Peiho, 62,000 dols., and the estimate sale price of 40,000 dols., will not be defrayed out of the loan, but out of the current revenue, and the amount of the loan which will have been raised prior to 1868 will not exceed 155,000 dols. With 9,000 dols. taken as the value of stores employed in public works, the total of the revenue is made up.

The expenditure is detailed as follows:—

SINGAPORE.—The Governor 27,378 dols., including everything, aide-de-camp, private secretary, clerks, house, servants, gardeners, and peons. The Clerk of the Council, 4,207 dols. The Colonial Secretary's salaries and office contingencies, 15,494; Colonial Treasurer, 9,556; the Auditor-General, 9,295; Colonial Engineer, 23,878; Surveyor-General, 6,122 dols.; Master-Attendant's office expenditure under various heads, as harbour and shipping trade, 12,979 dols.; light-houses and vessels, 2,613; Government vessels, the Peiho, 12,010 dols.; the Rainbow, 5,387 dols.; making a total for steamers of 18,799. The Postmaster-General, 6,648 dols.; the printing office, 1,582; Supreme Court—the Chief Justice, 12,918, a very low remuneration for such a responsible office; officers of the Court, 2,618 dols.; Registrar, 11,400 dols.; Attorney-General, 5,158; Court of Summary Jurisdiction, 13,244 dols.; Police and Marine Magistrates, 7,574; the ecclesiastical establishment, 4,205 dols.; Medical—salaries of a Colonial Surgeon, Assistant-Surgeon, 6,927 dols.; Civil Hospitals, 4,304 dols.; Convict Hospital, 918 dols.; Police and Gaol—the Commissioner of Police, 51,499 dols., including the police gunboat, 1,512 dols., half of which is recoverable from his Highness the Tumongong; the Sheriff, 3,569 dols.

PENANG.—Lieutenant-Governor's salaries and office contingencies, 14,413 dols.; the Assistant-Treasurer, 3,720 dols.; Assistant Engineer, 5,589 dols.; Assistant Surveyor, 2,528 dols.; Harbourmaster, shipping, and trade, 6,699 dols.; Assistant Postmaster, 2,777 dols.; Supreme Court Judge, 10,645 dols.; officers of the Court, 3,055 dols.; Registrar, 9,873 dols.; Solicitor-General, 2,352 dols.; Courts of Requests, 10,279 dols.; Magistrate, 2,373 dols.; Chaplain, 4,162 dols.; Assistant-Surgeon, 2,563 dols.; Civil Hospital, 1,797 dols.; Convict, 768; Prince of Wales Island and Province Wellesley allowances and salaries, 33,215 dols.; Deputy-Sheriff, 2,645 dols.

MALACCA.—Lieut.-Governor, 11,859 dols.; Assistant-Treasurer, 2,569 dols.; Assistant-Engineer, 4,001 dols.; Assistant-Surveyor, 4,114 dols.; Harbourmaster, 954 dols.; Marine, 3,893 dols.; Post-office, 245 dols.; Supreme Court Officers, 1,364 dols.; Registrar, 2,727; Court of Requests, 4,319 dols.; Police Magistrate, 700 dols., not including the magistrate; Chaplain, 3,518 dols.; Roman Catholic Priest, 272 dols.; Assistant-Surgeon, 2,563 dols.; Convict Hospital, 1,005 dols.; Assistant Commissioner and Coroner, Town and Frontier Police, &c., 16,523.

The foregoing is the estimated expenditure of the office establishments, and amounts with salaries, allowances, and office contingencies to 441,464 dols. Then there are political pensions to the amount of 5,640 dols. for Singapore, 10,252 to the Rajah of Quedah and the family of Bundaharah of Quedah on Penang account, 3,130 dols. to Syed Allee of Johore and Syed Sabban on Malacca, making in all 19,022 dols.; and superannuation allowances, 7,811 dols.; and annuities to landed proprietors, 4,905 dols., and various other small items, which, however, are collectively of a considerable amount. Then among the details of expenditure not included under the head of establishments, are 6,819 dols. for education in Singapore, 4,078 dols. at Penang, and 3,462 dols. at Malacca, in all for education, 14,360 dols. Out of this the Singapore institution is down for 2,502 dols.; the Malay vernacular schools, 2,800 dols., half of which is, however, recoverable from his Highness the Tumongong; the Brothers' School, 500 dols.; and the Sisters, 400 dols. 432 dols. are given in scholarships, the Penang Free School, 1,200 dols.; Protestant School, 360 dols.; Roman Catholic, 570 dols.; the English School at Malacca, 1,800 dols.; besides several other schools there is 75,000 dols. for the purchase of a new steamer, 7,000 dols. for a new steam launch and steam cutter, 4,000 dols. for new boilers for the Rainbow, 6,000 dols. for stationery, 141 dols. for wine for the Holy Communion and washing surplices; extras for medical department, 15,388; police, 13,787 dols.; gaols, 32,150 dols.; convict department, 113,900 dols.; and 6,000 dols. extra for travelling allowances of the Governor and officers of departments, "exclusive of petty charges for gharry hire," &c., &c. We next come to public works and buildings. We find that 18,000 dols. will have been spent on the new Government house by the end of this year, and 25,000 dols. is intended to be next year, irrespective of the value of the convict labour to be employed; that 46,515 dols. will have been spent this year on the water-works, and 2,000 dols. will be next; that 2,500 dols. will be required for the civil magazine at Malacca; and altogether 94,938 dols. will be expended on works and buildings next year, exclusive of establishments and inclusive of cash value of stores and convict labour; 44,775 dols. on roads, streets, and bridges; 750 dols. for the destruction of wild beasts; 10,000 dols. interest at 5 per cent. on 200,000 dols. Colonial bonds; and the no trifling sum of 279,060 dols. for the very trifling military force we have in Singapore.

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—The market remains in the same unsatisfactory state of utter depression. No fresh sales of any importance have been made, and business is confined solely to giving delivery of old contracts. Prices of what goods are saleable in small parcels have still further declined. Cotton Yarn has suffered another fall of $2 to $5, and 28s. to 38s. are the only counts for which the least inquiry has existed. Black Velvets and Blankets are the only other goods at all saleable, and quotations for nearly all others must be considered almost nominal. We cannot look for any improvement until after the native new year. Cotton Yarn has suffered a further decline, 16's to 24's having fallen $5 a picul. No counts are asked for but 28's to 32's, and these have only been sold in very small quantities. Grey Shirtings: The demand for even this staple has fallen off, and even at the fall of 15c. it is difficult to place them. Black Velvets are still saleable; coloured not wanted. Woollens and Worsteds: All goods of this description are dull, and prices nominal, with a downward tendency. A little business in Blankets of good quality is the only exception to the general stagnation. Quotations are:—Cotton Yarn, Nos. 16 to 24 $52 to $55 per picul; Nos. 28 to 32, $65 to $68 per picul; Nos. 38 to 42, $57 to $60 per picul. Cotton Piece Goods: Grey Shirtings, 7 lbs., $3.5 to $3.15 per piece; 8.4 lbs., $3.50 to $3.60 per piece; 8.6 to 8.8 lbs., $3.55 to $3.65 per piece. White Shirtings, 56 to 60 reed, $3.50 to $3.70 per piece; 64 to 66 reed, $3.80 to $4 per piece; 68 to 72 reed, $4.20 to $4.50 per piece. T-Cloths, 6 lbs. $2.25 per piece; 6.8 to 7 lbs., $2.70 to $3.10 per piece.

SHANGHAI.—Grey Shirtings: A moderate business only has been done in Grey Shirtings since last mail, at gradually declining rates. Holders have been anxious to realise, and buyers have met them day by day as rates receded. Prices show a fall of 20 to 25 tael cents per piece on last mail's rates for 8.4 lbs. Cloth; 7 lbs. Cloth has been, owing to scarcity, less depressed than the heavier weight, and the fall in price is only 13 to 15 cents. Sales of 8.4 lbs. Cloth to arrive are reported at various prices, ranging from Tls. 2.30 per piece for ordinary chop ex Ajax, to Tls. 2.40 to Tls. 2.43 per piece for Eagles, ex sailing ship due in January or February. The market "to arrive" closes weak, at Tls. 2.30 per piece, but a reaction is looked for. Improved accounts from Chefoo have resulted in a good demand for shipment to that port, and we note several sales caused by this special inquiry. T-Cloths: These goods have changed hands to a greater extent than is customary at this season of the year, and, though low prices have been the rule, delivery has been prompt. Quotations for 7 lbs. Cloth are Tls. 1.85 to Tl. 2, the latter being for Mexican Cloth. 8 lbs. show a decline of about 5 cents per piece, at which small sales are reported. White Shirtings: All counts lower in value, and demand not brisk. A few sales are reported, and there is a small inquiry for favourite chops to arrive. Drills: Both English and American have been in fair request, and holders have generally met the market. White Figured and White Brocades: The low rates ruling have tempted buyers, and several sales are quoted at an advance on prices last current. Dyed Figured Shirtings and Dyed Brocades have also, owing to their comparative cheapness, attracted more attention, and sales of both have been effected, though in some instances at a reduction. The stock of these goods in first hands was much reduced, and an advance in price may fairly be looked for. Damasks, Chintzes, and Turkey Reds were very dull of sale, and could only be placed in small lots.

Velveteens: Both 18 and 26 in. have been asked for, and several sales of the former are quoted at 15¾ to 17 cents per yard. The latter were in small stock, and wanted. Woollens: Camlets have been in good inquiry, at last rates. There was also a fair demand for S.S. to arrive, at Tls. 12.50 per piece for good assortments. Long Ells and Spanish Stripes continue saleable only in small lots at reduced prices. Figured Orleans were very difficult to move, even at reduced figures. Coals: The arrivals have been 2,675 tons Australian, and the cargoes of the Ocean Home and Lady Love. The total receipt for the month is about 10,000 tons, which is in excess of the market requirements, and prices have consequently given way. The Sir Ralph Abercrombie took her cargo to Japan on Government account, the Chillingham's Hartley cargo partly sold at Tls. 11.00 per ton, and the balance will, we hear, go in the vessel to Japan.

HANKOW.—In reviewing the business of this port, little change is noticeable in the demand for manufactures, but prices have declined, and the markets for most descriptions of goods closes weak at the quotations which were ruling as follows:—Grey Shirtings: 7 to 7½ lbs., 2.3.5 to 2.4 per picul; 8¼ to 8½ lbs., 2.5.7 to 2.6 per picul; 9 to 10 lbs., 2.6.5 to 8.0 per picul. White Shirtings: 56 to 60 in reed, 2.4 to 2.4.5 per picul; 64 to 66 reed, 2.5 to 2.5.5 per picul; 68 to 72 reed, 2.6 to 2.8.0 per picul. T-Cloths: 6 to 6½ lbs., 32 in. wide, 1.6 to 1.7 per picul; 7 to 7½ lbs., 32 in. wide, 2.1 to 2.2 per picul; 8 to 8¼ lbs., 36 in. wide, 2.4 to 2.7 per picul. Woollens: Spanish Stripes, 0.6 to 0.6.3 per yard; Habit Cloth, 1.2 to 1.5.0 per yard; Medium Cloth, 1.0 to 1.1.5 yer yard; Broad Cloth, 1.8 to 1.6.0 per yard; Camlets, English, S., 13.5 per picul; ditto, S. S., 12.5 to 13 per picul; ditto, S. S. S., 12 to 13 per picul; ditto, B. B. B., 16.5 to 18

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—A large business for America continues to be done in this market. The P.M.S.S. China took 148,000 lbs., and since her departure some 4,000 piculs more have been settled. Transactions have been mostly confined to medium and good medium sorts, with a few parcels of the finer qualities. Prices present a decided downward tendency, a concession in some instances of as much as $4 having been obtained. Stocks are rather reduced, and cannot be estimated above 3,200 piculs, but large supplies are believed to be on the way. Quotations were:—Fine, $31 to $34 per picul; good medium, $28 to $30 per picul; medium, $25 to $26 per picul; good common, $20,00 to $22.00.

SHANGHAI.—Black Teas: Notwithstanding the large stock of similar Teas on the London market, settlements have gone on at gradually higher prices, and at the close are two taels above last mail's rates, many of the Teas costing 3d. to 3½d. above London quotations. The market was firm, buyers being not satisfied. Settlements have been as follows:—Exchange at 6s. 1d. and freight £3 per ton. 8,700 chests common Oopack and Ningchow at 17 taels to 23—1s. 0½d. to 1s. 4d.; 10,200 chests common Oonam, at 16.7.5 taels to 18.7.5—1s. 0¼d. to 1s. 1½d. Reshipments, 600 chests. Stock, 8,800 chests, against 15,000 at same date last year. Total settlements and reshipments to Dec. 25, 330,000 chests, against 303,500 chests last year. Green Teas: Settlements of these have taken place to a considerable extent, and though prices have been very irregular, and some teas have been bought at an advance, the market generally stands at about the rates of last mail, say two or three taels below the highest of the season. Nearly half the purchases have been for England, and still show a good margin on London rates. The export to the two countries is five millions above last year's, but it is believed that the total yield of the season will show a deficiency; that is, will be only 23,000,000 to 24,000,000 lbs. The settlements comprise:—21,400 half-chests fair to fine Moyunes, taels 36 to 45 (2s. to 2s. 5½d.); 8,800 half-chests common to fair Fychows, 25.7.5 to 35.5 (1s. 5½d. to 1s. 11½d.); 4,700 half-chests fair to fine Teenkais, 39 to 41 (2s. 2d. to 2s. 3d.); 1,000 half-chests common to fair Pingsueys, 32 (1s. 9½d.); 1,000 half-chests common Shanghai packed, 28.5 to 29.5 (1s. 7½d. to 1s. 8d.). Reshipments, 1,000; Stock, 21,300 half-chests Fychow, Teenkai, and Moyune, 3,800 Pingsuey, and 2,000 Shanghai-packed; in all, 27,100 packages. Total settlements and reshipments to 24th December, 846,600 half-chests, against 225,700 half-chests to same date last year.

HANKOW.—Under date of 19th December, we learn that the business had been confined to 500 chests common Oonam, at tls. 11.7.5 (1s.), and 800 boxes Hankow-packed Tea at tls. 13 (1s. 1d.). Only 800 chests had been shipped to Shanghai. 1,800 chests were said to be in stock, and held for excessive prices. The season was virtually at an end, and we give no quotations.

KIUKIANG.—Our latest letters are dated the 20th December. Black Teas: Some 3,000 packages had arrived, 1,000 of which (common Hohow and local packed) had been taken at taels 11¾ to 13 (1s. 0¼d. to 1s. 1d.), the balance having been shipped to Shanghai, leaving a bare market. Green Teas: Settlements of these amounted to only 600 half-chests, at the equivalent of taels 34 to 39 in Shanghai; a few small parcels had been sent on to Shanghai, and only 2,000 packages remained in stock. Future arrivals would not exceed 20,000 packages.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—Advices from Europe continuing so exceedingly unsatisfactory, the fall so long anxiously waited for has begun, and it remains now entirely with foreign purchasers to ensure its decline to the proper point. Quotations show a difference of from $20 to 50 per picul on those of last mail, and in some cases even a greater reduction has been obtained. Mr. James Davison's circular states that fair hanks are obtainable up country as low as $600 per picul. The China left for San Francisco on the 6th December with 266 bales, about 180 of which were included in last mail's settlements. Besides this, purchases have been made to the extent of 480 piculs, and stock was estimated at 1,600 piculs. The ruling quotations were:—Mybash and Sinshu, best, per picul, $750 to 810; medium, $680 to 720; inferior, $550 to 650; Oshu, best, $780 to 800; Sodai, best, $680 to 700.

SHANGHAI.—Mr. Holdsworth's report dated 23rd December is as follows:—The latest dates received from Europe since my last Silk circular, are by letters to the 26th October, and by telegrams via Galle to the 25th November, the latter giving more favourable reports of the Home market. The limited business transacted for last mail, coupled with the near approach of the Chinese New Year causing many needy holders of silk to be desirous of quitting their stocks, and consequently to submit to a further decline in prices, has led to a considerable business, the settlements being estimated at 2,500 bales, of which fully 1,000 to 1,500 bales have been in barter against imports. Owing to the recent large transactions, prices have advanced, and as the mail is closing may be quoted fully:—Taels 15 to 20 higher for medium and common Tsatlees; 10 to 15 higher for good Taysaams; 10 to 15 higher for Hainings and Yuenfas. All other descriptions, with the exception of "Chin Cum" Taysaams which are lower, remain at about the same rates as those ruling at the close of last mail; and the market closes firm at the quotations given below. The unsold stock, owing to limited supplies, is considerably reduced, being estimated at only 1,500 to 2,000 bales, but further supplies are daily expected, and as several hongs have sent their agents to the producing districts to purchase for them, induced to do so by the extensive settlements of this mail, we may look for considerable arrivals, and as these silks should arrive about the Chinese New Year, at a time when, generally speaking, the native are pressed for money, we certainly ought to see lower prices ruling again before long. The closing quotations were as follows, laid down in London at exchange 6s. 1d. per tael:—Tsatlee Chop No. 1, none; 2, 27s. 8d. to 28s. 5d. per lb.; 3, 26s. 7d. to 27s. 4d.; Karshing and Taysaam Chop No. 1, 23s. 2d. to 24s. 3d.; 2, 21s. 8d. to 22s. 2d.; Yuenfa and Hainings, No. 1, 22s. 5d. to 22s. 11d.; 2, 21s. 5d. to 21s. 11d.

MESSRS. JARDINE, MATHESON, AND CO.'S MEMORIAL.

IN our last article on the subject of treaty revision, while strongly advocating the necessity of many reforms, not so much in the text of the treaty as in its working and application, we deprecated the introduction of any measures of so startling or revolutionary a nature as would be likely to frighten the Chinese into a return to their old policy of stolid obstructiveness. It is gratifying to find that our views in this respect are supported by Messrs. JARDINE, MATHESON, and Co., whose separate Memorial reached us by last mail. The acknowledged position of this firm in the China trade, the vast nature of their interest in it, and their long standing and experience, undoubtedly give them every claim to a hearing for their independent expression of opinion; and, although their memorial in most points does not widely differ from those of the several Chambers of Commerce, it derives a special interest of its own from the manner in which it treats of one important question, namely, the privilege of travel and residence in the interior of the country. Messrs. JARDINE, MATHESON, and Co. point out that a liberal, or even a literal interpretation of Article XII. of the Treaty of Tientsin would entitle British subjects to free access to all parts of the empire, with liberty to hire or erect residences and business premises, and to navigate the inland waters. But, while insisting on the numerous perfectly legitimate advantages that would accrue to us from such privileges, they are willing to admit that absolute freedom from restriction is undesirable, at all events for the present. Small trading posts should be established at such points as might be found desirable, to facilitate the easy, safe, and rapid transmission of imported goods to native dealers all over the country; but foreigners should not be allowed to open retail shops, nor, for the same reasons, should they be allowed to interfere with the purely native traffic on inland waters. It is further admitted that the system must be introduced with extreme caution, as it will inevitably multiply points of collision, and greatly increase official expenditure. The advantages, both to commerce and civilisation, that must ultimately result from a real opening up of the country, are incalculable; and for the attainment of so great an end we must be content to risk something. But, the memorialists say, seeing on what delicate ground we are about to tread for the first time, we shall be content to see the question handled by Government "in no more than a tentative spirit," so long as they do so with firmness and honesty of purpose. This is precisely the view we have already insisted on. Let us be content with gradual progress, so long as it is safe and substantial. Let our representatives claim for us only such moderate concessions as the Chinese can have no valid reason for withholding; but, once obtained they must never again be relinquished. If Article XII. be allowed to stand as it now is in the revised Treaty, and if British subjects availing themselves of its provisions are again despoiled and maltreated, another "China war" will be the inevitable and disastrous result. To secure a favourable end to the impending negotiations, the utmost firmness and concentration will be absolutely necessary. If Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK is to represent our Government, his power should be full and undivided, and his should be the sole responsibility. If, as we fear may be the case, Mr. BURLINGAME'S mission gives rise to a division of labour, to a confusion between negotiations here, and others at Peking, we may expect an egregious failure, for which, of course, nobody will be answerable. Time, and Lord STANLEY must decide.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE AND THE LAY-OSBORNE FLEET.

THE organisation of the so called Chinese Fleet was an undertaking of such magnitude, its collapse so disastrous, and the interest excited by its brief history so great, that our readers may perhaps have felt some surprise at the non-appearance in these columns of any account of the combat à l'outrance waged in the Morning Post lately between Mr. LAY and the Foreign Office, as represented by its Permanent Under-Secretary. But in truth we are tired of the whole subject, and so (we suspect) is every one else, with the exception of those immediately concerned in it. Mr. LAY'S influence on China affairs, whether for good or evil, has long since come to an end. The correspondence we speak of has occupied many columns in the Morning Post, and a reproduction, or even an epitome of it would have taken up far too much of our space—space that has, we trust, been more worthily filled. Besides, we dealt with the whole question on the occasion of Mr. LAY'S memorable pamphlet, and then (as we hoped) finally disposed of his pretensions. Mr. LAY'S case, as he now puts it forward, is briefly this:—That Sir FREDERICK BRUCE at first approved and fostered his scheme; that (beyond posting to him a mere copy of the Order in Council) the Foreign Office never instructed Sir FREDERICK to support it; that he therefore withdrew his support, thereby destroying Mr. LAY'S prestige with the Chinese Government; that this was the sole cause of his failure; that Mr. HAMMOND is responsible for the neglect; and that he (Mr. LAY) has therefore a distinct claim on the Foreign Office for further employment and advancement. To this Mr. HAMMOND replies in effect that Mr. LAY was well treated both by his own Government and the Chinese, but that he advanced pretensions of so extravagant a nature as to bring about his own downfall; that he voluntarily relinquished the British Consular Service for that of the Chinese Customs, and that now he has rendered himself obnoxious to the Imperial Government, it is manifestly impossible to re-appoint him to a Consular post in China. Mr. HAMMOND might have added that the appointment of Mr. LAY to such a position in the Consular Service as he would now be likely to accept would be a gross injustice to those members of the service who have steadily adhered to it, and who have not had the brilliant opportunities of advancement that he has had and abused. That Mr. LAY'S tone throughout the controversy is that of a disappointed man we can hardly wonder; but he should remember that when a man, dazzled by the prospect of a brilliant destiny, abandons the beaten track of his profession, and, for the sake of exceptional advantages, incurs exceptional risks and responsibilities, he must be content to be judged by the measure of his success, and to stand or fall by the result. Mr. LAY played a bold game, and the stakes were high; he lost his head, blundered, and fell. So much the worse, not only for himself, but for his clients, who paid dearly for the abortive experiment. That part of the story belongs to the irrevocable past. In its present phase the discussion is important only as regards the personal claims of Mr. LAY, whom, for the future, we must class among the innumerable individuals who, having a "grievance" against the Government, nurse it and bring it forward from time to time as opportunity offers, as long as they can find any one to take any notice of them. As far as we are concerned, this is the last time we shall take any notice of Mr. LAY or his effusions.

WE noticed in our issue of the 27th ult. that a deputation to the SECRETARY OF STATE for the COLONIES was contemplated by residents in this country interested in the Straits. In furtherance of this object we understand that a meeting was held at the office of Mr. BOUSTEAD, at which a committee was formed for the protection of their interests, under the title of the "STRAITS ASSOCIATION," President, JOHN CRAWFORD, Esq. The gentlemen present at the meeting were Messrs. BOUSTEAD, READ (Member Legislative Council, Singapore), NAPIER, PATERSON, LEVESON, HARVEY, SIMONS, SCOTT, GREENSHIELDS, TIDMAN, and MCTAGGART. A memorial will be drawn up and an interview arranged with the Duke of BUCKINGHAM, when a communication made by Sir BENSON MAXWELL to the Duke will also be alluded to.

WE understand that the United States Government has received from Mr. BURLINGHAME a formal resignation of his post as United States' Minister at Peking, the duties of which are (as we have already pointed out) quite incompatible with those he has undertaken in the service of the Chinese Government. The Chinese Embassy will visit America first, and is expected to reach this country in May. A successor to Mr. BURLINGHAME at Peking will at once be appointed.

THE GOVERNOR'S SPEECH ON THE CLOSING OF THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS' LEGISLATURE.

THE speech of Sir HARRY ORD, on closing the labours of the Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements, contains a paragraph which has justly given rise to serious apprehensions, and has considerably alarmed all who are interested in the prosperity of the colony. The GOVERNOR observes :—"I am glad "to be able to state that to meet the proposed expenditure of "the year, there is every prospect of a more than adequate "revenue, and that it will be raised without its being necessary "to resort to additional taxation. On this head it may be as "well that I should state that, although unable to concur in the "opinion which is so extensively professed in the Settlements, "that the establishment of export or other duties affecting "shipping resorting to our ports would have a most disastrous "effect upon the trade, and consequently upon the prosperity "of the colony, I should be extremely unwilling to try an "experiment, the result of which is certainly not free from "doubt, except under the pressure of a necessity, which can "hardly arise so long as another and equally legitimate, but "less objectionable, mode of raising revenue remains open to "us by the imposition of direct taxation."

Governor ORD is a bold, we had almost written a rash, man. With "the confessedly limited experience the Government at "present possesses of the resources of the settlement," and after a residence in the colony of barely nine months, he does not hesitate to declare his inability to concur in the wise policy of Sir STAMFORD RAFFLES which has been ratified by the steady progress and prosperity of the Settlement during the last fifty years, and coolly speaks of the establishment of import or other duties, which his predecessors, after long experience, successfully combated, notwithstanding the repeated efforts of the late East India Company to establish them. And why does Governor ORD make this unpalatable suggestion? What reasons has he to bring forward to justify his allusion to further taxation? We can discover none. He confesses he has already "a more "than adequate revenue"—the Singapore farms have sold at an advance of 18 per cent., and the Penang farms show even a better result. He has less to pay for the military contingent than his predecessor, the two amounts being £59,700, against £85,000; he has no greatly increased expenditure under other items, beyond a Government house and a steamer, and the cost of these can be spread over a series of years. What does Governor ORD see looming in the future which should render it necessary for him to allude to any "legitimate but ob- "jectionable mode of raising revenue?" Is he about to undertake the conquest of the Malay Peninsula? or to drive the Dutch from the scene of their aggresssions in Sumatra? or to guarantee five per cent. to the Eastern Asia Telegraph Company? or does he merely want money for the pleasure of squandering it for marble verandahs to his new palace, or a picture gallery to teach perspective to native artists? Surely Sir HARRY ORD must be aware that the duty of a good Governor is to diminish and not increase the expenditure, to lessen and not augment taxation, to secure efficiency in the public service without overburthening the colony with useless appointments. Proposals such as that made by the Governor of the Straits Settlements must shake the confidence of the public and produce a painful impression, which time, aided by much prudence and tact, can alone efface; and it will require all the honesty of purpose he can command, and sincere proofs of his appreciation of the responsibilities of his position, to enable those interested in the prosperity of the colony to overlook the false step which we will charitably attribute to Sir HARRY ORD'S "confessedly limited experience "in the resources of the Settlement."

THE RUSSIAN TELEGRAM.

THE St. Petersburg telegram announcing military preparations in China directed against Russia, a treaty between China and the Turkomans, and so forth, which we published in our last issue (at the same time pointing out that, as it stood, it was totally unworthy of credence), turns out to have been a telegraphic blunder after all; and to the Pall Mall Gazette is due the credit of exposing it. The blunder occurred, it seems, at our own end of the wire. The message, as despatched from St. Petersburg, had no reference to China at all, but treated of that little known country in Central Asia which we call Khiva. The Germans however spell it Chiwa; and as the message came to us through the German telegraph, it was so spelt in this instance. To an English telegraph clerk the word "Chiwa" would of course convey no meaning whatever. "China" was the nearest intelligible word, and doubtless the receiver of the message hardly hesitated for a moment before altering the w into an n, perhaps congratulating himself upon his sharpness in so doing. "China" looked right enough, and so it was written down and sent out for publication. This error explained, the news ceases to have any special interest as regards China, but nevertheless appears to be of grave importance. If war ensues in the region here indicated, and the Turkomans become involved in it, complications between Russia and Persia can hardly be avoided; and any aggression by Russia on Persian territory could not possibly pass unnoticed by Great Britain. Professor ARMINIUS VAMBERY, of the University of Pesth, has a letter written to The Times, in which, assuming the report of Chinese military preparations to have a basis of fact, he thus explains it :—"Should the Chinese be gathering troops in those regions they have very likely been doing it for a long time, not exactly against Russia, but against the Mussulman inhabitants of Chinese Tartary, particularly against Kashgar, Aksu, Yarkand, and Khotan, which revolted three years ago against the Chinese authority. Chinese rule has been very often overthrown in these most western provinces of the Celestial Empire during the 120 years of possession. As for the remaining news —namely, the treaty with the Turcomans—I think it the most absurd thing that can be imagined. There are no Turcomans in the neighbourhood of China and Chinese Tartary."

COMMERCIAL MORALITY.

WHEN writing, a week back, on the subject of Treaty revision we took occasion to observe that the China trade needed reform from within as well as from without, and that the possibility of some vigorous action on the part of the Chambers of Commerce seemed to us to afford the best hope of its restoration to a more healthy condition. Since then a meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has taken place, at which (although an amended Bankruptcy Law was the immediate subject for consideration), the whole question of Commercial Morality—or immorality—was ably discussed. It is needless to dilate upon the proceedings in this place; we refer to them solely to call attention to the fact that some of the speakers were members of firms directly interested in the China trade, and that their remarks have therefore a double interest for our readers. Some of the opinions expressed were, indeed, of the deepest import. Not to multiply examples, we will merely instance an observation made by Mr. HAMILTON, of the firm of BROWN, SHIPLEY, and Co., which is worthy of special attention. He said that, "he held that any man who entered into speculations "beyond the limit in which he had a fair and reasonable pros- "pect of meeting all the losses that could fall upon him com- "mitted as great an act of fraud as if he put his hand into "another man's pocket and stole his purse." Now, it is obvious that a man who puts his hand into another man's pocket and steals his purse, is a thief. There is a further conclusion, applicable to some recent events in China, which is equally obvious; our readers will draw it for themselves.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS — PAST AND PRESENT

(COMMUNICATED.)

Penang, the oldest settlement in the Straits of Malacca, was originally established as a naval station, for the purpose of affording protection to our commerce in the East; the realisation of a local revenue sufficient to meet the expenditure was not looked for or considered as of paramount importance. A civil Government was organised on a grand scale, and maintained almost entirely at the expense of the Indian revenue. When, however, the East India Company was deprived of the monopoly of trade, the Straits Settlements, as far as the Company was concerned, lost much of their importance. Hence measures were adopted for curtailing as far as possible the demands upon India for their support, a great reduction was effected in salaries and establishments, and the Government was placed under the orders of the Governor of Bengal. The Indian authorities, little acquainted with the wants of the Straits communities, looked upon the Settlements simply from a financial point of view, and that view certainly was not favourable; for, notwithstanding the large reduction, the revenue still proved inadequate to cover the expenses. Moreover, the arrangement under which all disbursements were made in dollar currency caused complications of accounts, which it was thought desirable to get rid of, and an order was given for the substitution of the rupee currency.

This order, issued without due consideration, seriously affected the mercantile community, whose business transactions were all carried on in dollars; and who, owing to the prejudices of the Chinese, in whose hands the trade of the Straits has always been, were precluded from making any change in this respect; there was consequently much dissatisfaction, and although the obnoxious order was soon cancelled, agitation for the transfer of the Settlements to the charge of the Colonial-office had commenced and was allowed to continue.

After Lord Dalhousie's visit to the Straits in 1850, upon his lordship's recommendation, the Settlements were removed from the charge of the Bengal Government, and again formed into a separate government, subordinate only to the Viceroy of India in Council. There was still, however, a deficiency in the revenue, and therefore little money forthcoming for the prosecution of public works; civil establishments were kept on the lowest possible scale, and the Government employés were generally underpaid. Then came the Indian Mutiny; the Supreme Government of India could ill spare funds to meet the debit balance of the Straits, whilst the European residents considered that at least a wing of a European regiment should have been located at Singapore for their protection. This measure, which would have entailed considerable expense, was not at that time likely to meet with much favour in India; the agitation for the transfer was renewed, but soon subsided, under the idea that in the event of the Settlement becoming a colony, the whole of the military expenditure would be borne by the mother country, and thus the necessity for any further taxation be obviated. It however recommenced upon the proposed introduction of the Stamp Act.

After the Stamp Act had been fairly introduced, and its provisions were found not to press upon the local trade, as had been first anticipated by some, the desire for the transfer, as regards the generality of the inhabitants at all three stations, Singapore, Penang, and Malacca, but more especially at Penang and Malacca, had entirely ceased; indeed, even at Singapore it may be said latterly to have been confined altogether to less than half-a-dozen persons. With the increase to the revenue, brought about by the introduction of the Stamp Act, and the gradual extension of the powers of the local Government under the wise system of decentralisation then introduced throughout India, the position of the Straits Settlements as much improved, the garrison was rendered more efficient by the substitution of European for native artillery, the civil establishments were placed generally under a better footing, and considerable sums were expended upon public works.

Just grounds of complaint against the Indian Government still however existed. Firstly, as regarded the difficulty experienced in obtaining legislation relative to questions of mere local importance; and secondly, with respect to the apparent want of interest evinced regarding our political relations and the development of our trade in the Malayan archipelago and peninsula. This seeming lack of consideration for the interest of the Straits communities was, it must be acknowledged, mainly attributable to the feeling then entertained by the Indian authorities, that the transfer of the Settlements to the charge of the Colonial-office might be accomplished at any moment, and consequently there would be no advantage in interfering in matters connected with a Government about to be removed from their control; hence the representations of the then Governor, Major-General Cavenagh, relative either to political questions or to local legislation, in many instances, either remained unanswered or elicited a reply to the effect that "no orders could be passed upon the subject referred to pending the decision of the home Government as to the transfer."

Had the project of the transfer been definitely abandoned this would not have been the case, as under the Indian Act, a local Legislative Council would have been granted, and Straits affairs would have received due consideration on the part of the Viceroy in Council, and been moreover brought more immediately under review before the Secretary of State in Council, to whom all minutes of proceedings, &c., would have been forwarded direct instead of through the channel of Calcutta. With these modifications, it is a question how far the position of the Straits Settlements as a minor Government of India would not have been superior to that they now hold as a colony. It is true that the Legislative Council would not have exercised any direct control over the finances of the Settlement; but, from the date of the imposition of the Stamp Tax there had been no inclination displayed by the Supreme Government to increase taxation. The municipal funds, moreover, were managed by bodies of gentlemen of whom the majority were the representatives of the ratepayers, whilst any representation emanating either from the Grand Juries or the Chambers of Commerce met with every consideration; besides, it must be remembered that the control now exercised by the Legislative Council is, after all, merely nominal, the real power being vested in the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and that as regards legislation, an Indian Legislative Council would have possessed more power than one established under the present constitution, as although an enactment might be vetoed, it could not be passed against the opinion of the majority. An advantage has been gained by the adjustment of all military expenses at a certain fixed rate; but this arrangement is specially stated as being open to revision, and in the event of its being found necessary, in time of war, to increase the strength of the proposed garrison (which is much weaker than that maintained by the Indian Government) there is nothing to prevent the Home Government from calling upon the "Colony of the Straits" for an increased military contribution. Although, as heretofore, in case of emergency troops would at once upon the receipt of a requisition from the Straits authorities be despatched from Calcutta or Madras, the Indian Government being no longer responsible for the safety of the settlements, from the date of their embarkation their pay will be debited against the colony, including the pay of the extra police that will be needed. The present pay moreover varies but little from that actually required by the Indian Government, for although, owing to the cost of the Labuan garrison, the amount formerly disbursed on account of the troops from the Straits treasury was greater than the sum now demanded, yet there was a considerable expenditure in the way of pay, pensions, cost of convicts, stationery, machinery, &c., made in India and England on behalf of the Straits, which was not recovered from the Local Government; whilst any deficiency in the Straits Treasuries was made good by bills upon India.

The present Civil establishment is much more costly than that allowed under the old regime; whilst very great doubt may be expressed as to its being nearly so efficient. Government servants were formerly divided into two classes. One was composed of members of the Indian Civil or Military services, who were alone eligible to succeed to the post of Resident Councillor, corresponding with that of Lieutenant-Governor under the new régime, and whose pensions, equally with those of the medical officers and chaplains, formed no charge against the Straits, but were debited against the Indian revenue, whilst they were liable to be replaced at the disposal of their respective Governments in the event of their giving dissatisfaction. This class, which was small, was generally recruited from military officers doing duty with their corps in the Straits, who had acquired a knowledge of the native languages and shown some aptitude for the performance of civil duties. The other class, which was the more numerous, consisted either of young gentlemen connected with the Straits who commenced their career in subordinate posts, or of men who by their ability and diligence had raised themselves from being mere clerks to positions of trust in the Treasury Department.

For some years past all employés of both classes were appointed in the first instance only on probation, and not confirmed in their offices until they had passed an examination in the Malay and one other native language, and in the laws applicable to the Straits Settlements. As, with the exception of the appointments in the Public Works Department, the whole of the patronage was vested in the Governor for the time being, for his own credit he was naturally desirous of making a good selection to fill any situations that might become vacant, whilst the fact of the advancement of every officer being dependent upon the Governor's approbation, acted as an inducement to officers to show themselves deserving of promotion by their zeal and assiduity in the discharge of their public duties.

Under the present system local knowledge and experience may prove of no avail; all the patronage connected with the various civil appointments above the rank of mere clerkships rests with the Secretary of State, who must often make use of his power to provide for the friends of Parliamentary supporters without the slightest reference to their qualifications or the claims of deserving officers serving in the Settlements. Home influence must alone prove the standard of merit, and with that influence, however incapable an officer may be, he will be tolerably sure of promotion.

Already officers perfectly ignorant of the language and habits of the people have been placed in situations requiring an intimate acquaintance with both, and the result has been a serious outbreak at Penang, in which from four hundred to five hundred lives were lost and about one thousand houses burnt down—an outbreak that would never have reached to such an extremity, had proper precautionary measures been adopted as on all previous occasions, when the ill-feeling between the rival Chinese societies first displayed itself. The only remedy that can be applied to this serious defect in the Colonial-office system is the formation of a local civil service, as proposed by General Cavenagh at the time the commission on the transfer question was sitting at Singapore, from which service all appointments must be filled up; the patronage of the Secretary of State being rigidly restricted to the nomination of cadets, their future advancement being determined by the Local Government. Some suggestions regarding the manner in which this most desirable measure of reform might be carried into effect, will probably form the subject of a future article.

THE BANK OF HINDUSTAN.

A CALL of £2. 10s. per share has been made on the shareholders in this bank. This is the first call made since the property passed into the hands of the liquidators, who consist of Mr. W. F. Allen (the present Lord Mayor), Messrs. Engledue, Macnair, and Chadwick. Considerable credit is due to them for their management of the affairs, as it was fully expected that a call would be made of at least £10 to pay off the creditors' claims, without waiting for the realisation of the assets. The liquidators, in their report issued with the notice of call, say:—

"When we entered upon this liquidation the estimated liabilities were £1,409,458 16s. 11d. On the 30th June last, as announced in our report of August 2nd, 1867, they were estimated at £572,127, since which time they have been reduced to £342,140 16s. 10d., which, subject to certain claims for compensation for loss of salary, is the amount, as ascertained, up to 31st December, 1867. The branches in China have been closed, and the affairs in Ceylon reduced to so small a compass that we hope to close that agency shortly.

"The continued depreciation of all kinds of securities in the East, and the failure of many firms in London and elsewhere to meet their engagements with us, necessitates our making a call upon the shareholders, of which notice is sent herewith. We have used every effort to avoid making this call, in which we have been assisted by the forbearance of the creditors, but the collections for the past six months, from the circumstances we have mentioned, having fallen very short of the former estimates, it cannot be longer postponed.

"We are unable to give any certain information as to the realisation of the remaining assets, and, therefore, abstain from entering upon that subject now, but we hope that, with the aid of the present call, and of another of at least an equal amount, which will, we believe, have to be made to meet our engagements falling due towards the end of the present year, the remaining liabilities will be cleared off."

THE report of the China Traders' Insurance Company (of which Messrs. AUGUSTINE HEARD and Co. are the general agents in Hong Kong, and Messrs. FEARON and Co. the London representatives) was briefly referred to in our last issue. It was unanimously adopted at the meeting of the 2nd December, and will be found in full in another column.

According to a statement just issued by Mr. F. M. Page, the shipments of specie to China and Japan by the overland route, during the last eight years, have been as follows:—1860, £4,902,611; 1861, £1,222,151; 1862, £2,830,477; 1863, £3,076,364; 1864, £2,199,156; 1865, £1,034,382; 1866, £757,078; 1867, £702,578. Of last year's shipments, £690,802 was in Mexican dollars, and £10,656 in bar silver and coin.

THE silver tablet subscribed for by the Chinese inhabitants of Hong Kong and presented to the Rev. Dr. LEGGE, is now on view at Messrs. ROWLANDS and FRAZER, 146, Regent-street, and is certainly a very creditable production of native art.

THE HONG KONG ASSOCIATION.

The following is a report of the meeting held by this Association on the 23rd Dec., together with the text of the memorial adopted. The Hon F. Parry was in the chair:—

The Chairman remarked that, as a great number of names had been given in as members of the association, he would read over the names of the new members. Those, the chairman thought, were sufficient to prove that many had come forward to support the interest for which they had united. At their last meeting it was agreed that a petition should be presented to Parliament against the military contribution; and he would now read the petition. (Read accordingly). The chairman continued to say that he thought the story had been told in proper sequence, and that nothing could be taken away from it; but members could make suggestions if they chose.

Mr. Whyte said that the meeting owed a deep debt of gratitude to the secretary for the able way in which the petition had been drawn up. One feature which the secretary had added was that relating to the physical characteristic of the island. Many people entertained very foolish opinions at home regarding the size of Hong Kong, and ran away with the notion that it was something like the Philippines in physical aspect and dimensions, so that he was glad the secretary had added the clause now read. He concluded by proposing that the committee be empowered to take steps in order that the petition be drawn up in proper form, signed, and forwarded to Parliament. This motion, having been seconded by Mr. Gaskell, was carried unanimously.

The Chairman remarked that, in thus taking action in this matter, they ought to bear in mind that the Home Government followed the policy of former Governors of the colony, and that in their present action they opposed the views of the Secretary of State and strengthened the hands of Sir Richard MacDonnell. The Committee would be glad to receive and forward any correspondence bearing on the object of the association, viz., arousing feeling at home.

Mr. Bosman proposed that extracts from the petition should be printed in pamphlet form for the information of members of Parliament. Mr. Lapraik having seconded this motion, it was carried unanimously.

The Chairman then intimated that Messrs. Hitchcock and Falconer had been added to the committee appointed at last meeting. The Secretary (Mr. Sinnett) suggested that as the petition was only the beginning of the work, members who could bring influence to bear upon members of Parliament, or in any other way, should do so; and added that it was of great importance that the petition should be as numerously signed as possible.

THE MEMORIAL.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom, in Parliament assembled.

The Humble Petition of the Undersigned Residents in the Colony of Hong Kong

Showeth:—That the charge upon the revenues of this colony of £20,000 a year, as a military contribution in aid of the expenses entailed upon the British Government by the maintenance of troops in China, has proved to be a burden which the colonial finances are unable to bear. Three years ago, when the contribution was imposed, these finances were in a sound and prosperous condition. On the 1st of January, 1865, the surplus of assets over liabilities was 298,000 dols., while in the beginning of 1867 there was only a nominal surplus of 24,000 dols. shown on the public accounts. This sum, moreover, was so far from being available that the Government was driven to use for current expenditure money belonging to suitors in the Supreme Court, and when this was called for to borrow 100,000 dols. from the local banks at a high rate of interest.

That the considerations which induced the Duke of Newcastle to demand a military contribution of £20,000 a year from Hong Kong are expressed in a despatch from his Grace to Mr. Mercer, then Acting Governor of Hong Kong, dated September 5th, 1863, in which he says:—"Although I am aware that the receipts from land sales may be expected to fall off, I think it undeniable that the general financial position of Hong Kong is, and is likely to remain, in a highly sound and prosperous state; I can hardly doubt that exclusive of the balance in hand, amounting as I have said to £98,000, there will be an annual sum of £30,000 or £40,000 available for public works, and what may be called extraordinary purposes."

In a succession of despatches extending over the next twelve months, Mr. Mercer and Sir Hercules Robinson remonstrated urgently against the proposed tax. They pointed out that the colony was not able to bear the burden imposed, and if it had been able could not justly be called on to do so. The troops stationed in Hong Kong were sent out here "because England's share in the foreign trade of China is estimated at over thirty millions sterling; because this trade if mostly carried on in British vessels from the open ports in China, at each of which we have British settlements and British subjects, for whom we claim exemption from territorial jurisdiction; because in the managements of this vast trade, and in the Government of our own subjects scattered along the whole seaboard of China, in the foreign settlements now fourteen in number, we are necessarily brought into constant intercourse with the Chinese Government, and there can be no doubt that the presence of a small body of troops somewhere nearer China than India has an excellent effect in averting difficulties, while they form a base of operations if misunderstandings should unfortunately arise." Sir H. Robinson declared the troops superfluous as far as the safety of Hong Kong was concerned, and undertook to be responsible for the maintenance of good order in the colony with the aid of the local police force alone. He also pointed out that the military authorities occupied land in the centre of the town which if it could be resumed by the colony, would let for £10,000 a year, so that in a pecuniary sense the community were positively losers rather than gainers by the presence of the troops. The colony, in fact, "was established, not for the purposes of colonisation or for the advantage of future colonists, but solely because it was considered it would be a convenience to the mother country on political and military grounds."

That in 1847 a committee of your honourable House reported in reference to Hong Kong, "Nor do we think it right that the burden of maintaining that which is rather a post for general influence, and the protection of the general trade in the China seas, than a colony in the ordinary sense, should be thrown in any degree on the merchants or other persons who may be resident upon it:"—The committee on military defences in the colonies (1860) include Hong Kong by implication amongst those in which garrisons are maintained for objects altogether independent of and distinct from the defence of the particular countries in which they are situated, and the committee were of opinion, "that as these garrisons are maintained without reference to the wants and wishes of the inhabitants, they should be dealt with exceptionally, and not included in any general scheme of colonial contribution."—Again, so late as in 1861, the select committee of your hon. House on Colonial military expenditure, included Hong Kong in the class of "military garrisons, naval stations, convict depots, maintained chiefly for objects of Imperial policy—the responsibility and main cost of the defence of which properly devolve on the Imperial Government."

That in reference to the capacity of Hong Kong to pay the £20,000 a year, it will be seen the Duke of Newcastle had argued that a surplus revenue from £80,000 a year might be reckoned on by Hong Kong in future. Sir H. Robinson earnestly strove to convince his Grace that he was mistaken, and that this surplus could not be anticipated. Events, as your petitioners have shown, have justified the arguments of the late governor. The Duke of Newcastle, however, declined to alter his opinion on the subject, and wrote: "It is impossible for me to doubt that the security given to the inhabitants and trade of Hong Kong by the presence of H.M. forces, would be cheaply purchased by an annual payment of £20,000, and therefore I should not be doing justice to the inhabitants of this country if I failed to require that the Imperial Treasury should be relieved to that extent, as soon as possible, from the burden of supporting that force." While this correspondence was going forward, the colony was under a pledge to invest £50,000 in building a mint, which had been suggested by Sir H. Robinson as a means of benefiting the colony, and of saving a large sum lost on exchange to the Imperial Government. When the demand for a military contribution was made, Sir H. Robinson stated that he would never have proposed the Mint if he had been aware of the intention to impose this tax. He therefore urged that the £50,000 might be regarded as military contribution paid in advance, and be looked on as an advance from the Home Government on account of the Mint, to be repaid as the expected profits should accrue. Mr. Cardwell, however, into whose hands this suggestion fell, could not "allow the payment to be encumbered by any circuitous arrangement with the British Treasury." The colony was thus required not only to pay the military contributions, but to expend in another direction its accumulated surplus capital, by the sacrifice of which it might otherwise have staved off for a few years the embarrassments by which it has now been overtaken.

That remonstrances having proved of no avail, the Governor under compulsion brought the proposed vote before the Legislative Council. Official members, who are not at liberty to vote in opposition to orders from the Colonial office (see Sir H. Robinson's despatch, Sept. 7th, 1864,) are in a large majority on this council, and the vote was consequently passed, but the council immediately afterwards passed, by a majority of eight to one, a resolution declaring that the maintenance of troops in Hong Kong was not necessary for the protection of colonial interests. A public meeting was then held, and a memorial to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, deprecating the contribution, and signed by nearly the whole mercantile community, was sent home. Mr. Cardwell, however, declined to accede to the prayer of this memorial, and from the 1st January, 1865, the contribution was exacted. During the current year, however, the payments have fallen into arrears, as the colony has been reduced to a condition of insolvency. On the 1st of January, 1863, the surplus of assets over liabilities was $475,000, or £99,000, but since that date the expenses of establishing the Mint have absorbed over $300,000, for which investment the colony may be said to have received no return whatever, as the undertaking has proved such a complete failure that its gross earnings have amounted to little more than $10,000. The annual accounts of the colony meanwhile have shown a deficit in every year since 1863, as will be seen by the following figures taken from official records:—

1864	132,884	...	159,022	...	26,138

During the present year all old accumulations having been absorbed, it was found impossible to continue the regular payments of the contribution, and they fell into arrears, but your petitioners understand that the Secretary of State for the colonies sent out to the Government of Hong Kong imperative orders that these arrears should be paid, and that if necessary the required sums should be raised by new systems of taxation. In consequence of these orders the present Governor, Sir R. MacDonnell was driven to avail himself of an ordinance providing for the establishment of stamp duties, passed in 1866, against the vehement demonstrances of nearly the whole community. Partly by means of this new tax, which frightens the Chinese and endangers the commercial existence of the colony, and partly by means of sums which have accrued from the issue of licences to Chinese gambling-houses, it is possible that the arrears of the contribution and the amount due for the current year may be extracted from the colony. Meanwhile, however, the Praya or quay which skirts the harbour side for more than two miles, which may perhaps be considered the main thoroughfare of the town, and on which most of the principal warehouses stand, remains in the dilapidated state to which it was reduced by the autumn typhoons. The Government has no funds with which to undertake its effective repair, and has made an effort, the issue of which is still uncertain, to fasten the legal responsibility for the repair of the Praya upon the marine lot-holders. To the future your petitioners look with dismay.

That briefly recapitulating the arguments brought forward by Sir H. Robinson and in this humble petition, your petitioners represent the military contribution to have been unfairly imposed upon Hong Kong, because the garrison was not sent here for the sake of the colony. On the contrary, the island was obtained from China, and made the price of the peace of Nanking, because the British Government wished to establish a garrison upon it. To reduce the expenses of the place, merchants were encouraged to come here, buy land, and pay regular ground rent, in return for which they were offered the incidental advantages of residence in a British colony. This succeeded so well that the land tax and rates which they paid cleared the expenses of the Civil Government in 1855, and have continued to do so ever since. But, deluded by the appearance of a full treasury, containing the accumulated premia paid for land lots, which was, in fact, the capital of the colony, and should never have been included in a revenue account at all, the Duke of Newcastle came to the conclusion that the revenue would yield a progressive surplus. He therefore decided that the colony should first of all pay for the establishment of a mint with the money it had in hand, and afterwards pay a regular military contribution of £20,000 a year with its expected surplus. His Grace imposed the contribution in the face of the report by the committee of your honourable House, as your petitioners have shown. The injustice of levying this tax was thrust out of sight, because it was supposed that Hong Kong could so easily pay the amount demanded. So far was this supposition erroneous that in attempting to do so the colony has been reduced to the verge of bankruptcy.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that your honourable House will be pleased to take such measures as may procure relief for the colony of Hong Kong from the burden of paying a military contribution to the Imperial Government.

RECOGNITION OF A GALLANT ACT.—The directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company have resolved to present a handsome gold chronometer, with a chronograph, worth 100 guineas, to Captain Kuhn, the commander of the corvette Venita, of the Prussian Navy, as a token of their gratitude for services rendered by him to the passengers and crew of their steamship Singapore, after the wreck of that vessel in August last.

To Penang: 35s. weight, 40s. meast. To Ceylon: 20s. to 25s. weight, 35s. meast.

The current quotations for coal, &c., are as follows:—From Wear or Tyne per keel.—For Shanghai: £53. For Hong Kong: £44. For Saigon: £50. For Singapore: £33. For Batavia: £32. For Colombo, £30. For Galle, £36. From Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea per ton.—For Yokohama: £2 10s. For Shanghai: £2 12s. 6d. For Cheefoo, £2 15s. For Hong Kong, £2 2s. 6d. For Manila, £1 15s. For Saigon: £2 8s. For Singapore: £1 11s. For Batavia, £1 10s. For Trincomalee, £1 14s. For Galle, £1 12s. 6d. For Colombo, £1 8s. 6d.

The Admiralty have invited tenders for the conveyance of 27 tons (meast.) naval rifles, &c., from the Thames to Hong Kong, and of 10 tons (meast.) powder, from the Thames to Galle.

CASUALTIES.

The Golden Empire, Milroy, from Cardiff to Hong Kong, put into Falmouth Jan. 26 leaky.

Advices from Rotterdam, dated Jan. 25, state that the India (Dutch ship), Vonck, from Java, has been aground between Brouwershaven and Helvoet.

Advices from Havre, dated Jan. 27, state that the Souburg (Dutch barque), from Batavia to Amsterdam, has been lost in lat. 49 N., long. 9 W., crew saved, and arrived at Havre.

The Vesta, van Eyk, from Batavia, which arrived at Brouwershaven Jan. 26, had been in collision with a ship, lost part of fore rigging and damaged bowsprit and bow.

The Susanna Johanna, Pieter, from Batavia, which arrived at Helvoet Jan. 28, had experienced severe weather on Jan. 17, and sustained much damage to rudder, sails, and bulwarks, and had also pumped up sugar.

The Dionysia Catharina, Berkelbach, from Batavia, which arrived at Texel Jan. 31, had encountered heavy gales from Jan. 18 to 21; in 46 N., 18 W., during which she lost sails and rigging, and made 18 inches water per hour.

The Alexander, Dekker, from Singapore, which arrived as Boston 17th Jan., experienced a succession of heavy westerly gales after passing Bermuda, had bulwarks stove and lost sails, &c.

A telegram received 3rd Feb. from Manila states as follows: "The Rosa del Turia, from the Clyde to Manila, reported lost."

The Europa (Brem. vessel), Vicklen, which sailed from Sunderland Jan. 28 for Batavia, was in collision Jan. 31 during a gale, whilst at anchor in the Downs, and lost both anchors and chains; others were afterwards supplied to her from Ramsgate.

There was launched on the 25th ult., from the yard of Messrs Charles Connell and Co., Clyde, a composite sailing ship, named the County of Stirling, of 1,174 tons, to class 14 A 1 at Lloyd's. She is owned by Messrs. R. and J. Craig, Hope-street, and is intended or their Java line of packets. On the same day Messrs. A. Hall and Co., of Aberdeen, launched a fine clipper barque of about 300 tons register, named Helen Black. The vessel is the property of Messrs. Glover Brothers, of Aberdeen, commanded by Captain M'Cullum, and is intended for the Japan trade.

PORT OF AMOY.
CHINA.

SHIPOWNERS, AGENTS, and COMMANDERS are informed that the Dock Company's establishments at the above Port afford facility for REPAIRING and REFITTING STEAM and SAILING VESSELS.

Their large Granite Dock, 286 feet on the blocks, 307 feet over all, is in complete working order, and at average spring tides can take vessels drawing 16 to 17 feet. It is fitted with Caisson Gate and with a powerful Centrifugal Steam Pump, ensuring espatch in all states of the tide.

Their two smaller Granite Docks, one 223 feet, the other 160 feet on the blocks, can take vessels at average spring tides drawing 12 feet to 13 feet.

A stock kept on hand of Timber, Spars, Copper and Metal Sheathing, Paints for Iron Vessels, and other material required for Dockyard use.

The premises comprise Carpenters' Shops, Mast Sheds, Blacksmiths' Shops, superintended by experienced European Foremen; also an Engineer's Workshop, supplied with Lathes and other tools worked by Steam, in charge of a Resident European Engineer. Dry Godowns for the reception of stores of vessels requiring to discharge them

NOTICE TO SHIPOWNERS.
SINGAPORE DOCKS.

THE PATENT SLIP AND DOCK COMPANY execute, in the most efficient manner, SHIPS' REPAIRS of all descriptions, under the supervision of European Shipwrights and Engineers.

The DRY DOCK (opened in March, 1859) admits two Vessels at the same time, being over 400 feet in length with a depth of water ranging to 15½ feet.

Another Dry Dock of larger dimensions, adjoining the above, will shortly be completed, and available for the heaviest Steamers.

There is on the same premises extensive Wharf, with substantial Warehouse and other accommodation, comprising every convenience for coaling Steamers, discharging and storing Goods, together with ample Machinery and appliances for repairing Iron Steamers &c.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—THE WANDERER.—For all complaints ordinarily affecting mankind, whether internal or external, nothing can compare with these peerless remedies. Young and old, of both sexes, may use them with certain success and perfect safety; they are equally efficacious in hot and cold climates; no change of temperature or long keeping impairs their curative properties, which never deteriorate, and are therefore especially adapted for emigrants and officers, or gentlemen whose pleasures or duties lead them to foreign countries and various climates. These remedies any man can safely prescribe with the absolute certainty that he cannot do wrong; they purify, and purifying must be beneficial, not only for the cure of the present ailment, but for security against future disease.

REPORT of the COMMITTEE to the SECOND ORDINARY MEETING of SHAREHOLDERS, held at the Office of the General Agents at Hong Kong, DECEMBER 2nd, 1867.

The Committee have now the pleasure of waiting upon the shareholders with a report of the working of the Company during the past twelve months.

The amount of premia collected in Hong Kong and China between the 1st November, 1866, and the 31st October, 1867, and the amount collected at the foreign agencies, within that period, of which the general agents have received advice, after deducting all sums paid as bonus and commissions, and adding interest, amounts to $342,357.93, against $271,282.13 last year. This result indicates a very considerable increase in the business, while the future prospects of the Company are prosperous.

The losses, owing partly to the recent typhoons, have been heavier than those of the past year, amounting to $176,999.39, which have been paid, and outstanding averages and claims not yet settled are $22,661.22. It is expected that this last item will be considerably reduced. The annexed accounts have been audited by Mr. William Kaye and Mr. J. B. Taylor, the last named gentleman having been appointed by the Committee in the absence of Mr. Sassoon (elected at the last meeting of the shareholders); and in accordance with the Articles of Association, the meeting will have to elect auditors for the ensuing year.

It will be seen from these accounts that after carrying forward to the next year's accounts $17,000 for premia received in respect of risks taken before October 31st, but not yet terminated, and after carrying forward $22,661.22 to suspense account to meet unsettled claims put forward, and writing off $1,856.04 from preliminary expenses, there remains a balance to the credit of profit and loss account, in respect of transactions already closed, of $110,000, and the Committee recommend that this sum be declared available for distribution as profits of the Company for the year.

The apportionment of this sum, if appropriated as being so distributable, will, under the 132nd clause of the Articles of Association, be as follows:—the sum of $27,500 to be carried to the reserve fund and invested by the Committee; the sum of $27,500 to be divided pro rata among contributing shareholders; and the sum of $55,000, or $275 per share to be paid to shareholders as general dividend.

In the absence of Mr. Deacon and of Mr. Neilson from the colony, Mr. George J. Helland and Mr. E. A. Hitchcock have been selected from the shareholders as members of the Committee. In accordance with the 86th clause of the Articles of Association, two members of the present Committee retire from office at this meeting, but being eligible, offer themselves for re-election; while Mr. William Kaye also offers himself for election.

GEORGE J. HELLAND, Chairman.

JAPAN.

YOKOHAMA.

From this port we have no later advices than those received by the French mail delivered on the 5th. The Japan Herald confirms the announcement already made that Sir Harry Parkes would proceed to Hiogo in H.M.S. Adventure on the 21st Dec., and adds that he will be accompanied by all the members of H.M. Legation. The other foreign representatives will probably leave about the same time.

The Herald has the following remarks on the progress of the Japanese newspaper published by the Rev. Mr. Bailey:—Nine months ago a review appeared in the columns of the local press welcoming the appearance of a newspaper, the Bankoku Shinbunshi, and we are led by a changed and marked improvement in its appearance to notice again what we cannot help thinking a useful step—apropos of the above remarks—in the direction of true missionary enterprise. With a people constituted as the Japanese, generations may elapse before we can hope for a real foundation being laid, whereon Christianity can rest as on a secure basis. A knowledge of the outer world, of its past history, and a consent of mind with its peoples, is the most obvious preparation for these. The newspaper we mention has now arrived at its eighth number, and obtained a circulation of nearly 4,000 copies, is much enlarged and improved in appearance, and is now printed on European paper, a measure necessitated, we are informed, by Japanese imitations of former copies being in circulation. We have been furnished with the original, from which this number has been translated into a form which, after consideration, is adopted as that more easily read by the majority of natives, and think that a more judicious selection of information than that offered for their perusal could hardly be made. It consists mainly of extracts, with remarks of important news from all parts of the world, arranged under the names of the various countries. The Abyssinian Expedition and the Roman difficulty occupy considerable space, and there is the continuation of a paper on the avoidance of collisions at sea, accompanied by diagrams. The Editor of the paper—the Rev. M. B. Bailey—with judgment, avoids political opinion, confining himself entirely to information, and to educate the peaceful relations of races, so that the character of the paper is wholly cosmopolitan. In addition to current affairs some numbers contain selections from history, or descriptions of the more remarkable objects in the outer world. The remainder of the paper, which is in the form of a pamphlet of 48 pages, is occupied by advertisements, a medium of communication which cannot fail to be of great use at the present crisis. We cannot but cordially wish continued and increasing success to our contemporary.

CHINA.

TIENTSIN.

Advices from this port reach to the 15th December. Our correspondent speaks in very encouraging terms of the prospects of the direct trade between Europe and Tientsin. He says:—

"Our imports of Grey Cotton Goods this season up to the end of December has been 966,851 pcs.; and of Cotton Goods of all descriptions 1,238,317 pcs.; and last year to same date of Grey Goods alone, 966,569 pcs.; and of all sorts of Cotton Goods, 1,276,212 pcs.; showing a deficiency upon the whole of 37,895 pcs., principally in fancy cottons. This season we have had about 65,000 pcs. less of shirtings, but 40,000 pcs more T-cloths, and 19,444 pcs. more drills, the great increase being in American Drills.

"Every one here is greatly interested in the revision of the tariff and articles of the treaty affecting trade. The general opinion seems to be that nothing will be done at present but enforce the previous and existing regulations principally as to transit dues. I am anxious to see the mines opened, and to have our river dredged.

"Much interest has been excited regarding the opening up of the coal mines to the west of Peking; several hundred tons which have come down have sold to steamers at 12 tls. per ton, besides duty which amounts to 7 mace per ton. This coal, although costing at the mines only 1 tael per ton, cannot be sold at Tientsin with a moderate profit under 12 tls. per ton, both land and water carriage between the mines and Tientsin being very bad. We have much need of a new government, or to have the present one turning over a new leaf for the better. The country to the north of this is rich in minerals of all kinds, but the mines are not allowed to be worked except on the smallest possible scale, at a great expense. For instance, in one coal mine now at work there are 45 men employed; of these, 25 men are carrying out the water from the mines, and 15 men dig and carry out the coal. I have lately heard of a silver mine containing rich ore. Government, it is said, claim a royalty of one-third. The great wonder of the day here has been the appointment of Mr. Burlinghame by the Chinese Government as the head of a mission to visit America and Europe, with two Chinese, the highest of whom ranks as a Taotai, the other being of inferior rank. Mr. J. McL. Brown, of the British Legation, goes with him, as also does Dr. Sharp, who went on the late mission. Some accounts say Mr. Burlinghame goes as Minister and Ambassador to all the foreign Powers; others say, and they got their information, they tell me, from himself, that he goes as head of a mission to show these Chinese the difference between things in America and Europe and in China. The foreign Ministers in Peking, it is said, have all approved of the appointment.

It is rumoured here that Mr. Seward, late Consul-General in Shanghai (who is now on his way out from America) will succeed him as Minister, Dr. S. W. Williams again acting as Minister in the meantime.

"The season this year has been unlike any other we have had since 1860. We had no rain in the spring or summer, too much in autumn, consequently both spring and autumn crops were spoiled. The weather continues very open, the river still being free of ice, although it was frozen in part some time ago. You are quite conversant with all the China failures. Tientsin, not to be behind-hand, has also one, in the person or firm of J. A. T. Meadows, or Meadows and Co.

Mr. Burlinghame on his way down from Peking to Tientsin with his family had to wait at Kesimo, half-way between Peking and Tientsin, on account of rebels being in the wait for them. A courier was sent to Peking for an escort, and another to Tientsin for another. The robbers were seen in the distance, and reported to be in bands of 400 to 500 each; they got down safely, but a French Bishop since then is said to have been attacked on the road, and robbed of his watch, his rings, and all he possessed. The Legation escort is now here to take up treasure; we shall be glad to hear they have got up safe with it.

"There have been two fires in the city lately, the first of which burnt 50 native hongs."

SHANGHAI.

Dates by private steamers to Hong Kong are to the 27th Dec. The items since the last French mail of 24th are unimportant: The Evening Express says:—We have just received, from a correspondent across the water, the following particulars of an earthquake shock, felt by him about 10 A.M. to-day (18th) at Pootung. The fact of there having been a similar shock felt in Shanghai on the 16th December, 1852, is a very curious coincidence and we shall be glad if some of our scientific readers will favour us with their ideas on the subject:—"I do not know whether the people of the Shanghai side of the river felt the shock of an earthquake this morning; I however felt a rather sharp shock, and having felt several others in Shanghai before, I am certain you will hear of shocks having been felt elsewhere. I was lying reading when my house shook considerably; I immediately jumped up and looked at my chronometer and found the time three minutes to 10, several of my people also felt the shocks, and on my going down stairs I found a large chandelier was oscillating several degrees from north to south, and it was nine minutes before it became stationary. I shall be interested to learn how this will effect pendulum clocks; I should imagine those standing facing east and west will have the time considerably accelerated, and those standing facing north and south will probably stop altogether from the weight being suddenly pressed against some parts of the works of the clock. On referring to an old Shanghai almanac of 1852, I find the following entry:—"1852, Dec. 16, heavy shock of an earthquake at 8 P.M." It appears somewhat remarkable that after an elapse of fifteen years an earthquake should again occur here at or near the same time of the year, in December, say within thirty-eight hours of each other. I noticed this morning several distinct vibrations, say seven or eight, in about as many seconds." On inquiring, I find that the shock referred to was also felt in this settlement, and caused the stoppage of pendulum clocks in Gonsbert, Muller's and Dato's stores. The clock on the French Municipal Hall also stopped at the same hour.

Rumour has it that the mandarin in charge in the vicinity of the Beacon, who was so bitter an opponent of Mr. Reynolds' telegraph scheme, is now in treaty for the purchase of the plant, believing that he could effect an amelioration of the Fungshuey difficulty, if by having the line under his own control he could make immediate reports to the Taotai of foreign vessels on shore, and thus gain the 200 taels which his Excellency has notified he will generously bestow on anyone who gives him the earliest information of such a catastrophe. Had this telegraphic venture not been interfered with, its proprietor would, doubtless, have been willing to give all such news to the Chinese officials for a lower figure than they now offer.

It is certainly not before high time that the British Government is taking into consideration the question of new regulations for the merchant navy. Within the last week three vessels have arrived in this port from England, in all of which scurvy is prevalent to a frightful extent. It is surely a disgrace to a great commercial nation like Great Britain that this state of things should continue. Nothing of the kind is now ever heard of on American vessels, and we have no right to be behind the age. Is there no official in port who has the power to make inquiries into a matter such as this?

It is a circumstance worth noticing that there is a Chinese prophecy in a suppressed native book, to the effect that the reign of the present dynasty will cease with the coming year, and that a foreigner will ascend the throne of China. Circumstances certainly seem to point to this prophecy's being likely to become realised.

We hear that arrangements are likely to be made by the U.S Post-office for the transmission of coast letters at a lower rate than at present charged by the amalgamated Local and British Offices. Five cents each letter is the sum spoken of.

The property of the Shanghai Wharf Company has been sold to the British naval authorities for the sum of 25,000 taels. Referring to this purchase the Express remarks:—"The original cost of the property we shall be right in estimating at fifty thousand pounds sterling. It has been sold by private contract for half as many taels, at which small outlay the British Government have secured the finest naval yard they have, or are likely to have, in this quarter of the globe."

We are glad to find that the first brew, this year, at the Empire Brewery, has been fortunate. The establishment of a brewery at Shanghai was a plucky experiment, and deserves success. Last year, Mr. Evans was unlucky in commencing to brew too soon, and a long spell of hot weather spoiled nearly the whole of the first batch of beer. This year, he deferred operations till later in the season, and has succeeded in turning out a very pleasant fresh ale.

H.B.M. Consul, Mr. Hughes, was attacked in Kiukiang city, a few days ago, under the following circumstances. On returning from the rifle match one of the competitors seems to have shot a dog. He was probably, writes our correspondent, "a stranger and not habituated, as residents here are, to have furious looking dogs rushing out at them from every doorway. Your Shanghai dogs are lambs compared to the wolfish animals we are blessed with here. Be this as it may, as our Consul, who was taking an evening walk, passed near the spot, an angry mob assembled, exhibited the dead dog, and hustled him and Mrs. Hughes. One man, supposed to be a brave, actually collared and shook Mr. Hughes, while a brickbat was thrown at his wife. He at length pacified them by promising to try and find out the wrong-doer. The men followed him to the Consulate, but left with this promise. And here is an end of the matter! It is even reported that Mr. Hughes has laid no official complaint before the Taotai, and intends to let the matter drop. M. Dabry's action, under somewhat similar provocation, may have been injudiciously violent; but I refer even it to complete oversight." We cannot but think our correspondent must be misinformed. It is so clearly the duty of H.B.M.'s Consul to demand redress for violence of this kind, offered to any British subject, that we cannot think he intends to ignore the insult offered him.

Once again has the Court decided that the consignees of a ship are entitled to a commission on the charter of freight of a ship consigned to them. The last case being that of Jardine, Matheson, and Co. against the ship Strathmore.

Charles William Hudson has been adjudicated bankrupt. The departure of Mr. Wade is thus noticed in the Supreme Court Gazette:—"We have to note the departure for Europe of Mr. T. F. Wade, Secretary to H.B.M. Legation at Peking. This gentleman has been for some months resident in Shanghai, and has been engaged in the completion of his valuable work on the Chinese language, the Tsu-Erh-Che, of which the second or documentary portion has just been issued from the press. Mr. Wade's departure from the place is not a little regretted; as, by his universal courtesy no less than by his well-known talents, he attracted much respect and esteem.

By the Osaka, from Nagasaki, we learn that the Japanese have bought the steamer Coquette for $85,000.

HONG KONG.

Dates are down to the morning of the 1st January. The latest mail from London was that of 10th November received on the 24th December.

On the Memorial to the Colonial-office which we published in our last the China Mail has the following:—

"It is not necessary that we should recapitulate the events which have finally led to a near approach to colonial insolvency and the production of the memorial in question. It is sufficient to allude to the existing fact that Hong Kong is at the present moment required to pay a large sum annually towards the maintenance of troops detailed to uphold British interests in China and Japan. There are but two questions which will be taken into consideration by the Colonial-office dealing simply with the case as it stands. Firstly,' Does Hong Kong in itself—presuming that the open ports of China and Japan were non-existent—require the presence of British troops, and if so to what extent? And, secondly, Can the amount required be raised in the colony by any means compatible with just legislation and a fair regard for the interests of commerce?' It is upon the answers given to these two questions that the decision of the Home Government will be based. We can safely aver that but little attention will be paid to the circumstances under which the impost was first levied. The case will stand in its simplest form thus:—Hong Kong says it ought not to pay and cannot pay the contribution. Ought it to pay and can it be made to pay the whole or a part of it?"

The Gazette notifies that his Excellency has accepted Lieutenant Brinkley's resignation of the private secretaryship, and that James Russell, Esq., is provisionally appointed to that office until further notice. Also that F. S. Huffam, Esq., is to be official assignee in all bankruptcies adjudicated previous to December 28.

The acting Commissioner of Customs at Canton has proceeded, we learn, to Hainan in the Customs' steam cruiser Hai-ching for the purpose of exploring the island, with a view of ascertaining the capabilities of its ports in a commercial point of view. The Chinese gunboats Feiloong and Suitsing, Captains Edwards and Stewart, are operating with a fleet of junks against pirates on the lower part of the West River.

The North China Herald has a stinging criticism on Mr. Lobscheid's Dictionary, and the London correspondent of the same paper deals pretty freely with the character of Mr. Murrow's new venture in London. The latter writer does not fail to notice the difference between Mr. M.'s London utterances and those which he permits in his name in Hong Kong.

The Pacific Mail Company's service is as follows:—

Steamers will leave Hong Kong for Yokohama and San Francisco, as follows:—

Great Republic, Capt. Doane, on or about Jan. 14; China, Capt. Smith, on or about Feb. 24; Colorado, Capt. ———, on or about March 16; Great Republic, Capt. Doane, on or about April 16.

Costa Rica will leave Shanghai January 15, February 25, March 17, April 17, to connect with above-named steamers at Yokohama.

The 15th number of China Punch has come to hand by this mail, and well sustains its character for comicality and satire.

SIAM.

BANGKOK.

From Siam we learn that political matters there have been very quiet since the French Plenipotentiaries left. Neither party seems to be pleased with the Spirit Treaty. Unless all the treaty Powers consent to it, it will amount to nothing. From present appearances there will not be any difficulty in securing the consent of the various Treaty Powers.

A most singular letter has appeared in the Siam Monitor addressed to the United States Consul by one of his countrymen. It seems that the Consul erased the name of the man from the register at the consulate and treated him in such a manner that he felt constrained to expose him. The United States Consul has been very unpopular for a long time; while it is a harsh way of treating a public officer in this manner it is feared there is too much ground for excusing if not justifying it. Some are of opinion that the half has not yet been told. The United States Consul has given numerous protection papers to the Chinese and attempted to take them under the jurisdiction of the U. S. Consulate, which has given offence to the Siamese authorities. Parties just returned from up the country report seeing the American flag flying on Chinese boats. Three boats were recently seized at Paknam with the Consul's papers, and the owners ordered to be punished. The U.S. Consul is about leaving for America, and the man who is reported to take his place will probably try to follow in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor. His Majesty and Court have been dedicating a Buddhist monastery at the great lotus tanks called Sah Potumawrin for nearly a week past. His Majesty has built a splendid temple, with pagodas, cloisters, and the usual paraphernalia, at these lotus tanks, and it is one of the most pleasant retreats for picnics in the country.

His Excellency the Prime Minister has just celebrated his sixtieth birthday, and it has been a grand affair. Numerous presents both from the natives and the foreign community were presented to his Excellency. The British subjects united not long ago in procuring a splendid piece of plate in the form of a lighthouse to present on the occasion. The work is so unique and elaborate that the London artists were unable to complete it in time to forward for presentation, but sent a beautiful drawing, and the subscribers, headed by H.B.M. Acting-Consul, formed a deputation, prepared an address and presented it to his Excellency. The reception, address, and reply were admirably done, and did honour to all concerned. The lighthouse represented will soon be commenced, and Siam will have a bright evening star to guide the anxious mariner in the dark and stormy nights to a safe anchorage or to cross the bar. Shipments of rice have been very extensive of late and the price has gone up. Recent reports from up-country state that the water has subsided earlier than usual, and the rice crop will not be so extensive as expected. It is quite fair, however, and there will be a large amount for exportation.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

From this port we have advices to the 8th ultimo. The French mail of the 19th November arrived out on the night of the 24th December, making about the longest passage on record yet of the Messageries line. The P. and O. mail of 26th November was delivered on the 29th, with London telegrams to the 11th December. The following summary of news is from the Straits Times:—

"The last fortnight has been rather a quiet one so far as politics are concerned. His Excellency the Governor proceeded to Penang on the 21st December, and still remains there. There has been no further discussion regarding the unlucky paragraph in his speech, closing the Legislative Council, which smacked so much of heresy on the cardinal point of faith of the colony—Free-trade; but we believe strong representations have gone home on the subject and probably we have not heard the last o it yet. There lingers in the minds of our merchants a painfu impression which will not readily be got rid of, and which will cause them to watch the future proceedings of Government on this sensitive question very narrowly and distrustfully. Some contemplated changes of heads of the lower departments of Government have evoked some criticism which will probably have little effect. Particulars have been received of the new contract with the P. and O. Company, by which it appears there will be some changes affecting the Straits colony. Penang is left out altogether, and not a word is said about any postal arrangements whatever with that island. As regards this place, the only change is that we are to have shorter time than heretofore, viz., only 12 hours of daylight, which is not a matter of much moment. It has been a subject of remark that notwithstanding the larger subsidy and the shorter detentions at different ports the average contract time remains unaltered, viz., 33 days to this port.

"There have been no public amusements in the shape of theatres or concerts, but we have enjoyed our usual Christmas and New Year's Day festivities for the first time as colonists very heartily and merrily. The New Year's sports on the Esplanade went off with the greatest eclat. The regatta was also a great success, and altogether it was shown satisfactorily that our metamorphosis into colonists has not had more effect in diminishing our capacity for enjoying ourselves than it has had in making us growl less when we hear of taxation and shipping dues.

"We believe that Colonel Macpherson will leave for England by the first or second mail in January on twelve or fifteen months' leave of absence. Captain Playfair, formerly Acting Resident Councillor at Malacca, comes down here by the return of the Rainbow—expected during the week; and it is believed he will be appointed Acting Colonial Secretary during Colonel Macpherson's absence. It is probable that the Governor may return here from Penang for a day or two before the year is out, so as to arrange this and some other matters.

"Admiral Andreae, the newly-appointed Admiral of H.N.M.'s fleet in the East Indies, arrived here by the last French mail, and embarked for Batavia on board H.N.M.'s steamer Amsterdam, which vessel was specially sent up here for the purpose of conveying the Admiral to that port."

On the omission of Penang from the new postal service the Straits Times, in some further remarks, rather congratulates the Penang merchants than condoles with them. It says:—"We think we can demonstrate pretty clearly that they will be better off when left alone by the two great companies. As no mail steamer for Europe or from Europe will henceforth touch at their port they must necessarily find means of communication with this port, and this independently of opportunities by the opium or Government steamers. They must have a small steamer of their own, running at stated times for the Europe mails. They will in consequence henceforward be master of their own time—they will know exactly when to close their home mails—there will be no more sitting up all night, no more routing out of bed at untimely hours, and no more sudden rushes down from the invigorating cold of the hill into the close enervating atmosphere of the town; and, last of all, no need for further remonstrances or petitions to haughty officials deaf and dumb to everything but their own ease and interest. That there will be a steamer put on either by the P. and O. Company or Government there can be no doubt, although not a word is said on the subject in the new contract. And this being granted, if the Penang merchants are still not satisfied, we recommend them to come down here and see how they like the advantages enjoyed by the Singapore merchants from the endless number of steamers calling daily to and from all parts of the world. No sooner is one mail despatched than another must be begun."

PENANG.

The news from Penang contains no noteworthy feature except the disapprobation excited by the discontinuance of the mail service so far as this port is concerned. The following on this subject is from the Penang Gazette:—

"The fiat has gone forth—the Postmaster-General and the directors of the P. and O. Co. have decided that the mail steamers shall no longer touch at Penang—that is, under the new contract. An official notice to that effect was received from the Singapore Postal Department, by the Clan Alpine this afternoon, and was communicated by order of his Excellency the Governer to the members of the Chamber of Commerce.

"Well, it is something quite new for us to learn that the trade of the island and province is so mesquin, and the business of our merchants and traders so paltry, that the Home authorities do not consider it worth the trouble to insist upon the call of the P. and O. mail steamers on their passage to and from China, although that trade amounts to little short of £5,000,000 sterling per annum—a sum much exceeding that of many of our West Indian colonies, who nevertheless have their regular mail steamer, subsidised by the Home Government. The P. and O. directors have evidently powerful friends at Court!

"Something must speedily be done to insure timely connection with the mail steamers in Singapore, if we do not wish for the utter ruin of our trade. We must hope that the Colonial Government will place the Peiho at the disposal of the postal authorities for the conveyance of the mail, until some better arrangement be made; meanwhile, it behoves our Chamber of Commerce and Exchange to move energetically in the matter, which undoubtedly they will do, and, with strong remonstrance and indignant protest, exert such a pressure on the Postmaster-General's department as to cause a return to the fortnightly mail as heretofore."

On the subject of the Governor's recent speech in closing the Legislative Council, the Gazette says:—"Here in Penang, as in Singapore, all seem to have but one mind on the matter, and that is, a general regret that the opinion of his Excellency should differ from that "so extensively professed in the Settlements" as to the absolute necessity for a continuance of free trade, if we would hope for a continuance of their prosperity. The French soon found out that with the restrictive duties at first established at Saigon there could be no hope of their new colony ever becoming a success; so they wisely followed our example, and declared Saigon to be a free port, and that in so doing they have done well is most clearly demonstrated by the greatly increased trade of the port. The Dutch, too, finding that the trade of the Celebes and other islands to the eastward all came to Singapore, borrowed the hint from us, and opened several of their easterly outports to free trade, and so succeeded in diverting from Singapore not a little of the trade of the Archipelago."

Governor Ord does not seem to have had a very enthusiastic reception at Penang. The Gazette says:—"His Excellency the Governor of the Straits Settlements arrived here by the colonial steamer Peiho on the 23rd of December. A guard of honour of the 35th M.N.I., with the regimental band, attended. On landing his Excellency was received by the regimental and artillery officers, the heads of the Government offices, and W. T. Lewis, Esq., the Siamese Consul. We suppose that the absence of other consular officers is to be ascribed to the fact that they are all merchants, no one of whom, European or native, attended to welcome his Excellency."

THE PENANG MAIL SERVICE.

SIR,—On the 4th instant the community of this island were officially informed that the P. and O. Company had made it a condition of their new mail contract that their steamers should not call at Penang. Some days previously a telegram had been received announcing the passing of the contract in the House of Commons, and at that time a rumour of the above condition was prevalent, but not given credit to, as no one could believe that the P. and O. Company, not to mention Government, would thus summarily withdraw a direct mail communication from an old British colony, which has for a quarter of a century been in the enjoyment of its benefits, and the trade of which, now amounting to about £5,000,000 sterling per annum, is yearly increasing.

The reason given by the P. and O. Company is the prospect of a local service being established between Penang and Singapore. The fact as regards this local service is, that for the past few months a small steamer has been running on the line, and the writer believes has not been able to earn freight enough to pay its charges. This steamer has almost no passenger accommodation, and to establish an efficient local service the Straits Government would have to purchase and work, with no prospects of any return for the money, two steamers; and even with such a service the Penang community would receive their English mails at least five days later and require to dispatch their mails four days earlier than they now do, occasionally running the risk of missing a mail altogether.

And why necessitate such an expense and delay? Because the P. and O. wish to save a delay on the route which rarely exceeds eighteen hours, and which, judging from past experience, will in future in many instances take place at Galle and Singapore. Why grudge the community of Penang the wasted hours which will be spent outside Singapore Harbour till dawn gives to that community the twelve precious hours of daylight accorded to it?

The very fact of the P. and O. Company making such a condition in settling the mail contract as the withdrawal of their steamers from a British colony only a few hours off their route, put a strong argument in the mouth of Government in defence of their offer of the contract to the Messageries Imperiales steamers. These steamers, if largely subsidised, at least, neglect none of the French colonies; and the British Government should have been careful to see that none of its dependencies were left, as Penang now is, without a regular line of steamers calling at it, carrying surgeons qualified to attend to invalids.

Much has been written of late as to public sympathy with mail companies who meet with such losses as the Royal Mail Company lately did. And that company, looking to the manner in which they work the mail services in the West Indies, calling regularly at many smaller dependencies than Penang, deservedly met with such sympathy. But it is unfortunate that any should have been accorded to the P. and O. Company, seeing they have so soon belied it. Mr. Scudamore may talk of these companies not being carried on on commercial principles, but his policy, as in this instance of increasing a subsidy, and at the same time allowing a company to withdraw their service from a British colony almost directly on their route, tends to their being so. The company's object in passing Penang is no doubt to enable them to compete more favourably with the Messageries Imperiales steamers, but their experience in Japan and China ought already to have taught them that swift steamers will not alone bring to them the bulk of the silk traffic. The total disregard of the wants of a British community—shown firstly in their making the condition leaving Penang out of the route, and secondly in the manner in which they carried through the transaction—does not augur well for their consulting any interests in future except their own. Should they assert that the condition complained of was inserted in the interests of the British community in China, that community will no doubt repudiate the libel. They are surely as willing to submit to a few hours' delay in their mail service for the benefit of their fellow countrymen engaged in the arts of peace as for the sake of those on an Abyssinian expedition.—Yours respectfully,

Penang, Jan. 9, 1868. A BRITISH SUBJECT.

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

SHANGHAI.—The market for manufactured goods has been in a dull and inactive state during the fortnight, and values of most staple articles have declined. Grey Shirtings of 8¼ lbs. weight have given way in price 22 to 25 candareens per piece, and in sympathy with them 7 lbs. to about the same extent. To arrive, a fair inquiry has ruled for these goods at low rates. White Shirtings have met with but little attention, and rates have declined 5 candareens to 1 mace per piece. T-Cloths have found buyers to a fair extent at lower figures. Fancy goods have been in little or no favour, and quotations for all descriptions have had to be lowered. Two vessels have arrived from England with manufactured goods. Woollens: Spanish Stripes have been taken to a moderate extent at low rates. Medium, Broad, and Habit Cloths continue out of favour. Camlets, of assorted colours, have not been asked for, but for Scarlet there has been a fair inquiry at tls. 14 to 14.2.5 per piece for S.S. cargo. Long Ells have given way in price, and met with but little attention. For Lastings there has been no inquiry. Orleans, both Plain and Figured, have remained very depressed. Metals: Iron of all descriptions has been in small supply, and prices of Flat, Round, and Hoop have advanced somewhat. Pig has been dull of sale at a decline in value. Lead has been in good demand, both on the spot and "to arrive," and rates have advanced considerably. Tin Plates and Steel have both been asked for at higher figures. Coals: The market for English Coal is lower, owing to heavy arrivals. 11 tls. has been accepted for part cargo from ship. Two cargoes of Cardiff Coals have been sold to H.M.'s Government on private terms, one of which has been sent to Japan. American Anthracite Coals are nominally as quoted; no arrivals. Australian Coals have been sold at tls. 9.2.5 to 9.5 per ton from ship. Of Japan and Formosa some sales have been made at tls. 6.7.5. to 6.2.5 per ton from ship. The arrivals have been: 5,704 tons from Great Britain, 2,675 tons from Australia, 330 tons from Japan, and 150 tons from Formosa—in all, 8,859 tons.

CANTON.—In imports there is no new feature to notice, business having been on the most limited scale.

HONG KONG.—Raw Cotton: During the first week of the interval transactions were very trifling and at weakening prices, but there has since been more inquiry, stocks in native hands being almost exhausted, and purchases thus made absolutely necessary; prices are very firm at the close, the only depreciation being in best Bombay staple, which is not in favour. Stocks of all kinds are estimated at about 60,000 bales. Yarn: A few bales of Nos. 16 to 24 Bombay have been taken at private at $100. The stock of Nos. 16 to 24 is large, but higher numbers are in small supply, and 42's are quoted nominally $5 per bale dearer. Cotton Goods: Demand has been very limited, and of the 5,000 pieces 7lb. Grey Shirtings reported settled, some 4,000 were taken by a foreign buyer for shipment to the North. These goods are a trifle dearer, but most other descriptions of Grey Shirtings and T-Cloths are lower, while values given to White Shirtings show a marked decline. Fancy Cottons have been steady, and English Drills and American manufactures very firm. Woollens: A few small sales have been made at last quotations. Long Ells are firmly held. Spanish Stripes steady. Blankets tending upwards. Lastings and Camlets unchanged. Camlets very difficult to move, and quotations almost nominal. Stocks—particularly medium qualities—very large, and different values are assigned to each colour and shade, those values varying as the fancies of buyers dictate. Coal: Stocks of all descriptions, excepting Anthracite, have been increased, several cargoes having arrived, but only limited sales have been made, holders being unwilling to make the concessions which are demanded. A small lot of Anthracite, the only one on offer, is reported sold $12½ per ton ex ship. The quotations are:—Grey Shirtings, 7lb., $2.40 to 2.50 per piece; do. 8 lb., $2.85 to 2.90 per piece; do. 8.4 lb., $3.05 to 3.10 per piece; do. 8.8 lb., $3.15 to 3.20 per piece; do. 9 lb., $3.45 to 3.50 per piece. Long Ells, H. Scarlet, $9 to 9.20 per piece; do. H. Assorted, $8.40 to 8.60 per piece; do. HH. Scarlet, $9.20 to 9.40 per piece; do. HH. Assorted, $8.60 to 8.80 per piece.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

SHANGHAI.—Black: Immediately after the departure of the last mail demand arose, and some business was transacted in the best parcels remaining at rates fully up to, but not over, the average of the previous mail; rather later holders increased their pretensions considerably, but subsequently came to terms at an advance of about half a tael per picul on the opening prices. Since then, natives have held obstinately, and have succeeded in obtaining very full prices, amounting, in some instances, to an advance of Tls., 1 to 2 per picul. Greens: A large business has been transacted on both English and American account, at prices fully on a par with those previously ruling. Moyune and Teenkei Teas have been bought at Tls. 30.5 to 45; Fychow at Tls. 24.5 to 31; Pingsuey at Tls. 32; and Shanghai-packed at Tls. 28.5 to 29.5. The bulk of the purchases have been for shipment to England, to which country the export now shows an excess over that of last year of not less than 40 per cent. Supplies of Green Tea will most probably fully equal, if not exceed, those of last year. At one time a falling off was looked for, but the unparalleled business of the past three months has done so much to stimulate the further gathering together of the leaf.

FOOCHOW.—Teas were coming forward very slowly from the interior and there was every probability of a short Export to the United Kingdom from this port. Congou: Settlements have been made at fully previous rates for shipment to the United Kingdom, the Continent and Australia. A large house is reported to have offered a proportion price for about 5,000 chests of the better class of Tea remaining unsold. Souchong: About 500 chests of inferior Souchong have found buyers at about former prices. Oolongs: The vessels despatched for the United Kingdom during the fortnight take altogether about 5,000 half-chests of this description, a portion of which has been transhipped from Amoy. Flowery Pekoe: The stock was reduced to about 40 chests. Scented Teas: A few parcels of inferior quality have been offered on the market, the larger proportion of which has found buyers. Quotations were as follows (in short taels):—Dust and broken leaf Congous, 4.25 to 11 taels; ordinary common Congou, 11 to 15 taels; good common Congou, 15 to 17 taels; common to medium Souchong, 13.5 to 15 taels; common to good common Oolong, 19½ taels; common Pekoe 18 taels; Scented Teas common to medium, 18 to 23 taels.

CANTON.—The market has been very quiet throughout the fortnight with very few settlements, and no change in rates. There is nothing new to advise in Country Congous and Country Greens. Canton-made Teas: Some 4,000 boxes of Scenteds have found buyers at former currencies. As stocks were gradually decreasing, and there were no fresh arrivals, no further decline can be expected. Anything beyond medium quality was very difficult to meet with. Some settlements in Canton Greens have taken place, for the Hamburg market. Quotations:—Scented Orange Pekoe, 18 taels to 28; Scented Capers, 20 taels to 22; Gunpowder, 12.5 taels to 24; Young Hyson, 18 taels to 19; Imperial, 14 taels to 23.

SILK.

SHANGHAI.—A fair active business has been done at gradually advancing prices for common and medium grades, which have been principally in demand, and closing rates for which are 10 to 30 taels over those for last mail.

CANTON.—The only business of the interval has been the purchase of one or two small parcels for shipment to Bombay, but prices at this are nominal. Dealers still report rates in the interior firm. Stocks have been somewhat increased, but with the unfavourable advices lately received there is no demand. Sales for native consumption have taken place, which in a measure help to sustain prices which are much too high to suit most buyers. We give the following as the settlements and quotations:—Tsatlee Reel, No. 1, $480 to 530, no sales; Loongkong, No. 1, $485 t 495, sales 20 piculs; Kowkong, No. 3, $455 to 460, sales 30 piculs; Re-reeled Cumchook, $520 to 530, no sales.

At Shanghai, bills on India, Rs. 301 to 302 per 100 taels. At Hong Kong, Rs. 218 per $100. Bar Silver at Shanghai, taels 111.4; at Hong Kong, 11½ per cent. premium. Mexican dollars at Shanghai, tls. 73.3 per 100; and exchange on Hong Kong, 28 discount. Bonus at Yokohama, 312 to 313 per $100. Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank shares, new, 1 premium; old, 7 per cent. premium; Gas Company, par; Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock, 14 to 22 per cent. premium; Union Dock Company, 25 per cent. discount; China Traders' Insurance, $100 premium.

The following is from Messrs. Sharp and Co.'s bullion circular:—Exchange.—Sterling exchange has again ruled in favour of sellers, and rates are now lower than they have been since the month of August, 1858. A difference, however is to be observed between the low rates as now existing and those prevailing on former occasions, namely, they now appear to have reached a low level from which no permanent recovery can reasonably be anticipated, and any sudden rise will be immediately followed by a corresponding decline. In former years when low rates were reached it was quite exceptional and a reaction was confidently looked for, indeed prior to the year 1864 the sterling market never remained for many days together below 4s. 6d. The continued and large arrivals of treasure from California have doubtless mainly tended to bring about the present state of affairs. The estimated amount of business by the present opportunity comprises £370,000 say £200,000 bank paper and £170,000 private paper and three lakhs rupees.

Bullion.—There has been no arrival of bar silver since the 15th inst. A balance still remains on the market, and business has been done at the extreme rate of 11½ per cent. premium. There is no sycee on the market, and the nominal value is 9½ per cent. premium. There has been a limited amount of business doing in gold bar and leaf.

Shares.—Only a limited business has been doing in shares during the past fortnight and with the exception of a further advance in bank there is no material change to report. Small sales of old bank have taken place during the fortnight but they are steady at quotations, at which there are sellers. Very little has been done in new and a small lot has been placed at ½ per cent. premium, and there are sellers at 1 per cent. premium. One lot of new Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock is on the market at 15 per cent. premium. There have been no sales Union Dock, but there is a good demand at 25 per cent. discount. none offering. No Hotel are on offer at 60 per cent. discount, but there are sellers at 50. Two shares China Traders have been sold at $100 premium each during the fortnight.

MEETING OF THE NORTH CHINA BRANCH OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

The following is an abbreviated report of a meeting held at Shanghai Dec. 5; C. A. WINCHESTER, Esq., in the chair:—

Dr. WINCHESTER drew attention to the vacant post of secretary, which office had been filled for a lengthened period by Mr. Edward Lawrance, who died within the last few days. At the request of the Council, he brought forward a proposition that the acting secretary be authorised to address a letter of condolence to Mrs. Lawrance on behalf of the society. This proposition having been seconded by Mr. Kingsmill, was carried unanimously. Dr. Winchester then announced that Mr. Dulcken had promised to fulfil the duties of hon. secretary for the remainder of the current year. He also brought to the notice of the meeting a letter received from ex-Taotai Woo, requesting the society to give up possession of the rooms at as early a date as possible. After some discussion regarding future accommodation for the society,

The CHAIRMAN then mentioned that since the last meeting two valuable papers had been received; one on the Columbidæ of Formosa, by Mr. Watters, the other a chart, accompanied by a description of the agricultural products of China, which he hoped would be read at an early meeting of the society.

Mr. KINGSMILL then read his paper entitled Remarks on the Debasement of the Copper Cash Currency in China, with special reference to its effects on the tea trade of the Yangtsze ports, showing the dependency of the prices paid for tea in China on the ruling rates for copper cash, pointing out enormous fluctuations which had taken place in the latter, and suggesting as a remedy that at the revision of the Treaty of Tientsin the policy of a thorough reform in the currency be urged on the Chinese Government. He suggested that a new cash currency, founded on the average standard of the 18th century, should be issued from mints established under foreign supervision in various parts of the empire, each coin bearing on its face in Chinese characters the name of the mint and mintmaster as a protection against fraud. Tables of the standard value and the rate at which the coin could be issued accompanied the paper. As a further suggestion, which he believed was a new one, he advised the issue of silver coin equivalent in value to 1,000 cash, and of a standard of fineness equal to Shanghai sycee. These coins to be mutually interchangeable at all times at the Government mints, the value of this coin he calculated would be equal to Shanghai Tls. 0.675. The advantages of such a course would be evident, and he considered that such a course would equalise the rate of exchange throughout the Empire, without interfering in the slightest degree with the present commercial medium of the Empire, namely the tael weight of silver.

The CHAIRMAN said that one of the most extraordinary circumstances connected with China was that so great an Empire, and one so largely engaged in commercial operations, should be actually without a currency. Though aided to a certain extent by sycee and gold, it was nevertheless the fact that all trading transactions are founded on the value of copper cash. Whether the great staples of production were paid for in dollars, as in the case of silk, or in sycee, it is nevertheless the fact that the purchase-money was arranged in copper cash, and was afterwards calculated in silver at the rate of the day. He could not say what were the present prospects of any change for the better, looking at the slow steps which had been made in the introduction of the new system in the colony of Hong Kong. He had still no doubt that it would be an advantage if the Chinese Government became alive to the benefit to be derived from an established silver medium. The whole monetary system required to be simplified and made safer, and it was of the highest importance that instead of banker's orders supposed to be drawn against sycee in the hands of a broker, some system of regular cash payments should be instituted. The whole system of Chinese banking was most extraordinary and as yet was but little understood.

Mr. ROBERTSON thought there could be no difference of opinion on the subject, but he could not see how the introduction of a better system of currency could lead to obtaining goods at a cheaper rate. Doubtless an improved system would lead to greater regularity in price, but the writer had overlooked one point. There was, in the present state of China, no means of exercising a proper control over the operations of the mints. Each provincial officer would issue his own cash of a deteriorated quality, and he doubted the ability of the Government to establish any regular system.

Mr. KINGSMILL stated that the impossibility of arriving at once at perfection, was no argument against the introduction of a gradual reform. The remedy which he had suggested was not new to the Chinese, and had been adopted by the earlier monarchs of the present dynasty. As in all other settled Governments, the laws of China were explicit as to the infliction of condign punishment on illegal coiners, all that was necessary was to have them set in motion by the proper authorities.

Mr. JOHNSON thought that Mr. Kingsmill's paper was one of great interest, and that the facts brought forward were worthy of considerable attention. There could be no doubt that the fluctuating value of Copper Cash exercised a disturbing influence upon the prices of native produce, but the question of comparative variation of prices was one of great difficulty, as we can rarely be certain that we have got hold of all the conditions, and are apt, too often, to confound cause with effect.

Mr. KINGSMILL then spoke of the advantage to the Chinese student of such papers as Mr. Mayers had prepared. He had more than once experienced the difficulties spoken of in obtaining dates of events, and he thought that every credit was due to Mr. Mayers for the task which he had taken on himself, and felt that the society should be grateful to him for having been made the medium for the publication of such valuable tables.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Mayers was then carried unanimously, and the meeting then separated.

LONDON, WEDNESDAY, FEB. 12, 1868.

THE CHINESE EMBASSY AND THE REVISION OF THE TREATY.

WHEN the startling news of Mr. BURLINGHAME'S appointment first reached this country, we expressed our inability to understand what reasons could possibly exist for the adoption of such a step at the present time. The impending revision of the Treaty clearly did not necessitate it, for as we then remarked, the Treaty ought to be revised on the spot where it was made. Such a question could not be profitably discussed here; besides, had we not our ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY and MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY there, at Peking, armed with full powers, and supplied with all needful information in the form of Memorials? To what mysterious power then were we to attribute this remarkable and (to the uninitiated) very sudden resolution on the part of Prince KUNG and his advisers? The tenor of our news by last mail throws some light on the subject. There are many conflicting interests involved in the system of Chinese foreign politics; the impending revision would seem to be fraught with danger to some of them; an effort to postpone it, if possible, was resolved on; and hence the "unexpected" proposal to Mr. BURLINGHAME. We cannot believe that this notable scheme will achieve the success that it assuredly does not deserve. Unfortunately, it is not difficult to credit the assertion that certain influence exercised upon Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK has sufficed to procure his consent to a postponement of the revision; but there is very little chance that the French will assent to such an audacious proposition. As for the reception of Mr. BURLINGHAME in this country, we expect that Lord STANLEY will turn a deaf ear to his overtures in the character of Chinese Ambassador or Envoy (very) Extraordinary. On the other hand, as the cicerone of several Chinese gentlemen—men, we trust, of good position and intelligence, whose travels and observations ought to be productive of much good hereafter—we may promise him a hospitable reception and a hearty welcome. We understand that the United States Government has received from Mr. BURLINGHAME a formal resignation of his post as United States' Minister at Peking, the duties of which are (as we have already pointed out) quite incompatible with those he has undertaken in the service of the Chinese Government. The Chinese Embassy will visit America first, and is expected to reach this country in May. A successor to Mr. BURLINGHAME at Peking will at once be appointed.

THE PENANG MAIL SERVICE.

ARRANGEMENTS are we believe in progress by the British India Steam Company for converting their monthly service between Calcutta, Penang, and Singapore into a fortnightly one, by whichmeans a great service will be rendered to Penang, as the P. and O. contract does not include that port. We believe that the British India Company will also arrange with the P. and O. Company to convey through passengers. We understand that the fleet of this company, including their last two purchases (the Oriental, of 1,500 tons, and the Scotia, of 1,200 tons), now consists of the very respectable number of twenty-five vessels. In another column will be found a letter from "A British Subject," containing some severe strictures on the new order of things, and no doubt the same views are generally shared in by the majority of the residents. We are inclined to think, however, that—as the Straits Times predicts—the Penang merchants will in the end find reason to congratulate themselves on the change. No consideration—not even a lasting inconvenience to the Penang community—would have justified the Government in placing our entire Eastern mail service in the hands of the French Government—a course which "A British Subject," in his anger against the P. and O. Company, seems inclined to advocate.

A STRAITS SETTLEMENTS ASSOCIATION.

WE noticed in our issue of the 27th ult. that a deputation to the SECRETARY OF STATE for the COLONIES was contemplated by residents in this country interested in the Straits. In furtherance of this object a meeting has been held at the office of Mr. BOUSTEAD, at which a committee was formed under the title of the "STRAITS SETTLEMENTS ASSOCIATION," President, JOHN CRAWFORD, Esq. The gentlemen present at the meeting were Messrs. NAPIER (Chairman), PATERSON (Deputy-Chairman), SIMONS, BOUSTEAD, READ (Member Legislative Council, Singapore), LEVESON, SCOTT, HARVEY, GREENSHIELDS, TIDMAN, and MCTAGGART. The following resolutions were passed:—

"That Mr. W. Napier be the chairman, Mr. James Guthrie the deputy-chairman, and the following to form a committee—Mr. Edward Boustead, Mr. William Paterson, Mr. John Harvey, Mr. James Fraser, Mr. Henry Minchin Simons, Mr. Jonathan Padday, Mr. William McTaggart, Mr. Edward John Leveson, Mr. John James Greenshields, Mr. William Wardrop Shaw; that Mr. William Paterson should act as treasurer of the association; that the meeting, having considered certain objections to the Act of the Governor and Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements, for constituting a Supreme Court therein, and to the report of the Commissioners appointed by the Governor in connection therewith, it is advisable that such objections should be submitted to the Secretary of State for the colonies without delay; that the Act passed by the Governor and Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements 'for the regulation of passenger ships' also appears open to serious objections, which ought to be brought before the Secretary of State for the colonies before such Act is confirmed."

Monetary and Commercial.

In consequence of a dispute between Messrs. Richardson and McClelland, the inspectors, and the partners and creditors of the firm of Messrs. Small and Co., the dividend has been delayed; but sufficient funds are in the hands of the inspectors to pay a dividend of nearly 4s., and this will shortly be distributed. The estate is expected to yield only a few pence more, and consequently our comments on the failure, which were complained of at the time, were rather under the mark, as we estimated the dividend at 5s. The dispute in the affairs of Messrs. Fletcher and Co., noticed in our issue of Nov. 26, has not been disposed of, and still retards the further dividend of 2s. Another shilling has been paid on the estate of Messrs. Buchanan, Hamilton, and Co., Glasgow, making 5s. in all.

The property of the "China Steamship and Labuan Coal Company" in the island of Labuan was offered by public auction on the 30th January, but in consequence of the manner in which it was offered not a single bid was obtained. The Court of Chancery decided that the coal mines, with all rights, should be sold to the highest bidder, but that the machinery, plant, stores, &c., should be taken by the purchaser at a valuation to be made by a valuer appointed by the Court. Of course no one would bid under such conditions. It is to be hoped that an arrangement will be made with some of the old shareholders whereby the property may be saved from that wholesale ruin which is inevitable in a public sale. We have already pointed out the arbitrary manner in which this company was brought to liquidation, and it is satisfactory that the present liquidators are using every effort to save the unfortunate shareholders from an entire loss of their capital and property.

The case of the damaged cargo per Wild Deer, noticed in our last, has assumed the shape of a claim on the ship, with what chance of success the law only can decide. Further sales of the tea have been made at a loss of 2d. to 3d. on the sound value.

The judgment in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, in the case of the bottomry of the Isca, from Singapore to China, has created considerable surprise and dissatisfaction in mercantile circles.

At the biddings for £200,000 in bills on India, the amounts allotted were, to Calcutta £192,100, and to Madras £7,900. The minimum was fixed at 1s. 10¼d. on Calcutta and Madras, being a further roduction of 1 per cent., and tenders at that price on those Presidencies will receive about 44 per cent. while those above will be allotted in full. No tenders on Bombay were invited. These results show a continuous diminution in the demand for means of remittance to the East.

Annexed is the substance of the report of the directors of the Telegraph to India Company (Limited), which was adopted, at the general meeting on the 7th February. The retiring directors, Mr. W. Dent and Admiral Sir W. H. Hall, were re-elected, and also Mr. J. A. Franklin, the retiring auditor, with an allowance of £15 15s. for the past audit. The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

The board, with the approval of the shareholders at the meetings on the 12th July and 9th August last, confirmed the provisional agreement with the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company for the lease of their line in Egypt, on payment, from 1st July last, of £1,500 per annum, or three per cent. upon the capital of £50,000. The rental due 31st December, 1867, having been received, the board recommend that a dividend at the rate of three per cent. per annum, free of income tax, be paid to the shareholders for the half year ending 31st December, 1867. The future prospects of the company must depend, as the shareholders are aware, upon the successful carrying out of the Anglo-Indian Telegraph Company, which the board understand only remains in abeyance awaiting a favourable opportunity for proceeding with the undertaking.

The meeting of the London and County Bank (on which the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank draws) adopted the Report which recommends a dividend and bonus amounting together to 9 per cent. for the half-year ended the 31s of December, being (with the 11 per cent. paid in August) equal to 20 per cent. per annum. About £7,000 will remain to be carried forward. The fact that none of the bank's capital is locked up in railways or speculative operations was noticed as a very favourable feature.

Messrs. Leveson, Lewis, and Co., of 6, Lime-street, have issued the following circular :—

The partnership hitherto existing between Mr. G. A. Remé and Mr. E. J. Leveson, carrying on business in Singapore under the style of Remé, Leveson, and Co., ceased on the 31st Dec. last by effluxion of time. The business in Singapore will be continued as heretofore by Mr. G. A. Remé and Mr. G. H. Remé, under the firm of Remé Brothers. Mr. E. J. Leveson has this day established himself in London in conjunction with Mr. John Lewis, under the style of Leveson, Lewis, and Co.

Messrs. Westray, Gibbes, and Hardcastle, of New York, largely engaged in the China trade, have, we understand, effected a composition with their creditors of 50 cents in the dollar, and the business of the firm is resumed.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Pera from Southampton on the 4th inst. was—in gold to Galle, £3,500 ; to Madras, £736 ; in silver to Hong Kong, £105 ; to Shanghai, £13,200 ; total in gold, £4,236 ; in silver, £13,305.

Continental Intelligence.

HAMBURG, FEB. 6.

At the last meeting of the Geographical Society at St. Petersburgh, Admiral Lutken in the chair, it was announced that the section for Siberian affairs had decided to engage Colonel Fitinhof, the inspector of mines, to undertake an exploring excursion to examine the bed of the Onote, an affluent of the Malaia Bielaia, that falls into the Angara, and the geological formation of the neighbourhood, as Villan Irete, on the Onote, is the only spot in all Russia, as far as has been ascertained as yet, where jade is found, and then only in fragments in the bed of the river, as in some parts of China, Corea, and Upper Thibet, and never in stratified rocks. It would therefore be highly interesting to discover to what formation these stones originally belong, and to ascertain whether in ancient times any industrial establishments existed on the Onote for the manufacture of those ornaments and weapons of this stone, at times found in Western Europe, but whose origin is shrouded in mystery.

It was further announced that the Emperor has resolved to send a special scientific expedition to explore the country of the Tchouktchees who inhabit the north-eastern corner of Siberia, to study the geology and ethnography of that almost unknown province. The expedition will consist of several scientific officials employed in the civil administration of Yakoutsk, together with a guide, and an escort of five Cossacks. The sum of 4,337 roubles is allowed for the cost of the expedition, besides 1,395 roubles for travelling expenses. A detailed programme of the objects to be investigated will shortly be published, among which is the important instruction to take measures for the establishment of meteorological stations similar to those already existing and so admirably conducted in European-Russia. The Siberian section of the Geographical Society has requested permission to send with the expedition one of its members, in the person of M. Pavlovsky, who is well acquainted with the country to be visited.

The official part of the Hamburg Correspondent contains the following announcement of the Board of Trade, dated Hamburg, February 3, 1868 : "According to a communication received by the Senate, from the Chancellor of the North German Confederation, the Government of Japan has given the needful orders that the vessels of all the States of North Germany, sailing under the Federal flag shall be placed upon the same footing and admitted to all the rights and privileges accorded by the treaty with Prussia to vessels hitherto under the Prussian flag, in all the ports of Japan now open, or that may in future be opened to foreign trade and navigation." This is considered a valuable boon, and has made a favourable impression among the merchants and shipowners of this city and Bremen ; and I hear that several enterprising houses of both those Hanseatic cities are preparing to take advantage of the permission and taking steps to fit out there vessels with cargoes of German manufactures and produce, to sail early in the Spring.

It is said that the agent of an English company is now negotiating with the Russian Government for a telegraph to China and Japan, by way of the Amoor Valley. The Russian part of the line would terminate at Passiette harbour, in the Gulf of Tartary.

COMMERCIAL AND SHIPPING.

As the thaw continues and the weather is mild, the ice in the Elbe has disappeared, so that sailing vessels have now no further difficulty in coming up the river. But in spite of this facility and increased confidence in the preservation of peace, the produce markets in general do not exhibit as much animation as one would be led to expect after a couple of months' interruption from the frost. Another arrival from Ceina has brought 3,000 more chests of Cassia Lignea, which, however, has had no influence on the market price, which remains without alteration and with considerable demand. There is also a good inquiry for Rice, with a tendency to improved rates, and sales of some descriptions have been effected at prices that could not have been obtained a fortnight ago. Spelter has not yet awaked from its lethargy, and prices have a tendency to recede, but no sales are reported. Money is rather scarcer, but there is no alteration in the rate of discount. The Venus has arrived at Bremerhaven from Saigon with 22,000 bags of rice. The following vessels are loading here for the Far East: Conder, for Hong Kong; Antelope and Peru, for Shanghai; Schultze-Delitsch, for Singapore; and Chusan, for Hong Kong and Shanghai.

HOLLAND.

ROTTERDAM, Feb. 7.

The definitive result of the elections is now known, except from the district Alkmaar, but it is already decided that the Liberal party has obtained the majority, trifling in number but very significant, because the Ministerialists are composed out of the most heterogeneous factions. The Liberals now number 37 members, against 35 Ministerialists, and as Messrs. Thorbecke, Dullert, and de Bosch Kemper are elected in either two districts they are obliged to choose, so that probably free elections must take place in Amsterdam, Hoorn, and Groningen, the result of which will be that, at least, one Liberal will be elected, viz., Mr. Geertsema in Groningen, and, probably, Mr. Heemskerk Poz in Amsterdam. The greatest defeat which was experienced in this struggle by the Cabinet occurred at Arnhem ; the Minister, van Lynden, not being elected, but in place of this candidate and Mr. Groen, Mr. Dullert and Baron Sloet van de Beele, ex-Governor-General of the East Indies. I need not say that the Dagblad is most furious, and not knowing what to do to secure the Ministers their seats, it urges the necessity that the King should dissolve the new Chamber at once. This foolish idea is, however, supported by some one, and it is said that addresses in this sense will be forwarded to the King. I, however, have too much confidence in the healthy spirit of our nation, than that I can believe that some people should act so foolish as to press the King to maintain the ministry by such exaggerated means, which might perhaps lead to agitation, and indeed there is but little necessity to create public excitement ; and with regard to our East India possessions, it is strictly necessary that a stable liberal Government should hold the reins of Government. Those of your readers who are not convinced of the necessity of liberal reforms in India I highly recommend to read Multatule's May Havelaar, or the Coffee Auctions of the Dutch Trading Company. This literary work, which was published seven years ago, and caused a shivering throughout the Dutch nation, is translated now from the original manuscript by Baron Alphonse Nahuys and published by Edmonston and Douglas, Edinburgh. I say that the book was published seven years ago, and still nothing is done on behalf of the Java population ; the Conservatives having succeeded in thwarting all the Liberal measures. I recommend this book, and I think that every one who admires Harriet Beecher Stowe's immoral pleading ought likewise to read Multatule's accusation against the Dutch Conservatives.

Mr. L. W. C. Keuchenius, former M.P. for Arnhem, has refused, as I told you in a former letter, to put himself again as candidate for the new elections. Within a very short time he will start for Java, to establish himself there as a lawyer.

Our eminent critic, Mr. Busken Huet, has been engaged as editor of th Java Bode. I think it will be well to remember here that this writer, however prominent he may be, lost his popularity by his extravagant principles.

From Luxemburg I hear that an agitation has prevailed there for some days. A number of workmen and peasants paraded the streets of that town, and uttered riotous and rebellious cries against the Government. They proceeded to the houses of several of the Government functionaries and made demonstrations. They, however, were dispersed by the military force. It was thought necessary to concentrate nearly the whole force in the capital of that Duchy. It seems that the inclemency of the winter, the dearness of all sorts of provisions, and want of work have given rise to these riotous proceedings.

In my former letter I wrote to you about the miserable condition of the Amsterdam Canal Company, which intended to construct a canal from that town to the North Sea. I hear that endeavours are being made to engage the Government to accomplish this monster work. In the meantime a certain Mr. Huet, an engineer, gives lectures in our principal town, by which he attempts to prove that this canal with sluices, as it will be constructed, never will satisfy, and he advocates the necessity of having an open mouth for a harbour. I do not think this idea will have the least success, as the cost will vary from 50 to 175 millions of guilders, and the duration of construction from ten to fifty years.

The contributions in behalf of the army of the Pope now amount to 170,000f. The lists, opened by the clerical paper De Tyd, are now closed.

From Arnheim I hear that several young men from Hanover are enlisted there in the Hanoverian Free Corps, from whence they start for Switzerland. The Prussian authorities have take some measures to prevent this.

COMMERCIAL.

COFFEE.—The market is unaltered, with some demand for consumption. The prices are firm, and little offering. Of private import 394 b. Java ex Annie Story were sold at private terms, and 1,250 b. Java Pamanoekan ex Java at 38c. On the 19th Feb. the Dutch Trading Company will sell at auction 129,600 b. The deliveries were as follows—Jan. 1868, 233,540 b.; in 1867, 31,905; in 1866, 23,803 b.

Stock.	On warrant. Bags.	Unsold. Bags.	Total. Bags.
1866	63,409 ...	320,000 ...	383,409
1867	82,455 ...	308,000 ...	390,455
1868	116,921 ...	419,500 ...	536,421

Floating, for the Dutch Trading Company, 26,700 b., and for private account, 30,200 b.

SUGAR (RAW).—With some imports for private account. The market is generally dull. About 3,000 baskets Java were sold from 1⅛f. to 1¾f. below the late November sale, and 247 kr. Sourabaya, No. 14 to 15, at 32½f., ex Nederland; 1,630 kr. do., 12¾f. to 31½f., ex Aldebaran; and 379 kr. Samarang, No. 14 to 15, 32½f.

RICE.—Of uncleaned 6,720 b. Java table, ex Jason, were sold at 15¼f., and 2,200 b. do. per Graafstrom (floating) at private terms. The market is firm, but not very active.

SPICES.—Unchanged; 2,200 b. Batavia pepper ex Henriette Maria were sold at 16½c. Delivered in January, 85 casks nutmegs, 30 do. mace, 68 do. cloves, and 4 do. cinnamon.

TOBACCO.—Java Leaves: At the last sales there was but little demand for the fine qualities, and only low prices were paid for the ordinary sorts. For the Manila there was much demand. For Java Lojadjar (1,242 b.), 28c. was paid in the average; Blitar Papoh (365 b.), 56c.; J.C. and H.V.R. (564 b.), 43c.; for Manila 1a, 158 to 210c.; 2a, 129 to 164c.; 3a, 37 to 83c. On the 13th and 14th inst. 11,083 b. will be offered in auction here and at Amsterdam 6,000 b.

INDIGO is very firm; 40 chests Java and Bengal were sold at prices that did not transpire.

COTTON.—2,100 b. were sold for export, consumption and speculation at somewhat higher prices.

TIN.—Somewhat lower in price; 1,400 slabs Banca brought f.52; 500 slabs of the next sale f.52¾; 1,800 do. Billiton at 51½ to f.51; 500 do. at private terms, and 1,400 do. floating at f.52¼. Delivered in January, 6,650 slabs, against 10,950 in 1867. Stock on warrants, 144,459, against 129,159 in 1867. Unsold stock, 43,779 slabs, against 72,622 in 1867; floating 10,500 piculs.

HIDES.—With a good demand at firm prices. Imported 8,351 ps. stock, 11,710 ps. East Indian, and 779 ps. Buffalo. Imported in January 4,500 ps.

RATTANS.—With some more demand; 630 piculs were sold.

DRUGS.—For Camphor there has been but little demand; China is paid with 78c., Japan with 80c., Cubebs 30c. Cassia Lignea: 100 chests were sold at 70c.; Cassia Vera, 45c.; 900 piculs were sold, per Henriette from Padang, at firm prices; Cassia Oil, f.4½ to f.5 with good demand. Cajaputti Oil, f.2¼ per bottle.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Japan Wax: Without stock. Of Preserved Ginger 200 chests were sold at 95c. India-rubber with want of stock. Gutta percha with little demand. Gum Damar: 1800 pic. were imported per Priam, which were sold floating. There is nothing to be had below 44c.

TEA.—The market is quiet, but firm. On the 26th February will be offered in sale 1369-¼ch. Congou and 24-¼ch. Souchong, imported per Yeavering Bell.

MONEY AND STOCK MARKET.—In home and foreign stocks there is but little animation. The tone of the market is, however, pretty firm, and the fluctuations of no importance. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 54½; Three per Cents., 63½; Four per Cents., 84⅝.

'CHANGE.—London, 3 mo., f.11.82½; 2 mo., f.11.84; short, f.11.87½. Paris, 3 mo., f.46.97½; 2 mo., f.47.05; short, f.47.20. Hambro', 3 mo., f.34.95; 2 mo., 35f.; short, f.35.15.

SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.—Jan. 25, at Texel, from Batavia, Nicot, Alblasserdam; 26, at Brouwershaven, from Batavia, Vesta, Nederland, from Tjilatjap, Kinderdyk; 25, At Texel, from Batavia, Aldeboran, Tweelingen; 26, at Zurikzee, from Batavia, Susanna Johanna; 28, at Brouwershaven, from Batavia, New Orleans; 29, at Brouwershaven, from Batavia, Catharina, Maria; 30, at Brouwershaven, from Tjilatjap, Brouwershaven; 31, at Texel, from Batavia, Dionsyia, Catharina; Feb. 4, at Texel, from Batavia, Henriette.

PASSENGERS INWARDS.—From Java: Per Nicot, Mr. M. Julius; per Nederland, Messrs. Kroessen and family, Messrs. Amsler, Smith, and Appelman; per Henriette, Mr. J. Van Eck.

According to a statistical review published by the Staats Courant, our commercial marine numbered, on the 1st January, 1867, 2,178 vessels, measuring 270,042 lasts. In that year 119 vessels foundered or were demolished, measuring together 12,853 lasts. 100 new vessels were built, so that the number of vessels on the 1st January was 2,159, with a tonnage of 27,002 tons.

THE "STANDARD" ON CHINA.

The penny press ought to possess universal knowledge, for it treats—with the coolest assumption of omniscience—of every known (or unknown) subject. And its writers have a pleasant way when they go in for a topic on which they are entirely ignorant, of handling it in a jocular sort of manner, as if when unable to give any information on a subject they fulfilled their mission equally well by making fun of it. As an instance of this we extract the following from a leading article which the Standard apparently thought itself bound to produce on the coming China Embassy:—

The Chinaman is going at last to become a true Citizen of the World. The Chinese Government is about dispatching embassies to America and Europe, constituted of dignitaries ranking in the fourth class, wearing the red button which denotes high favour, and accompanied by not fewer than four-and-twenty secretaries. The main business of this mission will lie in England, because, as is asserted by Hong Kong newspapers, the Chinese are anxious to discover why, in this country, we are all so happy and prosperous. The reports of the twenty-four secretaries will, no doubt, be extremely interesting; but we imagine that they will be artificially tinted. Of course, the first thing to be done with our visitors must be to place them in discreet hands, and show them over the kingdom judiciously. They must inspect the dockyards, the hospitals, the great schools, the Crystal Palace on one of its charming Saturdays, the British Museum, St. Paul's Cathedral, and Westminster Abbey; nor will they omit the palaces of the Sovereign or the mansions of the nobility. But what else are they to see? We do not expect even one of the batch of secretaries to pass a night in a casual ward, or a day in the Isle of Dogs, or to familiarise himself with the doings of Farnham Workhouse; but it may be anticipated that in these criticisms upon our condition and manners there will be many a suggestive note. The Chinese have long known us in their own region, but this is the first time they have determined to send us a diplomatic representative. There was, indeed, a person present at the opening of the Hyde-park Exhibition in 1851, who styled himself a delegate from the Celestial Empire; but he was nothing of the kind. Nevertheless, while we have seen the yellow face, the blue drawers, the black pig-tail, and the oblique eyes, we have not seen the absolute and unchallengeable button, which is to come to us, at length, from that far latitude beyond the Ganges where it has been for centuries assumed mankind were incapable of a change. Incapable! The Chinese are changing faster than their neighbours, the Russians. They will, before long, have locomotives upon their roads and steam upon their rivers. They are abandoning the Median and Persian tradition. Even since we first heard of Commissioner Yeh a vast progress has been made. There are factories at Peking which would not disgrace Manchester.

We remember a description of us given to the late Emperor Twou-Kwang by the Mandarin Pihkwei, then chief criminal judge in the great province of Kwang-Tung. He said: "At bottom they belong to a class of brutes; in their country they have now a woman and now a man as their Prince; it is plain, therefore, that they are not worth attending to." How far will this judgment in the sense of a genuinely intellectual Chinaman—for such a being may be imagined—be modified after the Embassy has been on British soil for a few months? That is for us the curious question. What will be their earliest impressions, after voyaging in our yachts and travelling by our trains? Of Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle? Of the Star and Garter, or whitebait at Greenwich? Of cricketing and skating? Of our courts of justice? Of a croquet party or a ball! They are coming especially to find out why we are so flourishing. Suppose they conclude, after an investigation, that we are not. Shall we show them our prisons and pauperism, our anomalies of law and stained morality, our calendars of crime and hordes of vagrancy? Well, upon the whole, we might afford to do even this without much risk to our social degradation among the races of Asia, albeit they deem themselves the noblest stocks of the globe. The Ambassadors with red buttons and the secretaries—awful Eastern critics of the West—may take back with them a few of our mechanical and scientific inventions without which we should have been more barbarous than they; nay, teach their countrymen how to become by improvement the donors and recipients of inexhaustible wealth; may establish steam power, machinery, and chemical agriculture in a prodigious territory, where up to this hour every rood of soil is husbanded by hand, every hill terraced into slopes of artificial soil, every loom manually worked, every pod of cotton or cocoon of silk passed through all stages of its production and manufactured by the members of a single family.

CHINA CLAY IN PIECE GOODS.

This species of adulteration of cotton goods, to which much attention was lately attracted by the proceedings and judgment in the case of "Mody v. Gregson," has formed the subject of a leader in The Times. We extract the following paragraphs:—

For several years past we have heard complaints and remonstrances from India of a nature to affect very disastrously the reputation of cotton goods manufacturers in this country. For their own credit's sake, no less than for their own future interests, which are greatly jeopardised by the system they seem to have adopted, it might have been supposed they would have striven to avoid giving occasion for a repetition of these charges. The agents of the manufacturers themselves repeatedly wrote, from Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay, to warn their principals that their reputation for fair dealing was being destroyed, that the native buyers no longer bought an English bale in the full assurance that it was what it pretended to be, that in the bazaar the English guarantee had ceased to be respected, and that business was crippled and injured through the avarice and folly of manufacturers at home. They nevertheless persisted in adulterating cotton goods in every stage of their manufacture at which adulteration was possible. The native merchant in India is too great an expert in sharp dealing not to readily detect all the forms of imposition which the home manufacturer chooses to adopt. The present consequence of imposing upon the people of India is, that trade is depressed, and that goods of native manufacture are preferred to those which come from abroad. They may be inferior in quality to good English articles, but they are far better than the mouldering and worthless fabrics which are now sent out to the East. The natives will not buy a second time from a man who deceives them, or, if they do, they will take care to provide an indemnity for themselves in the price they pay. To these considerations too many of our manufacturers seem to be blind. They think their name will sell anything, and that any experiment with their customers is safe. The result is that English salesmen on the spot are in alarm for the houses with which they are connected, and the well-known native dealers, who once would have taken their word for anything, now receive all their assurances with suspicion and distrust. The merchants of Liverpool have lately proclaimed to the world their anxiety to vindicate the morality of their class. We have now laid before them, and not for the first time, a specific accusation directed against the manufacturers of Lancashire. Here is a practical matter for them to take up. The facts which we have stated in a general form are thoroughly well known to the Lancashire manufacturers. They have not been left to hear of them through newspapers. Their own representatives, we repeat, have condemned the wholesale use of "China clay" and other spurious ingredients as a practice tending to break up their business connections.

The Manchester Chamber of Commerce publish a letter from Bombay which contains another serious warning to manufacturers. The local mills in India are now producing goods which are growing popular in all districts. They "are now preferred," we are told, "to Lancashire makes of the same class;" and why? The Indian fabric is of coarser quality, but it is an "honest article." The cotton manufacturers in this country have been greedy of profit and unmindful of their customers' just interests in the bargain, and this is the lesson which comes to them from Bombay:—"Of the total quantity of these goods sold in the bazaar, from 50 to 75 per cent. are of local make." If arguments on grounds of morality will not prevail with the manufacturers, we should suppose that this sort of statement must produce an effect. If Indian cloth is not so well finished as ours, people at least know what they are buying when they deal in it. Once more, then, we demand the attention of the cotton manufacturers to a fact which greatly concerns them—namely, that they are no longer carrying on this pernicious system in the dark. Our countrymen who are responsible for the management of great departments of the national trade are not usually indifferent to the possession of a clear and honourable reputation. Say what the manufacturers may, it is impossible for them, as a class, to preserve this character if they resort to expedients which destroy the special value of the commodities in which they deal. In the long run it is not profitable to deceive the public. We still have the command of the business in cotton goods, but the only means by which we can hope to keep it is by selling a better article than the rest of the world can produce at the same price, and by letting it be understood that we may be trusted to act honestly towards purchasers who come into our markets. The Lancashire manufacturers may take the natives of India to be very simple, but they may rely upon it these people will not continue for ever to buy bales of rotten cloth when they can get a serviceable article made at their own doors.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS AT SINGAPORE.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—"W. F. F." deserves a few lines in reply to his able and temperate letter respecting the freedom of the press at Singapore. I never heard of a shorthand writer in connection with any of the local papers at that port before June last. Mr. F. was not connected with any paper, and the only application which came before the Council was for permission to send a reporter—not a shorthand writer—to take notes, and as the person who was to be sent did not possess the talent of extracting the wheat from the chaff in the opinion of the Council, it was ruled that the clerk should furnish the local papers with a copy of the proceedings. It was, under the circumstances, the only safe way of placing before the public a correct resume of the proceedings. It is to be regretted that "W. F. F.," who was so much interested in the result, did not attend the Council Chamber on the occasion, or he would have discovered, first, that neither he nor anybody else would have been excluded, and, second, the reason why "there was not one 'No' recorded on the question being put." The unwillingness of "W. F. F." to put himself to unnecessary trouble is no reason why he should jump at conclusions unfavourable to Mr. Read and Mr. Scott.—Your obedient servant, R.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FOREIGN-OFFICE APPOINTMENTS.—In addition to those noticed in our last, the following appointments to the Consular service in China and Japan have been gazetted:—Marcus Octavius Flowers, Esq., now Her Majesty's Consul at Hakodadi, to be Her Majesty's Consul at Neegata; Richard Eusden, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Consul at Hakodadi; and John Markham, Esq., now British Vice-Consul at Shanghai, to be Her Majesty's Consul at Tangchow (Cheefoo).

ANOMALIES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.—The seventeen Ministers ranking after the ambassadors, and all Ministers of the second class, are arbitrarily divided into two classes in the English service, and their missions called first-class missions and second-class missions; the only real difference apparently being the practical one of the amount of pension depending on five years' service in one or the other. The pension is £1,300 a year in the one case and £900 in the other. The first-class missions are Brussels, the Hague, Florence, Madrid, Lisbon, Washington, Rio Janeiro, Munich. The second-class missions are China, Japan, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Stuttgardt, Berne, Athens, Buenos Ayres, Persia. Some of the missions in the first-class are undoubtedly more important than most in the second; but Persia, China, and Japan must be more important than Brussels, the Hague, Lisbon, Rio Janeiro, or Munich. The distinction of class seems quite arbitrary, and sometimes accidental. Persia, formerly a first-class mission, was reduced to the second-class when Mr. Alison was appointed to succeed Sir Henry Rawlinson. It seems to rest entirely with the Foreign-office to elevate or degrade a particular mission. Sir Alexander Malet, who has lately retired, not voluntarily, after 22 years' service as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Stuttgardt and Frankfort, has only been able to get £900 a year pension, because he never could obtain a transfer to a first-class mission, and had not the good luck to get his own mission at Frankfort elevated, as Munich has been. If the distinction is to be preserved, no one could object to putting Brussels, the Hague, Lisbon, Rio Janeiro, and Munich down into the second class, and China, Japan, and Persia up into the first. The salaries of these missions (first-class and second-class) range from £6,000 (China) and £5,000 (Florence, Madrid, Washington, and Persia) to £2,500 (Berne) and £2,000 (Stuttgardt). Some of these salaries have been increased since the report of the Committee on Official Salaries of 1850. China was reduced, when Sir Ruterford Alcock was appointed to succeed Sir Frederick Bruce, from £8,000 to £6,000; and the salary at Washington was raised, while Sir F. Bruce was minister, from £4,500 to £5,000. All the salaries are in addition to a house or house-rent allowance. The regulations and practice as to diplomatic pensions require thorough revision. The present mode of pensioning chargés d'affaires and consuls-general cannot be sustained. The arbitrary Foreign Office distinction between pensions of first-class missions and of second-class missions is not supported by the Diplomatic Pensions Act, which makes the distinction between envoys extraordinary, &c., and simple ministers plenipotentiary; and under the words of that Act, all ministers having served for five years with the title of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary are eligible for a pension of £1,300 a year.

ANCIENT CHINESE ENAMELS.—An important collection of ancient Chinese enamels, comprising many rare and beautiful specimens of unusual form and colour, was disposed of on the 7th inst. by Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, at their rooms in King-street. The following were among the more valuable specimens:—A pair of cylindrical bottles, with flowers and ornaments on turquoise ground, each with two large and four smaller medallions of flowers and butterflies, on lapis-lazuli, red and white ground, fetched 30 guineas. A pair of hexagonal vases, with animals, birds, and plants in colours, on red, yellow, black, white, turquoise and lapis-lazuli panels, the necks with flowers and ornaments on turquoise ground—30 guineas. An elephant, of lapis-lazuli enamel, with gilt trappings, supporting a vase, with dragons, flowers, and ornaments in colours on turquoise ground—40 guineas. A pair of very fine circular slabs, with birds on branches of trees, in brilliant colours, on turquoise ground—60 guineas. A pair of octagonal flower-pots, lapis-lazuli ground, with figures and characters in colours, on yellow ground, in medallions, with borders of flowers and ornaments in colours, on turquoise ground—30 guineas. A pair of magnificent cisterns, with butterflies in colours, on turquoise and gold ground, each with four large medallions of birds and flowers, on brilliant crimson, yellow, black, and white ground—70 guineas. A pair of kettles and covers, with upright handles, with birds and flowers in brilliant colours, on turquoise ground, the spouts formed as birds on feet of metal gilt—40 guineas. A pair of very fine cylindrical bottles, with flowers, birds, and ornaments, on turquoise ground, each with two large and four smaller medallions of figures, in colours, on light blue ground—70 guineas. The entire sum realised exceeded £3,000.

NEGROES AND CHINESE COOLIES IN HAVANA.—The intense hatred between the Mongolian and African races very often gives births to horrible deeds. Two negroes in Matanzas recently caught a Chinaman, and, after tying him to a tree, proceeded leisurely to cut off his hands, ears, and nose. Such scenes, or at least similar ones, are of frequent occurrence, and the planters have to lament the loss of many valuable field-hands, as a result of the hatred existing between the races, who will not live together in the same cabin. As an exception to this rule, however, the Chinaman takes kindly to the mulatto-woman, and many a plantation can show queer specimens of saffron-coloured young ones, with thick lips, almond-shaped eyes, and kinky hair. Natural historians could not find a better field for studying the theory of the amalgamation of races than is presented by the City of Havana, where every shape, shade, colour, and nationality are to be analysed.

MR. WM. RATHBONE.—Mr. Wm. Rathbone, whose name has for more than half a century been intimately associated with the commercial and political history of Liverpool, died at Greenbank, near Liverpool, on Saturday, the 1st. inst., at the ripe age of 81. Mr. Rathbone was one of the genuine "merchant princes" of Liverpool, and in politics he was for upwards of fifty years one of the most energetic members of the Liberal party. He was mayor in 1836, and for many years he took a prominent position in the government of the town. On his father's death, in 1809, he became, and has since continued to be, the head of the well-known house of Rathbone, Brothers and Co., largely engaged in the China trade.

THE JESUITS IN CHINA.—The Patrie learns, by private letters from Shanghai of the 12th of December, that the Court of Peking, on the application of the French Minister, had approved of the memoir drawn up by the Consul-General of France, claiming for the ministers of the Catholic faith the faculty of publicly teaching their religion throughout Kiang-Sou. The Viceroy of the province, taking into consideration the great services which the Jesuit fathers settled at Si-ka-wei (near Shanghai) render to the population, has, besides, accorded to them an authorisation to found a new establishment at Nanking, and conceded to them a site in the interior, and a large zone of land outside the city.

WITTGENSTEIN V. MAGUIRE.—This was a suit by one of the partners in an undertaking to share the profits of a contract with the well known troupe of Japanese acrobats, who had been performing in New York and Paris, and are now in Birmingham. The partnership was formed in Japan between five persons, and the shares (four and a half 32nd parts) claimed by the plaintiff had been purchased by him from the defendant for 19,500 dols. The purchase had been disputed on various grounds. A decree was now made by consent giving the plaintiff the right to the shares and an injunction. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. E. Cutler appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Hinde Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Hemming, and Mr. Roberts for the defendant.

THE PENANG POSTAL SERVICE.—Arrangements are we believe in progress by the British India Steam Company, for extending their monthly service between Calcutta, Penang, and Singapore to a fortnightly one. In this case a great service will be rendered to Penang, as the P. and O. contract does not include that port. We understand that the British India Company will also arrange with the P. and O. Company to convey through passengers.

The Constitutionnel gives some interesting statistics relating to the colonies of France. Their total population now amounts to 2,192,275. The most populous is Martinique, 152,102. The most valuable, commercially, is Cochin-China, and then follow, in order, Réunion, Martinique, Guadaloupe, Senegal, and the establishments in India.

WE understand that the directors of the Imperial Fire Insurance Company have presented to the widow of the late Captain Richards, of the ship Heroes of Alma, the sum of £100, for the valuable and most praiseworthy services rendered by himself and crew on the occasion of the disastrous fire at Yokohama, early in 1867.

BY the last China mail Mr. Whampoa, the well-known Chinese merchant at Singapore, sent £50 to the Royal Naval Scripture-readers Society. This is the third donation of like amount beslowed by this kind-hearted and charitable Chinaman upon Royal naval associations.

JOHN PEACHEY.—We regret to announce the sudden death of Mr. John Peachey, on the 6th inst., the senior partner in the eminent firm of Oliverson, Peachey, Denby and Peachey, solicitors, of London, and legal advisers to several banks and merchants in the India and China trade.

Agreeably to instructions from the Admiralty, a trial has been made at Portsmouth of the capabilities of the steam lifeboat cutters now being supplied to the navy by Mr. J. S. White, of East Cowes, for hoisting up to or lowering from ships' quarter davits. The boat selected for the trial was the steam cutter No. 3, recently tried over the measured mile in Stokes Bay, when she made a mean speed of seven knots. In addition to this exceptional rate of speed in boats of only 28ft. in length, driven by a tiny single-cylinder engine of 3-horse power, which gives them such value as steam despatch boats, Mr. White claims for them a perfect unsinkableness, even when filled to the gunwale with water, and a double crew on board, an impossibility of capsizing them under any circumstances, and a constant readiness for active service in retaining their engines and boiler on board even when slung up at a ship's davits. With all the steam launches in the navy the engine and boiler are always hoisted out of the boat before the latter can be taken on the ship, and in getting the launch out of the ship the boat is hoisted out first and the engine and boiler follow. It is obvious that by this process a considerable time must elapse between the first step being taken to hoist the launch out of the ship and her steaming away from the ship on the service for which she might be required. Mr. White meets this difficulty, and does away with the necessity for any such loss of time between the services of a boat being called into sudden requisition and her leaving the ship under steam, by making the engine and boiler in his steam lifeboat cutter a fixture. It was to test the practicability of hoisting up and lowering a boat loaded with engine and boiler, the latter filled with water, and a supply of coal on board for the furnace, that the trial was made. The port poop davits of the Duke of Wellington, screw three-decker, were named for the trial, and thus as great a height as possible from a ship's davits was secured. With boiler filled, fire laid, bunker filled with coal, and the man attending the hooks and blocks of the falls on board, the total weight of the boat when suspended on the falls was about three tons. The falls were manned on the three-decker's poop by the ordinary number of men, and on the order being given by the pipe of the boatswain's mate the cutter was run up to the davits and secured there under three minutes. A careful examination of the boat as thus suspended proved there was no sign of deflection in any part of the boat, and that she could convey her weights when so slung with perfect safety. The fire was next lighted under the boiler, and soon afterwards the pipe was given to lower away the boat for service. In two minutes three seconds from the time of the pipe being given the cutter was in the water and steaming away from the ship under a full head of steam. The trials were declared by the officials conducting them to be in every respect satisfactory.

A fair honest fight between armour-plating and guns has taken place on board the Thunderer target-ship, in Porchester-creek, in the upper waters of Portsmouth harbour. The plate was from the rolling-mill of Messrs. John Brown and Co., Atlas Steel and Iron Works, Sheffield, and was no less than 10in. in thickness by 15ft. in length and 3ft. 9in. in breadth. It was selected as a test plate from a score of plates manufactured by Messrs. Brown for the central broadside armour of the turret ship Monarch, 5,100 tons, 1,100-horse power, building at Chatham. The plate was bolted on to a wooden backing of upwards of 4ft. in thickness, supported by iron and oak beam struts of immense strength. The gun was the ordinary test gun—95cwt. 68 smooth-bore, but on this occasion fired with 16lb. in lieu of the ordinary 13lb. of powder. The distance between the muzzle of the gun and the face of the armour-plate was 25ft. Nine shots were fired, and all struck the plate within a square space of 34in. The greatest indentation made was only 1·7in., and the least 1·5in.; no cracks, surface or otherwise. The trial, indeed, gave the plate an extraordinary degree of credit. It was the first 10in. plate tried on board the Thunderer; but, in comparison with a series of 8in. and 9in. plates previously tested on board, its resisting powers to the impact of shot was very much in excess of what was simply due to its exceptional thickness. The plate is now being taken down from its backing on board the Thunderer, and will be sent round to Shoeburyness, where it will be further experimentally tested with the 10in. rifled gun and maximum charges of powder.

The vacancy in the deputy inspectorship at Plymouth, caused by the lamented death of Dr. Beith, R.N., is one which the Director-general of the Navy will not find it an easy task to fill satisfactorily, since Dr. Beith's abilities as an operator enabled him to fulfil the duties of his office more efficiently than had been the case for many years. We have reason to believe that the gentleman who in all probability will be selected is Dr. Henry Jones Domville, C.B., now deputy inspector at Bermuda, who, it may be remembered, distinguished himself by operating under fire when Her Majesty's ship Tiger was so unfortunately lost in the Black Sea, and who will prove himself no unworthy successor of Dr. Beith. Dr. Domville became a deputy inspector in 1864, and has served at the Bermuda Hospital since that date. Promotion of a staff surgeon will necessarily ensue, and in naval circles we understand that the names of Dr. Thomas Nelson, Dr. Robert Pottinger, and Dr. J. Watt Reid have been mentioned as likely recipients of promotion. We have reason to believe, however, that Dr. Nelson, at present attached to Melville Hospital, Chatham, and who was present both at the attack upon Petropaulovski, and in China at the taking of the Peiho forts, will probably be the new deputy inspector, a choice which will give general satisfaction.

ARTICLES OF IMPORT.

TEA.—The market has improved for common qualities of Congou. The deliveries have slacked. The quantity afloat is 22,500,000 lbs. Several large parcels are reported sold at an improvement of ½d. per lb. Fair leafy sorts are now quoted at 1s. 1d. per lb. At the public sales buyers bought freely the whole of the Congou ex Wild Deer, offered with "all faults" and without reserve. These teas are of strong useful qualities, but have been much damaged with the flavour of wine. Scented Capers of low to medium descriptions are scarce, and bring high prices; the finer sorts are in good supply at moderate rates. Scented Orange Pekoes show no improvement. Common Oolong not in demand; good to fine meets ready sale. Several parcels of medium to fine Souchongs have been sold at former rates. Hysons are very scarce, and are now very dear in comparison with other descriptions of Green Teas. Imperial especially shows a great fall. The Circular of Messrs. Shepard and Co. says:—A better feeling has prevailed, and a steady business has been transacted, in Congous, mostly below 1s. 6d. per lb. The last accounts from China speak with great confidence that the total Export will not exceed 118,000,000, which has caused importers to be firm, and numerous bids made the last few days have been declined. These advices will reach China about the time preparations are being made for season 1868-9, and to insure a profitable business it will be imperative to buy with some margin on our present range of prices, as we cannot expect a repetition of the exceptional rates paid for finest quality last October. The Times' City article had the following:—Attention continues to be directed to the great changes affecting the trade in tea, and to the danger of founding any hope of a sudden and great reaction upon calculations which former relations of stocks, deliveries, and imports, or other circumstances of the past might suggest. According to some views recently put forth by a leading firm, a striking feature at present is not only the vast and continuous increase in the appliances and agencies for selling the article throughout the country, but likewise the amount of information acquired and intelligence exercised on the part of the retailing and consuming public, and which confirms them more and more in the determination not to hold stock, but only to supply their immediate requirements. Importers, it is said, seem also to have gathered a conviction—based upon the average and ruinous results of several years past—that sales on or soon after arrival will henceforth in the long run turn out the best, which conviction is strengthened by the fact that the crops of late seasons have proved ill-suited for holding. Stress is also laid on the importance to be attached to the increasing importation and use of Indian teas, a circumstance which it is thought is not yet taken sufficiently into account by people in China. Grocers and retailers have up to very lately had a monopoly in the retailing of tea; they are now compelled to compete with other retailers, such, for instance, as publicans, who, not having to make up for the less remunerative sale of other articles, can afford to follow the course of small profits and quick returns. This will compel them to study still more scientifically the system of mixing teas, and for that purpose the Indian recommends itself above all others as the best regulating and most palatable ingredient. We used to import about 3,000,000 lb., but that figure has of late increased to upwards of 8,000,000 lb., and bids fair to reach a much higher one.

SILK.—The next public sales are fixed for the 19th inst. The year, thus far, has been sadly disappointing to Silk Importers and holders; a more dull and wretched month of business it would be difficult to conceive. There has been every disposition shown by importers to be current, but buyers, apparently, are more determined than ever to hold aloof, and the consequence is, that an occasional forced sale of Chinas during the past four or five weeks has drifted prices of the medium and lower classes of Tsatlees 2s. to 2s. 6d. under the quotations at the beginning of the year, and given a partly nominal value to the better descriptions. So depressed is the market, that, even at this reduction from last quotations, buyers do not come forward, although it is hard to understand why, for at 19s. to 21s. for common up to good 4¼, and 21s. to 22s. 6d. for 4¼ to good 4, at which much Tsatlee is offering, the Silk is, unquestionably, cheap, and should tempt manufacturers. Best Silk is very scarce, and likely to continue so, and, in consequence, is held firmly; still the unnatural difference in price between it and the medium and lower qualities has placed the quotations on a somewhat nominal basis. Canton Silk has been affected by the declining price and large stock of common Tsatlees, and is a good 1s. lower than at the commencement of the year, and with less business or enquiry even at this decline; the ordinary run of No. 1 Tsatlee reel, find only occasional buyers at 18s. 6d., but very fine parcels are worth 2s. more. Japan Silk has declined in value generally, more particularly the medium descriptions, which are very flat and almost unenquired for. The deliveries of Silk in January were far too small: from 1st to 7th instant they are 639 China, and 109 Japan. From China, settlements continue large, the latest telegraphic dates giving 39,500 bales China and Japan, against 32,000 at same date last year. China Silk Piece Goods: Nothing worth reporting. The arrivals since the January public sales have been insignificant; the market is decidedly quiet.

COTTON.—Up to the 5th inst. a fair but not active demand was experienced, which increased after that date, and became extremely brisk, prices advancing ⅛d. to ¼d. per lb. The closing quotations are:—American, 7⅝d. to 9d.; Dhollerah, 5¾d. to 7⅛d.; Tinnivelly, 6⅝d. to 7⅛d.; and Rangoon, 5½d. to 6d. per lb.

COCOA-NUT OIL.—The market has been quiet, and only small transactions effected at £56 to £56 10s. for Cochin and at £49 10s. to £50 for Ceylon; 101 pipes of the former offered by auction were bought in, yellowish to fine white at £55, and 22 casks of the latter at £50. For Ceylon to arrive £49 has been accepted, and there are still sellers thereat.

COFFEE.—The increased facilities for bringing forward supplies to Colombo, afforded by the newly opened railroads in the island, has caused cargoes to arrive here earlier than usual, and the market is consequently liberally supplied for the season. Extensive supplies of Plantation Ceylon have been brought forward, a large proportion consisting of qualities below 72s., to effect sales of which easier rates have been accepted, while the small assortment of colory sorts has met a fair competition, and been taken at full prices. Native has also been more freely offered, and a small part disposed of at barely the previous value. Part of the Manila sold with difficulty at a moderate price; for the Singapore no bids were made. Quotations are for Plantation:—Triage, 27s. 6d. to 49s.; gray, small, 55s. to 59s.; middling, 63s. to 68s.; bold, 69s. 6d. to 71s.; pea-berry, 76s. 6d. to 80s. 6d.; colory, fine fine ordinary to low middling. 65s. to 72s. 6d.; middling, 73s. 0d. to 77s.; good middling, 78s. to 82s.; fine middling, 85s. 6d. to 86s.; pea-berry, 84s. to 90s. 6d. The prices realised for Native have been as follows:—Garblings, 13s. to 20s. 6d.; real good ordinary, 53s. to 53s. 6d.; fine ordinary, 54s.; good bold, 58s. 6d. to 60s.; fine bold yellow, 65s. 6d.

CINNAMON.—The first series of sales for this year took place on the 27th ult., and possessed a more than usual amount of interest, owing to the parcels offered being larger than for a long time past—viz., 2,800 bales Ceylon. The comparatively light quantities brought to auction during 1867 (averaging only 1,300 bales in the three last quarters), and the higher rates then established, led to the expectation that an important reaction would speedily follow when the late numerous arrivals were placed on the market. Accordingly, importers were prepared to accept a material decline, and, at the commencement of the sales on the 27th ult., accepted whatever prices buyers chose to give. These were for the thirds and fourths 2d., and for seconds 4d. per lb. below the October rates, and naturally caused a spirited competition to prevail, as it became evident that the trade in general had large orders to execute, which resulted in some recovery in value as the auctions progressed. The fine and superior qualities, however, were not wanted, the few bids elicited being 6d. per lb. under the previous currency, and even at this concession, which was afterwards submitted to, purchases were reluctantly made. The range of prices were as under:— First quality, 1s. 11d. to 2s. 3d.; superior, 2s. 4d. to 2s. 6d. per lb.; second quality, 1s. 5d. to 2s. 3d.; superior, 2s. 4d. to 2s. 5d. per lb.; third quality, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 11d.; superior, 2s. 0d. to 2s. 1d. per lb.; fourth quality, 1s. 2d. to 1s. 7d. Besides the above, 270 bags, 26 cases chips were taken at from 9½d. to 10¾d. for ordinary, and at 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 3d. for good. The quantity afloat from Ceylon to London at the end of January was 2,720 bales, against 1,760 bales at the same time last year.

CUTCH.—Former quotations for fine Pegu are fully maintained, 150 boxes having been sold at 52s. 6d. per cwt.

COIR YARN.—Of 48 tons Ceylon brought to auction, 30 tons sold at £35 5s. to £36 5s. for good middling, and £27 5s. to £29 for common to good common. Of 1,909 bundles (18 tons) Ceylon fibre only five tons found buyers at £23 10s. for ordinary coarse, and £13 15s. for low qualities.

HEMP.—Manila is only in limited demand, and prices have a downward tendency; privately small quantities have changed hands at £47 to £49, fine white, £90; in public sale of 443 bales 200 bales common were bought in at £45, but the remainder sea damaged of fair current quality sold, first class at £45 to £45. 5s.; 1212 bales Sisal in public sale were all withdrawn at £42, except 50 bales better quality, which realised £43 to £45.

MACE.—The demand has been inactive, and of 13 cases Penang only 4 cases sold, middling to good middling, 2s. 8d. to 3s. 1d.; low middling red, 2s. 2d.; 7 boxes Singapore were withdrawn.

NUTMEGS.—At the public sales 50 cases Penang were sold at firm prices, fine bold 66 to 64 nuts to the lb. at 4s. to 4s. 2d., good 74 to 73's at 2s. 8d. to 2s. 10.l., 78's at 2s. 2d., 85's to 81's at 1s. 10d. to 2s., small 104's at 1s. 4d. to 1s. 5d., 117's at 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d.

PLUMBAGO.—The market is fairly active, and 275 barrels Ceylon sold at steady prices, middling lump 27s. 6d. to 30s., chips 17s. to 20s., fair dust 12s. 9d. to 13s., ordinary to middling 10s. 6d. to 12s. per cwt.

PEPPER.—There has been a moderate demand at firm prices, only 1,476 bags Singapore were offered in auction, of which about 1,100 bags sold at 3½d. to 3¼d., gravish 3⅜d. By private contract about 1,200 bags have been sold, chiefly Penang, at 3⅛d. to 3¼d.; of White, 364 bags fair Singapore sold rather higher at 5¼d.

RICE.—The market has continued quiet, and only limited quantities have been saleable, viz., on the spot privately 8,000 bags Nakrenzie at 12s. 4½d., 1,200 bags Ballam at 9s. 9d. (cash), and 300 bags Madras at 11s. 9d. At auction 1,350 bags white Bengal bought in, were afterwards sold, middling at 14s., common 11s. 6d., 655 bags Ballam at 10s., and 1,137 bags damaged Arracan at 10s. to 11s. 6d. 100 tons Askoolie have been taken for arrival at 12s., and a cargo of 1,345 tons Saigon (arrived off coast) has been sold for the Continent, price not named.

SUGAR.—The market is still inanimate, and the trade indisposed to operate freely. The principal business done has been in British West India, which offers rather plentifully, and is obtainable on easy terms. No colonial East India has been offered. Of Manila 12,953 bags offered by auction were all bought in at above the present value; 5,567 bags clayed, imported 1863 and 1865, duty 9s. 7d., at 30s.; and 7,388 bags muscovado, 1865-1866. at 25s. 6d. to 27s., but the latter since all sold at 25s. to 26s.

SOY.—Ten casks China were bought in at 3s. per gallon.

STICKLAC.—By private contract 100 cases Siam realised 65s., being an advance upon the prices previously obtainable for this description.

SHELL.—One case Manila Tortoiseshell (77 lbs.) sold at 16s., and 1 case Manila Turtleshell (100 lbs.) at 4s.

TIN.—A much more active demand has arisen for Straits, founded principally on advices from Penang, where prices have considerably advanced. About 250 tons have changed hands at £87 up to £89 10s. cash on the spot, and at £88 10s. to £90 10s. for arrival, establishing an advance of £3 per ton. In Banca no business has been done. The quantity of Straits afloat for Europe is 716 tons against 648 tons in 1867, and 1,378 tons in 1866.

CASUALTIES.

Advices from Rotterdam, dated 1st Feb., state that the Nederland, v.d. Eb, had blown from her anchors during a gale and caused serious damage to the Kortenaar, Schuchard, in the river. In order to prevent more damage the master of the Nederland had put her ashore. Both vessels had lately arrived from Batavia.

Telegrams have been received from Shanghai announcing the arrival on the 1st Jan of the Lahloo and Spindrift, the former vessel performing the passage in three days less than the latter. The Lahloo was built by Messrs. Robert Steele and Co., Greenock, and commanded by Captain Smith, late of the Min. The Spindrift, by Messrs. Charles Connel and Co., of Glasgow, and commanded by Captain Jones, formerly of the Serica.

At Teneriffe, Jan. 27, Agamemnon (s.s.), Middleton, from Liverpool, and proceeded next day for Singapore, China, &c.; she had experienced very severe weather.

A report, which was inserted in all the leading papers, to the effect that the Coulnakyle, from London to Amoy and Chefoo, had been lost in the Channel, has been contradicted by the owners of the vessel, who have received reliable information to the contrary.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—Diseases of Women.—Medical science in all ages has been directed to alleviating the many maladies incident to females, and Professor Holloway, by diligent study and attentive observation, was induced to believe that nature had provided a remedy for those special diseases, and after vast researches succeeded in compounding his celebrated Ointment and Pills, which embody the principle naturally designed for the relief and cure of disorders peculiar to women of all ages and constitutions, whether residing in warm or cold climates. They have repeatedly corrected disordered functions which had defied the usual drugs prescribed by medical men, and still more satisfactory it is that the malady is relieved completely and permanently.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

OSAKA AND HIOGO.

H.M.S. Basilisk, despatched to Hong Kong from Hiogo direct, conveyed news to the 6th January, and reports that Hiogo and Osaka were opened to foreign intercourse on the 1st without any difficulty. Admiral Keppel was in the bay, with twelve British men-of-war, including gunboats. Admiral Bell was also present, with six American men-of-war, and one French vessel was with the fleet. Everything had proceeded satisfactorily up to the date of the Basilisk's departure.

The correspondent of the Japan Herald, writing a week earlier, says:—

"We left Yokohama in H.M.S. Adventure on Saturday, the 21st Dec., and steered south to join the fleet, having on board his Excellency Sir Harry Parkes and suite, and Lieutenants Bradshaw and Bruce with a detachment of the 9th Regiment. We arrived without accident off Osaka on the 23rd Dec., after one of the most agreeable trips that I have ever had the pleasure of making. Sir Harry Parkes landed as soon as we arrived at the anchorage and proceeded up the river to Osaka, where he found everything in an active state of preparation for the opening of that port to foreigners on the 1st of January. The following day we landed the troops, the Minister's escort and their horses, and also a quantity of stores.

"During the disembarkation the wind was fortunately blowing off shore, so that there was but a moderate movement of the sea in the bay; but we were informed that when the wind is in a contrary direction the sea becomes at times so boisterous that transhipping and landing goods is rendered very hazardous and often impossible. The city of Osaka is about three miles from the mouth of the river, and is only accessible by means of flat bottomed boats. On the 25th (Christmas Day), leaving Messrs. Lowder and Wills at Osaka, we weighed anchor, and with Sir Harry Parkes and the remainder of the suite made steam across the bay for Hiogo, where we arrived about noon, after a capital run of an hour and a quarter—distance 15 miles. Here we found an imposing fleet riding at anchor. There were one or two Japanese steamers and sailing vessels off Osaka, one of which had brought the young Prince of Chosiu across, who, on dit, will at the request of the Mikado be present at the ceremony of the opening of the new ports.

"We have had two funerals since we have been here, one from the Hertford, the surgeon of which died of consumption, and was buried on Christmas Day; the second was poor Turner, First Lieutenant of the Rodney, Admiral Keppel's flag ship, who died suddenly from disease of the heart, and was buried yesterday; this evening we lost one of our own quartermasters, after rather a sudden illness. It is melancholy to see the ensigns so often half-mast, but fortunately the fleet is in excellent health, and the station could not possibly, I should think, be a more healthy one."

YOKOHAMA.

From this port we have advices to the 4th January (19 days later). The outward mail of Oct. 29 (and telegraphic news to Nov. 21) arrived on the 28th December. The Pacific Mail steamer Great Republic arrived from San Francisco on the 3rd January, eight days overdue, with London telegrams to Dec. 2.

The present homeward mail comes from Yokohama to Hong Kong direct, and not via Shanghai, as usual. A large quantity of silk being offered on condition of the steamer being delayed a few days was the cause of this deviation. On this the Japan Times remarks :—"Those China and Japan merchants who are interested in the direct trade between this and the northern ports of the Celestial Empire have now afforded to them a very excellent chance of observing the working of the P. and O. line on this section when unsupported by a Government subsidy. At any convenient season, whenever a profit offers itself in freights, communication between Japan and Shanghai can be interrupted at the pleasure of the P. and O. agents, and when the gap is not filled by the P. M. S. S. Company's steamers, business experiences a sudden check. In estimating the inconvenience and loss caused to them by this, commercial men must be careful to lay the blame on the right shoulders. The P. and O. Company has for a long series of years discharged its onerous duties to the public, as well as to its shareholders, faithfully and well ; a time has arrived when a short-sighted Government not only declines to place it upon a level with its foreign rivals in the item of national contribution, but even refuses to guarantee it against competition by these highly subsidised opponents. [The company and the public are now in antagonistic positions ; the first duty of the directors is to provide a dividend, and all such supererogatory work as carrying Her Majesty's mails for nothing has to be stopped whenever occasion serves. We must suffer naturally ; and if we want the evil remedied, it is for us to assist the company by petition in its very legitimate demand on the British exchequer."

The following (also from the Japan Times) foreshadows the serious troubles of which we have already received a vague account by telegram :—

"The opening of the ports has of course been the all-engrossing subject of the fortnight, and we hope soon to receive news that New Year's-day at Hiogo and Osaka has passed to the satisfaction of all concerned. The exceedingly large fleet assembled in Hiogo Bay entirely precludes the idea of any open resistance by the Japanese authorities to the landing of the Ministers and Consuls and the formal declaration that the ports are opened. An attempt may very probably have been made to induce the postponement of the opening of Yedo and Nee-e-gata to the 1st of April as a precedent, and it is certain that the same plea—that the foreign settlements are not yet ready for our reception—might with great justice be advanced. But the Ministers have gone to open Osaka and Hiogo, and we cannot imagine their consenting to defer the event for any cause—short of the breaking out of a civil war—which either Mikado or Shiogoon can allege. The commencement of trade is altogether a different question. Our own letters from Osaka are of by no means a satisfactory tenor. The writers, on whose knowledge of the political situation we can confidently rely, unite in expressing a doubt respecting the actual opening of the ports to commerce. They may be declared open as a matter of form by the Ministers, and foreign Consuls and merchants may take up their temporary abode there, but it is not certain that trade will be allowed ; and one of our correspondents goes so far as to state that it is useless for foreign traders to go down. Shimadz Saburo has been hurriedly called away to Kagosima, and left the capital in great haste. Tosa has also gone, no one knows whither, and the aspect of affairs is by no means promising.

"The real reason for attempting to delay this event is that the Daimios will not attend the Conference to which they have been summoned, under the guns of a foreign fleet. And, until they have assembled, until the questions which now agitate Japan are settled—the formation of a new system of Government and the adjustment of the balance of power between Mikado, Shiogoon, and Daimios—we cannot hope to see trade commenced in Osaka or Hiogo with any confidence in its peaceful continuance.

"Our latest letters from Mr. Seare at Osaka are without sufficient interest to induce us to print them. Life must have been to him for the last four months as dreary as to Mariana in the moated grange ; it is almost incredible, but nevertheless true that so carefully secluded has he been from the outside world that, until the information reached him from us here, he had not heard of the abdication of the Shiogoon ! His last letter bore date December 14th, when he reported everything quiet and the works in progress at both settlements ; the difficulty about the plans having been adjusted by Messrs. Mitford and Satow, of the English Legation, who preceded the Ministers, as we mentioned last mail. The mercantile communities of Yokohama and these new ports, as well as more distant constituents owe, certainly, a debt of gratitude to Mr. Seare ; for it is most certain that but for the appearance of his letters all would have been kept, up to the present date, in utter ignorance of the proposed plans of the new settlements at Osaka and Hiogo ; and Mr. Locock's really valuable letter which was published here for last mail would not have appeared. It had not been published in London last November, though it was written and sent home six months before. Sir Harry Parkes will not readily clear himself of the censure he has most justly incurred, of neglecting, from pure 'insolence of office,' the interests committed to his charge."

NAGASAKI.

A correspondent at this port writes :—

"The Keangsoo, recently bought by Satsuma, left for Kagosima on 3rd Dec., having on board Count Monblanc and three other Frenchmen, members of his staff. The steamer Coquette has been sold to Japanese for $85,000. She is the best and cheapest purchase they have ever made. The price paid for her and for the Keangsoo ought to convince owners of steamers that the time for making money out of them in Japan has passed. They will be glad ere long to have the bare outlay on their vessels returned.

"The Governor has addressed a letter to each of the Consuls expressing the difficulty he experiences in adjusting cases between foreigners and Japanese for breach of contract, when neither side possesses a written contract, and requesting that foreigners be instructed to have their contracts with Japanese in black and white in future, as otherwise, in the event of dispute, he will be compelled to refuse a hearing.

"The Feilong has been circulated to leave for Hiogo on the 27th inst., and other steamers are likely to follow. A representative from nearly every house here will be present at the opening of the new ports.

"There is nothing doing in imports. The brig Belle leaves shortly with tea for New York, and the Gleam has been laid on for London. The gun-boat Eugenie has arrived from England for sale.

The following is from Messrs. Alt and Co.'s Market Report, dated Dec. 31 :—

Since the 30th ult., when our last report was dated, we have received the English mails of the 10th and 26th October, and French mail of the 17th idem.

IMPORTS.—There has been a great stagnation in the market for piece goods of nearly all descriptions during the past month. The general attention has been taken from business to a large extent and centred upon the events now passing at Osaka. Should this port be opened according to treaty without delay we look for an improvement in every branch of trade. Stocks of Grey Shirtings are heavy, and sales lately have been very limited. In T-Cloths transactions have been small, and supplies are in excess of requirements. White Shirtings are held in large quantities, and can only be quitted a few pieces at a time. Taffachellas continue depressed, a few sales only at the undermentioned low quotations having been reported. T. R. Cambrics are still in over supply, and Blue and Bronze Handkerchiefs are difficult of sale. Camlets and Long Ells can only be moved in exchange for produce, cash offers being unobtainable. Plain Black Orleans are inquired for, and sales have been made to a fair extent at full prices. Grey Yarn is enquired for at quotations, and there is little in the place. Iron, of all kinds, and Lead, are in small supply and fair demand. There are no English Coals on the market.

EXPORTS.—There has been a fair demand for most descriptions of produce during the past month. Large sales of wax have been made at rather lower rates, and stocks are now reduced to a small compass. In Gall Nuts there has not been much done, and prices are rather easier. Tobacco has been bought freely at about last month's rates, and supplies continue to come steadily forward. Tea has been taken principally for the American market and the prices paid have been irregular, and do not on the whole show any decline upon previous quotations.

EXCHANGE.—On London we quote private paper 4s. 5d. to 4s. 5½d. per dollar, on Shanghai par, on Hong Kong drafts are at 1 per cent. discount. Bous 310 to 312 per $100.

FREIGHTS.—To London £3 10s. ; to New York no vessel loading ; to Shanghai $3.50 to $4 per ton ; to Hong Kong $3 to $4.

HANKOW.

The Hankow Chamber of Commerce has addressed a memorial to Sir Rutherford Alcock on the subject of a revision of the Tientsin treaty. The following extracts will serve to show the views of the memorialists :—

"It is with much concern that we have to comment on the very unsatisfactory manner in which foreign interests have been cared for and protected. The Chinese authorities in the most glaring manner either evade just claims submitted to them, or where acknowledging such, put every possible obstacle in the way of their settlement; and the foreign Consuls appear perfectly powerless to obtain redress for those whom they represent. There are cases on record where, even after the delay and expense of reference to Peking, the claims, there admitted, are still unsatisfied, and we may specially instance the Soon Yang claims, which have now been outstanding for more than two years and a-half. Your memorialists therefore pray that a special commission be appointed for the immediate settlement of all outstanding claims, and that a similar commission should periodically visit the ports to adjudicate all unredressed grievances.

"Viewing the vast increase in the foreign trade in China during the last ten years, and the prospect of its still further development we strongly advocate the reduction of all import and export duties to 2½ per cent. ad valorem, such a concession being greatly to the advantage of both foreign and native trade, without any serious curtailment of the revenue as compared with that collected at the date of the Treaty of Tientsin. We would particularly call your attention to the necessity of fixing a uniform duty on tea-dust, which at present, being considered as tea, pays an excessive charge of above 50 per cent. of its value.

"The numerous exactions and squeezes imposed by the local authorities on produce in transit next claim our attention. We would suggest that transit dues on all foreign and native produce and manufactures be fixed at one-half the tariff rate, and on payment thereof that certificates should be granted for conveyance to any place. At present it is only possible to obtain such for foreign goods to certain marts, and those only within a very limited jurisdiction."

SHANGHAI.

Dates by this mail are to the 9th January. The London mail of 11th Nov. arrived out on the 30th Dec. with telegrams to the 28th Nov. The following items are from the North China Herald:—

Meetings of both companies of the fire brigade have been held for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year, and resulted in the election of Mr. Hayes as chief engineer, Mr. Groom as first assistant, and in a tie between Messrs. Lewis and Tucker for second assistant.

We are glad to say that a scheme has been organised for the relief of Chinese poor, who suffer terribly from cold and exposure during the winter. There are, here as elsewhere, two classes of beggars—the lusty, idle vagabond, and the sickly, deformed unfortunate, who is incapable of work. The former deserves bambooing rather than relief, the latter as urgently needs food and shelter, which we are glad to say measures have been taken to provide.

Some months ago a great agitation was got up about the thefts of wood from bridges on the Woosung-road, and the Taotai was induced to contribute largely towards their repair, and to threaten the villagers with every sort of punishment short of annihilation if the injury were repeated. We regret to hear that all this has been of no avail, and that the large bridge, near Woosung, has been again partially destroyed—so much so as to be unsafe for traffic. We do not attribute these depredations to the villagers, so much as to the scores of beggars who congregate at night in some of the villages, and spread by day over the country. They are much more likely to steal the wood than the peasants, who know they will be squeezed to make good the loss.

The barques Alcyone and Lady Love came into collision on the 27th, as they were coming up the river on the flood tide. The former lost jib-boom, foreyard, and fore-top-gallant mast, and left one of her bower anchors in the side of the Lady Love, which had to be beached to keep her from sinking.

The following vessels have arrived during the fortnight, viz., Spindrift, Lahloo and Talbot from London; Ocean Home, Ernst and Maria and Gloriosa from Cardiff; Lady Love from Newport, and Tavistock from Shields. The departures are Glenaros, Chanticleer and Harlaw for London, and Virgilia for New York.

As the last week in December had been occupied with Christmas festivity, so the first in January has been devoted to celebrating the entrance of the new year; and we have little or nothing of interest to record.

The lottery lately got up by the sisters of charity in aid of their orphan institution at Peking was won by ticket No. 154. The Shanghai General Hospital has reduced its charges for third-class patients from $2 to $1.50 per diem, and hopes that this endeavour to meet the wants of the poorer classes of patients will meet the success it deserves.

The road to the new cemetery is being planted with trees which, it may be hoped, will one day form a pleasant avenue. This proof that the cemetery has not been entirely forgotten is satisfactory, as it affords a remote prospect that it may, some day, be brought into use. In the meantime, the Chinese amuse themselves by systematically pulling down a couple of walls built at either side of the road where it passes through a graveyard. They probably see the road is not used, and infer that the walls are useless.

The Supreme Court Gazette has the following:—

"There are various rumours going about the settlement at the present time with regard to the political position which the foreign Powers at Peking are likely to assume in reference to the treaty revision, and one of no small importance is that France will in all probability take a bolder stand than the other Powers are disposed to adopt. The statement is that England and America will go together, and will advocate as little change as possible; Prussia and France—more friendly in these parts than at home — will represent the progressive and anti-Chinese school; while Russia will stand neutral, content to carry on her silent policy of aggrandisement and annexation in the North, without greatly caring about details in her treaty. Such is the rumour which has gained some currency in this settlement; and though, like all political rumours, it doubtless contains some particulars that are wrong, we believe there is nevertheless a grain, and a valuable grain, of truth at the bottom of it. We do not place any great faith in the statement that France and Prussia are likely to go together in opposing the views of the United States and England; but there is, no doubt, much reason to believe that France will take an independent stand with regard to her policy; that she will claim her right to have her treaty with China revised; will make her own propositions, and will not feel herself absolutely bound, however desirable such a course may be in an ordinary way, to shape her action in precise accordance with that of her sister Treaty Powers."

Mr. B. J. Fearon and Mr. G. Cowie have issued notice in respect to the estate of Edward Lawrence, the deceased solicitor

In the Bankruptcy Court, in Re C. W. M. Hudson, no creditors appeared, and the last examination was fixed for 10th February.

Re Rowley Miller. A final dividend of 7,613 was declared in the estate. Amount remaining to credit of estate was Tls. 10,637.27; total liabilities Tls. 139,724.07.

Notice has been given to the creditors of A. Ellissen and Co. that all claims must be sent in to Messrs. Flux, Argles and Rowlins before the 10th proximo, otherwise the inspectors will distribute the assets with regard only to those claims which have been brought before them.

The Aberdeen brig Water Lily was announced for sale by auction for the 20th January.

The British and American Consuls have issued notice for a meeting on the 10th January—1. To authorise the Land Renters' Committee or Municipal Council of Shanghai to collect a tax on the assessed value of land situated within the municipal limits for the remainder of of the current municipal year; and, 2. To consider and decide upon any matter or matters of a municipal nature which may be brought before the meeting.

Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., and other agents of insurance offices, notify that the return premium will be reduced from 15 to 10 per cent.

HONG KONG.

The dates are down to the 15th January. The London mail of November 26 arrived on the 7th, and the French mail of November 17th on the 4th January. The Pacific Mail Company's steamer Great Republic arrived from San Francisco on the 13th January, having been delayed about a week by heavy weather. She was to leave again on the 16th. Telegraphic news from Japan to 27th January will be found in another column.

The petition to Parliament, noticed in our issue of Feb. 5th, was still in course of signature and has not come forward by this mail.

The following items are from the China Mail:—

The time has come when the future disposal of the Mint should be boldly discussed and determined upon. The colony is just now in the position of having sunk some $300,000 in buildings and machinery, with nothing before it but a prospect of an additional heavy yearly expense, with no off-set in the way of advantages. We have not even the consolation of feeling that the new dollar displacing the old one, which, for our sins, still maintains its position as a trial of European temper and the acuteness of shroffs. On the contrary, the new dollars which reach the Chinese under present circumstances are sent into the empire to be melted up, for, as no seigniorage has to be paid for those in circulation, they are naturally preferred, as being of a guaranteed intrinsic value, to melt down into Sycee. It is not, however, so much to discuss the matter, bearing upon "intrinsic" and "nominal" value that we again revert to the subject of the Mint as to the more general question of what is to be done with the entire establishment. Is the Government going to shut it up, sell the plant for what it will fetch, send the officers home, and sit down with a clean loss of $250,000 (assuming that the plant fetched a fair price), or is the establishment to be kept open? If the latter, under what conditions? After all that has passed a direct and specific declaration on this head can be fairly demanded by the colony from the Government. We must put aside, except as purely temporary, all considerations as to whether the gambling licences, or the Stamp Act, or any other sources, will yield a revenue sufficiently large to permit of the Mint expenses being paid from the general incomings of the colonial Treasury. And this because, if the Mint is likely to be a permanent charge upon our resources, it is useless to prolong its existence. If, on the other hand, it can be made evident that at the end of any given period it will yield a revenue, it may be quite worth while to keep it in the highest possible state of efficiency. At all events some clear understanding as to the future is called for. Meanwhile there are one or two considerations which have not, so far as we are aware, been stated, and to which we would now refer.

The P.M.S.S. Co.'s steamer Great Republic left San Francisco December 4th, with 53 cabin and 1,200 steerage passengers, 900 tons merchandise, and $1,350,000 in treasure. From the first she encountered very heavy westerly gales with a high sea, and had to run down to lat. 27.50 S. in hopes of meeting with better weather, but the gales continued almost without intermission until arrival at Yokohama, Jan. 3rd, 30 days from port to port. Left Yokohama on the 5th, at 5 P.M., and on the 8th, at 5 P.M., passed the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Cadiz, which vessel had left Yokohama at 9 A.M. on the 5th, also bound for Hong Kong. Experienced strong S.E. gales for the first two days after leaving Yokohama, and afterwards heavy gales from the N.W. with a high sea. Four deaths occurred among the Chinese passengers during the voyage, the bodies being embalmed and brought on to Hong Kong in the usual manner.

We have received a copy of the report of the Hong Kong, Canton and Macaco Steamboat Company (Limited), to be laid before the shareholders next week. The following is an extract from it:—"The accounts are now laid before you, and show the working of the steamers for the past six months. After paying all commissions, running expenses, salaries, premia of insurance, interest on loans, and outgoings of every description up to December 31st, there remains a sum of $57,124.94 in the hands of the company. Of this amount the directors have appropriated $25,000 to the reserve fund; and assuming that you would agree with them now, as at the last meeting of shareholders, that the best investment of that fund would be the reduction of the loan on the company's steamers, they have employed it for that purpose, and thus reduced the loan to $145,000 This appropriation leaves the sum of $32,124.94, out of which the board recommend the payment of a dividend to shareholders of 2 per cent. on the paid up capital (with the dividend declared for the previous six months ending 30th June, this gives 12 per cent. per annum), which will absorb $11,250, that $10,000 be carried to the reserve fund, and applied to the reduction of the loan, and that the balance of $10,874.94 be carried forward to the next half-year's account." The nett earnings of the company's steamers, for 1867, "after deducting expenses of every nature," are stated to amount to nearly 27 per cent. of the paid up capital.

The first meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Dent and Co., bankrupts, which was to have been held on the 13th, was adjourned for a month, on the application of Mr. Wyte, pending the decision of the Judge on the motion of the petitioning creditor to annul the bankruptcy. Mr. Alexander, Registrar, granted the request the more readily as not a single creditor appeared to prove debts.

The Daily Press announces that H.M.'s gunboat Drake came in on the 8th of January, from Aberdeen, with two junks in tow, which were captured the previous day by the Algerine. It is said that these two vessels are mandarin junks, and under this pretence have been "squeezing," or attempting to squeeze, the unfortunate traders.

The Hamburg steamer Peiho was announced for sale on the 17th January.

The current number of Notes and Queries on China and Japan contains an exhaustive paper upon Chinese Junk Building.

The Canton race meeting was held on the 9th of January, and passed off, we understand, very pleasantly. The weather was fine and the racing good.

Messrs. Oliphant and Co. in their circular say:—

"There has been no increase in the bulk of business transacted at this during the fortnight, the native demand for all descriptions of merchandise being still restricted to supplying actual requirements. There has been some slight speculative inquiry for piece goods on the part of foreigners, but the effect which might have been produced thereby has been partially negatived by the action of some of the German houses, which have been willing sellers, while other importers have held out for higher rates. Some descriptions of piece goods show an improvement in value, and after the native holidays, we look for increased activity and a general advance in values."

COCHIN CHINA.

It has already been hinted that the newly annexed provinces of Cochin China were in revolt against the French. By this mail we have a full confirmation of the fact. The Courrier de Saigon (the official paper) of 5th December, in its non-official columns, gives us an interesting account of the origin and progress of the insurrection.

It would appear that the revolt was fomented by the sons of Phan-tan-giang, and that they signed the orders for uprising. It began on the 9th November at Huong-diem, when an unexpected attack was made upon the French Resident, who was bivouacking on the market-place with his body guard of blue-jackets, and who, after a hand-to-hand fight, repulsed the rebels, his only casualty being two men wounded.

Skirmishing continued almost daily between the rebel Annamites and the French outposts, always to the advantage of the latter, until the 3rd December, when they submitted. The insurgents are said to have had more than 300 men killed and an unknown quantity wounded, while the French only had the aforesaid two sailors slightly wounded!

The Courrier concludes by hoping that the Old Annamite Party will now believe in their powerlessness, and that the population will learn from the results of the "crisis" in the newly annexed provinces an effective and salutary lesson, and that they will no longer permit themselves to kick against their true interests.

The salutary lesson does not, however, seem to have been effective, as the Courrier de Saigon in its issue of the 20th December still reports that outpost skirmishing is a daily affair, and regrets that men should be so misguided as to take up arms against their best friends.

JAVA.

BATAVIA.

The following is from the Java Bode, an official paper published in Batavia:—"We understand from good authority that the Netherland India Steam Company will next year open a line with their boats via Singapore to Ceylon, Aden, and Suez, as well as a monthly line from Batavia via Singapore to Hong Kong and a line to Australia. Mr. S. van Hulstyn, superintendent of the company, will proceed to Europe by the first mail in January to make the arrangements."

A letter from this port gives some details of the present situation of the colony. The population is increasing with great rapidity. It consisted in 1808 of 3,730,000 souls; the census of 1826 gave 5,400,000, and that of 1863, of 13,649,000. The number of inhabitants has thus doubled in 30 years, which is a rate of increase much greater than in the nations the most favoured in this respect in Europe—Prussia and England, for example, where the population only doubles in 50 years; in France the period required is 130 years. The annual revenue of Java is nearly nine millions and a-half sterling, or about 14s. per head, which is an enormous sum for an Asiatic State. In India the revenue is less than 5s. per head of the population, all expenses paid. Java sends to Holland about two millions sterling a year, which sum is expended in constructing railways, or in diminishing the public debt. According to ancient custom the cultivator in Java should pay to the State one-fifth of his crops; but the native princes, abusing their authority, exact a third. The Dutch Government has re-established the impost of a fifth, but has changed the mode of levying it. Every village is bound to plant a certain extent of land with coffee, which is taken by the Government below the market price, the difference constituting the tax. At the end of the year 1864 there were 295,000,000 of coffee plants in Java, which produced 50,000 tons of that article. The State paid for it 12.50 florins (21s. 3d.) per picul of 126 lbs. After the payment of freight and other expenses, the coffee is sold in Holland at an average price of 46.69 florins, which leaves a considerable profit. The crop of sugar yields 100,000 tons. The peasantry of Java enjoy a material welfare which would be envied by the same class in many European States. The colonial system followed by Holland since 1826 meets, however, in that country with many adversaries, who maintain that free labour, by stimulating individual activity, would give still more favourable results.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

Dates hence extend to the 22nd ultimo. The home mail of the 10th December arrived out on the 15th January, with London telegrams to the 30th January; and the French mail of Dec. 17 arrived as the present mail was leaving. The following summary of intelligence is from the Straits Times:—

Little of any general interest has occurred in the colony during the past fortnight. We have to chronicle the completion and opening of our new Court-house on the 9th January, on which day our Acting Chief Justice Sir William Hackett, inaugurated in it our first Criminal Session for this year. The new building has rather an imposing look externally, and indeed is an ornament to the place, and does credit to its designer. The colony has now good reason to be proud of its public buildings, for their size, appearance, and we believe, their general convenience. There is only one drawback to the new Court-house. It is that the arrangement of the Court-room is anything but calculated for the convenience of the public, in so far as that it is very nearly impossible to hear anything of the proceedings.

The P. and O. Company's new contract still furnishes matter of discussion. Sympathy is felt for the Penang community who have been treated so scurvily under the new arrangements. The merchants there are bestirring themselves, and are petitioning Parliament for redress from the (as they consider) iniquitous compact of the Post-office, whereby they, with an annual trade of five millions sterling, are suddenly, without warning, apology, or explanation, deprived of their direct postal communications with home. Whether there will be any arrangement made by Government or the P. and O. Company to connect Penang with this port by running a small steamer for the home mails, has not yet transpired. There is some talk of a telegraph to Penang, but limited companies are not in better odour here just now than elsewhere. It is a promising project, however, and is sure of execution some of these days when people have recovered from their fright at all speculation.

The subject of the adulteration of gambier is at last forcing itself on the attention of our merchants—and not a bit too soon. There is every reason to believe that the late fall in the price of this article at home has been mainly brought on by the inferior quality shipped during the last year or two. We have only to make adulteration criminal in order to get this product, the peculiar staple export of the Settlements, in its pristine purity of former days. The Chamber of Commerce, we believe, has, the subject under serious consideration.

The Coldstream, Captain Ponsonby, has arrived with our artillery relief. She has made rather a long passage, her latest home dates being the 23rd August last. The Hon. Colonel Macpherson, our Colonial Secretary, leaves for home on a furlough of eighteen months, and carries with him the best wishes of the community.

His Excellency the Governor has appointed Captain Playfair, M.S.C., to be Acting Commissioner of the Court of Requests, Singapore, vice Captain Ord, ordered to proceed to Malacca to assume the duties of Police Magistrate and Commissioner of the Court of Requests at that settlement.

Jose d'Almeida, Esq., Consul for Brazil at Singapore, resumed charge of his office on the 31st Dec.

We are always glad to place on record acts of private munificence which conduce to the public welfare, and it is with pleasure we learn that Tan Kee Soon, one of our Chinese residents, has handed to the Commissioner of Police the sum of five hundred dollars for the benefit of the Pauper Hospital.

PENANG.

The community at this port is by no means reconciled to the impending change in the mail service. The Penang Gazette says: "The members of the Penang Chamber of Commerce have decided upon petitioning Parliament with regard to the new contract entered into by the Postmaster-General and the P. and O. Company for the transmission of mails to China. The powerful Oriental Company would seem to have had their own way in the matter, and to have been permitted, by him whose bounden duty it is to see that Her Majesty's mail should be regularly and faithfully distributed in all Her Majesty's dominions, to ignore the existence of the oldest of the Straits Settlements, and not the least of Britain's colonies. With the P. and O. Company it is simply a matter of dollars and cents. It is not that they lose money by their steamers calling at Penang, but they do not gain more, as they reckon they will do by passing us by. The fact is that the French mail steamers by not calling at Penang get more paying China freight than the P. and O. Company; of this they are jealous, and they have insisted in their new contract that their steamers should not touch at our port. We cannot blame the P. and O. Company if they should get their contract accepted with such a proviso; but we must blame the Postmaster-General for subscribing to such terms.

"It was rumoured that his Excellency the Governor would leave Penang for Singapore towards the end of January, returning after a short stay there, as his presence is necessary to bring some important matter before the Legislative Council, concerning, we believe, the police force of the settlement. That body is at present in a somewhat anomalous position, floating between the Colonial Government and the Municipal Commissioners, and recognised by neither. Most probably his Excellency is anxious that this state of affairs should cease as speedily as possible, and that he goes down to introduce a Bill for the reorganisation of the Straits police force—a Bill which, we hope, will bring about some improvement in the efficiency of that body which ought to be so useful."

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—For almost all classes of goods lower rates have been established, and this having brought dealers forward, settlements are on somewhat a larger scale than those of the previous fortnight, still the market shows little activity, and the great fall in the value of dollars seems to have had scarcely any effect. Grey Shirtings are fallen from 20 to 25 cents per piece, and in Yarn a further decline of $3 to $4 per picul has to be noted. Figured Orleans and Plain Lustres are also much lower. Nearly all other goods nominal. Deliveries are on a large scale, which is to be attributed to their including the re-export of goods to Hiogo and Osaka. Quotations:—G. E. Grey Shirtings: 7 lbs., 38½ yds., 39 in., $3 to 3.10 per piece; 8 lbs. 4 to 8 lbs., 8 do., $3.30 to 3.40; 9 lbs., do. 44 in., $3.90 to 4. G. E. White Shirtings:—56 to 60 reed, 40 yds. 36 in., $3.30 to 3.60; 64 to 72 reed, do., $3.70 to 4.10. T-Cloths:—6 lbs. to 7 lbs. 2.60 to 2.90. Cotton Yarn:—Nos. 16 to 24, $50 to 52 per picul; 28 to 32, $63 to 64; 38 to 42, $55 to 57.

SHANGHAI.—Grey Shirtings: Transactions have been on a limited scale, and prices show a further fall. The increase of stocks by arrivals from England has weakened holders, and rendered Chinese dealers very cautious. Prices for 8¼ lbs. Cloth have ranged very irregularly, ordinary chops having been placed at Tls. 2.18 per piece, while best Eagles found buyers at Tls. 2.28 per piece. 7 lbs. goods are reported as sold at Tls. 1.90 to 1.98 per piece. 9/10 to 9/12 lbs. Cloth very dull of sale, and lower in value. T-Cloths: 6 and 7 lbs. show a decline, and the inquiry is limited. 8 lbs. have also receded in value, but a fair demand exists at quotations. White Shirtings: Several sales of favourite chops are quoted at last rates, but as stocks in first hands are small, and supplies on the way moderate, some holders look for an advance after the holidays. In Dyed and Fancy Goods the business done has been very small, and prices show no material change. Woollens: Are dull at last rates, and difficult of sale. Metals—Nail Rod Iron: Some addition having been made to stocks, rates are, perhaps, the turn in favour of buyers, quotations are—Nail Rod, Tls. 3.10; Hoop, Tls. 2.65; Flat and Round, Tls. 2.75 to 2.80; Lead, Tls. 5.30 to 5.35. Coals: The arrivals have brought 757 tons English, and 860 tons Welsh. The market being well supplied, these cargoes will doubtless have to be landed. There is no activity in this article. Quotations—Grey Shirtings: 7 lbs., $1.9 to 1.9.7 per picul; 8¼ to 8½ lbs., $2.1.8 to 2.2.8; 9 to 9¾ lbs., $2.5 to 2.7. White Shirtings: 56 Reed, $2.1.8 to 2.2.5 per picul; 60 Reed, $2.3 to 2.3.5; 64 Reed, $2.3.5 to 2.4; 66 Reed, $2.4.5 to 2.7. T-Cloths: 6 to 7 lbs., $1.4 to 1.9.5 per picul; 8 to 8.4 lbs., $2.2 to 2.7.

HONG KONG.—There has been no increase in the bulk of business transacted, the native demand for all descriptions of merchandise being still restricted to supplying actual requirements. There has been some slight speculative inquiry for Piece Goods on the part of foreigners, but the effect which might have been produced thereby has been partially negatived by the action of some of the German houses, which have been willing sellers, while other importers have held out for higher rates. Some descriptions of Piece Goods show an improvement in value, and after the native holidays we look for increased activity and a general advance in value. Raw Cotton: Inquiry has been very moderate, but there has been no decline in value of any description, while Bombay staple shows an advance of 75 cents to a dollar per picul, and fine Bengal is somewhat firmer. This improvement is owing to the falling off of receipts from India, and the decreasing stock of Bombay staple, this market having been reacted upon by the prices ruling at Canton. Some considerable parcels have been shipped to the coast ports. Yarn: The Amoy and Chinchew markets having been supplied by direct receipts from England at the former port, demand at this has been almost nil and a decline of $5 per bale must be quoted. Cotton Goods: A portion of the sales reported have been made to foreigners, natives still buying only to meet their actual requirements, but there are indications of a larger demand after the holidays, dealers carrying no stock whatever, and supplies in the interior being unusually light. The paucity of stocks of Grey Shirtings, and the small supplies on the way have enabled importers to force prices up about 5 cents per piece, and this in the face of the dulness usually prevalent at this season. White Shirtings and Fancy Cottons have also improved, but T-Cloths are again lower, stocks being comparatively large, and some holders willing sellers. Nothing has been done in English Drills, or American Manufactures, and prices are nominally five cents lower, to assimilate more nearly those of other Cotton Goods. Woollens: Transactions have been very trifling, but former quotations are fully maintained. Metals: A good business has been done in Nail-rod Iron, but at lower prices, dealers being unwilling to purchase further at former rates, and importers deeming to advisable to make the required concessions, a fair quantity being on the way out. Bar Iron, too, is lower, but Hoop remains very firm. Lead is easier. Tin wanted at former rates. Quicksilver is still out of stock. Spelter has been depressed by the arrival of supplies. Coal: There have been no sales, the arrivals since our last having all been consigned to consumers. English is dearer, and Welsh very firmly held, but Sydney has declined large parcels being shortly expected. One cargo of Anthracite is on the market, but no offers likely to be accepted have yet been made for it. Quotations:—Cotton Yarn, per picul, No. 16 to 24, $140 to 150; No. 28 to 32, $160 to 165; No. 38 to 42, $165 to 170; Shirtings, grey, 7 lbs. piece, $2.40 to 2.50; 8.4 lbs., $3.05 to 315; 9.10 to 9.12 lbs., $390 to 435; Shirtings, white, 52 to 56 reed, $2.45 to 2.55; 64 to 66 reed, $2.90 to 3.10; 68 to 72 reed, $3.20 to 3.50; T-Cloths, 6 to 6.12 lbs., 32 in., $2 to 2.10; 7 lbs., $2.50 to 2.60; 8 lbs., 36 in., $3.35 to 3.50; Shirtings, white spotted, $3.20 to 3.25; Shirtings, dyed, $4.10 to 4.20.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—A fairly active demand has existed at slightly weaker prices. The teamen are still anxious to realise, wishing to clear their stocks before the Japanese New Year, but are unwilling to make any great concession in prices, on account of the enhanced value of Bous. Settlements consist principally of medium to fine qualities, with some small lots of common, and are computed to be about 4,000 piculs, mostly for the London market. Arrivals are rather smaller, owing to unfavourable weather, and may be estimated at 4,000 piculs. Stocks remain without change, 4,000 piculs. Quotations are as follows:—Common, $19 per picul; Good Common, $20 to 22; Medium, $23 to 26; Good Medium, $27 to 29; Fine, $30 to 32; Finest, $33 to 36; Choice, $37 to 40.

SHANGHAI.—Black: An inconsiderable business has been transacted since the departure of the mail, at prices fully up to those previously current. The unsold stock which is not large, is held with great firmness for very full rates. Arrivals from the river ports have been small, as they are likely to continue for the remaining portion of the season. Settlements for the fortnight 2,700 chests. Quotations: Duty paid, Exchange for Credits, at 6s. 0½d. per tael, and Freight £3 per ton:—Common Oonam, 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 0¾d.; Fair Ningchow, 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 2d. Green: A fair business has been transacted on both American and English account. Finest descriptions have been in good request at fully previous prices, and common kinds have been in some demand at former rates. A few chops of Pingsuey have been bought to England. The export to both America and England still shows a large excess. The following prices have been given:—Moyune and Teenkai, Tls. 31½ to 44; Fychow, Tls. 27 to 29; Pingsuey, Tls. 31½ to 33½; Shanghai-packed, Tls. 29. Settlements for the fortnight, 19,500 half-chests.

HANKOW.—Only one chop has been purchased being a parcel of Oonam Tea, at Tls. 12.3.0. per picul. There is no new or interesting feature in the market. Quotations were Oopacks, medium to good, nominal. Oonams, common, Tls. 12.3.0.

KIUKIANG.—Black Teas: Only two purchases have been made, one a parcel of Ningchows at Tls. 14.5.0. and the other a Kiukiang-packed Tea at Tls. 13.5.0. Supplies were coming down from the country very slowly. Quotations were—Ningchows, fair, Tls. 14.5.0. Hohows, common to fair, nominal. Green Teas: Two chops of common Moyune Tea have been bought at Tls. 26.2.5 to Tls. 27. The arrivals from the country consist of 2,483 packages, which were being prepared for shipment to Shanghai.

FOOCHOW.—Congou: Since last mail heavy settlements have been made by one or two houses, at an advance of 1 to 1½ taels, and the market was almost bare of stock. Ten thousand chests more were expected from the interior, but owing to the very low state of the river these would probably not arrive down until after China New Year. Oolong: Large purchases have been made in these, at tls. 16.5 to 17 short, for fair cargo, showing a drop of 2 taels on previous rates. But, in face of the heavy export, we do not consider this a safe business. Quotations at Exchange 4s. 4d. and freight £3 10s. were—Congou, 5½d. to 1s. 2d.; Common Souchong, 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 0¾d.; Oolong, inferior, 11¾d.; fair to good, 1s. 1d. to 1s. 2½d.; superior, 1s. 5¼d. to 1s. 6d.; scented common, 1s. 2¼d.

CANTON.—A fair demand has existed for Canton-made teas at about previous prices for most kinds. Of the finer grades of Scented Orange Pekoe few parcels remain, and for these higher prices have been asked. Country Congous have attracted some attention, and offers have been made which until recently would have been regarded as very full. Holders, however, do not yet seem willing to sell, but continue generally to name prices considerably above home currencies. Stock 17 chops equal to 7,365 chests. Settlements for the interval are reported as under:—Scented Orange Pekoe, 5,000 boxes at 15 to 28 taels; do. Capers, 4,000 do. at 15 to 27 taels; District Congou, 1,100, do. at 20 to 21 taels; Gunpowder, 7,000 do. at 12 to 26; Young Hyson, 600 do. at 17½ taels.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—The largest business during any fortnight of the season has been done for the out-going mail, buyers apparently considering that the markets at home, so long depressed, had at last taken an upward turn, and wishing to take advantage of the comparatively lower rates ruling. The market has been raised $20 to $30 per picul, and we have to quote the finest of each kind as nominal. Settlements have been over 700 piculs, mostly medium hanks, and stocks were reduced to a little over 500 piculs. Some of the shipments by the steamer were on native account. Very little has been done in waste or cocoons. The quotations laid down in London at 4s. 5d. exchange were:—Mybash and Sinchu: Extra, 31s. 9d. to 32s. 11d.; best, 30s. 6d. to 31s. 9d.;

medium, 28s. to 30s.; inferior, 22s. 9d. to 26s. 9d. Oshu, best, 31s. 10d. to 32s. 3d.; medium, 26s. 2d. to 28s. 5d.; inferior, 21s. 10d. to 24s. 2d. Koshu: Best, 27s. 6d. to 29s.; medium, 24s. 2d. to 25s. 6d.; inferior, 22s. 2d. to 23s. 3d.. Sodai: Best, 27s. 6d. to 28s. 9d.; medium, 25s. to 26s. 2d.; inferior, 22s. 2d. to 23s.

SHANGHAI.—Mr. Holdsworth's Circular dated 7th January is as follows:—"The business transacted in our Silk market during the past fortnight has been limited, as compared with the settlements made for the previous mail, the transactions being estimated at about 1,200 bales, chiefly composed of Hainings and the lower description of Tsatlees. A large portion of the settlements have been in barter against imports; hence prices have been very irregular, in some cases an advance having been paid, while on the other hand, some parcels of silk have been purchased at about, or slightly under last mail's rates. Consequent upon the near approach of Chinese New Year settling day, several holders of Silk, being pressed for money to meet their engagements, became anxious to realise their stocks even at a reduction on current rates, causing the market to close weak at the quotations given below. The arrivals from the interior having been on about the same scale as the settlements, our unsold stock remains unchanged, estimated at barely 2,000 bales, amongst which there are but a few parcels of true classic Silks, the majority being mixed with second crop Silk and undesirable. Prices all charges paid to England at Exchange 6s. per tael:—Tsatlee, Chop No. 2, 28s. to 28s. 7d. per lb.; do. No. 3, 26s. 8d. to 27s. 3d.; do. Market No. 3 and 3½, 23s. 8d. to 25s. 11d.; do. No. 4, 21s. 1d. to 23s. 2d.; do. No. 5 and com., 19s. 4d. to 20s. 1d.; Karshing Taysaam, Chop No. 1, 22s. 11d. to 23s. 11d.; do. No. 2, 21s. 4d. to 21s. 11d.; do No. 3, 19s. 1d. to 19s. 10d.; do. Nos. 4, 5, and com., 18s. 1d. to 18s. 7d.; Chin Cum Taysaam, Chop No. 2, 19s. 1d. to 19s. 7d.; do. No. 3, 18s. 1d. to 18s. 7d.

CANTON.—During the early part of the fortnight there was no demand for silk of any description, but since the arrival of the English mail, with a more satisfactory report from the London market, offers have been made for considerable portions of the remaining stock; 200 bales Tsatlees was, however, the only lot settled. Holders were quite firm, preferring to hold their goods until after the annual festivities. Stocks of finer grades were much reduced, and any increased demand would immediately advance rates.

At Shanghai, bills on India, Rs. 300 to 301 per 100 taels. At Hong Hong, Rs. 218 to 219 per $100. Bar Silver at Shanghai, taels 111.4; at Hong Kong, 11¼ per cent. premium. Mexican dollars at Shanghai, tls. 73.7 per 100; and exchange on Hong Kong, 28 discount. Bous at Yokohama, 290 per $100. Hong Hong and Shanghai Bank shares, new, ¾ premium; old, 8 per cent. premium; Gas Company, par; Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock, new, 15, old 24 per cent. premium; Union Dock Company, 25 per cent. discount; China Traders' Insurance, $100 premium.

Exchange.—Although rates at the close of the year appeared to be unnaturally low a still further decline has taken place. At the opening of business Bank Bills could be held at 4s. 3¾d. six months' sight, but business has since been done at 4s. 3½d. and 4s. 3¼d., and at the latter rate bills are easily obtainable. There has been a fair demand for private bills at 4s. 3d. six months' sight, and in one or two instances sales have been effected at 4s. 3¼d. Bank Bills at 4s. 3½d. six months' sight have been sold to a considerable extent for remittance to India. There has also been much inquiry for Rupee paper on Calcutta at Rs. 219, and large transactions have taken place. H.M. Treasury Bills at 30 days' sight were as usual competed for by public tenders and sold at 4s. 2¾d. to 4s. 2⅞d. to the extent of about £80,000. The estimated amount of business by the present opportunity, exclusive of Treasury bills, embraces £350,000, say £150,000 Bank paper, and 200,000 Private bills, and 11 lahks Rupees.

Bullion.—Since the departure of last mail the steamer Great Republic has arrived from San Francisco bringing treasure to the value of $1,300,000 of which about $650,000 is for this port and the remainder for Japan and Shanghai. Of the quantity for Hong Kong about $200,000 worth is Bar Silver. Sales of this have been effected at 11¼ per cent. premium, which is the present rate. There is no sycee on the market, and the nominal value remains 9¼ per cent. premium. Only a limited business has been doing in gold bar and leaf.

Shares.—There has been very little doing in the Share Market during the past fortnight. Old Bank are very firm at 8 per cent. premium, while new are rather weak, there being small sellers at ¾ per cent. premium, and some hundreds for sale at 1 per cent. premium. A few Union Dock have been placed, but there are further buyers. A small lot of Hotel were placed at 55 per cent. discount, and there are sellers at 50. Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock are in good demand, but there are none on the market. Steamboat shares are weak, and likely to decline further.

At SINGAPORE.—For London, Eastern Star, Empress of India; for Liverpool, Antipodes; for Falmouth, Akershus, Heros, Indian Empire; for Gibralter, Formica; for Cuxhaven, Gazelle; for New York, Crested Wave, Triton.

At PENANG.—For London, Dodo.

FREIGHTS AND CHARTERS.

At YOKOHAMA.—To London, there is no vessel on the berth; to New York, £3 5s. to £3 10s. per steamer, $45 per ton of 40 feet.

At SHANGHAI.—Rates home remain without change, being £3, with little doing; a slight improvement has taken place in the demand for suitable vessels for coasting, which is expected to increase.

At FOOCHOW.—To London, £3 10s. per ton.

At HONG KONG and CANTON.—There is a fair inquiry for tonnage, principally for coasting purposes. The following settlements, &c., are from the circular of George Holmes:—

Galatea, 375 tons, Whampoa to New York, on private terms.

Ceres, 437 tons, Fidelia, 329 tons, Whampoa to New York, at £3 2s. 6d. per ton.

Malvern, 428 tons, Saigon to Falmouth, f.o., if Great Britain at £3 12s. 6d. per ton, if the Continent, at £3 17s. 6d. per ton.

The number of disengaged vessels in harbour (exclusive of Siamese) are 15, representing 7,619 tons.

MANILA.—The Sandringham has engaged 1,600 bales hemp at £3 10s. per ton 20 cwt. for London or Liverpool, calling at Cork for orders. The further settlements are:—Spanish ship Bella Maria, 936 tons, for London, 1,000 tons dry sugar at £3 10s., and 2,000 bales hemp, at £3 12s. per ton of 20 cwt. Spanish barque Tres de Mays, 437 tons, to Channel for orders with full cargo of dry sugar at £4 per ton of 20 cwt.; if discharged in a safe port in United Kingdom, and 10s. per ton extra if discharged at a port on the Continent. Adolfo, 424 tons, to Channel for orders, dry sugar, at £4 per ton.

SINGAPORE.—The demand for tonnage continues good, for Europe direct and from the rice ports, rates firm, with few disengaged vessels in ports; for London or Liverpool the rate is £3 10s. dead weight, and light freight, from the rice ports to U. K. or Continent £4 5s. to £4 12s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. extra if ordered to Rangoon or Bassein.

SPOKEN.—Veronica, Sunderland to Galle, Feb. 12, Eddystone bearing N.E. by E. 14 miles. Robertus Hendricus, Sunderland to Batavia, Feb. 11, 48 N., 8W. Ethel, Hong Kong to New York, Dec. 8, 22 S., 55 E. Solent, Foochow to New York, 24 Jan., 2 N., 29 W. Eva Johanna, Rotterdam to Batavia, Dec. 10, 23 S., 28 W. Charlie Palmer, Cardiff to Singapore, Dec. 13, 22 S., 29 W. Gem of the Sea, Liverpool (?) to Galle, Dec. 17, 20 S., 31 W. Mary and Hillegonda, Rotterdam to Batavia, Dec. 13, 31 S., 26 W. Carl and Augusta, Hamburg to Singapore, Dec. 16, 28 S,, 18 W.

CASUALTIES.—The Europa, Lupcke, from Batavia, which arrived at Texel, Feb. 11, had lost 45 fathoms of chain and sustained other damages.

HONG KONG APPOINTMENTS.—The Civil Service Gazette announces the following:—Hong Kong.—Mr. J. Russell, student interpreter, has been appointed, provisionally, private secretary to the Governor; and Mr. W. H. Alexander has been appointed acting Colonial Secretary. The office of Superintendent of the Bullion-office has become vacant by the resignation of Mr. C. L. Davies.

MAIL PACKETS BETWEEN POINT DE GALLE AND MAURITIUS—The Government of Mauritius having come to the determination to put an end to the contract with the Union Steamship Company, under which a monthly service has been maintained between Point de Galle and Port Louis, the mails despatched to Mauritius on the 20th and 26th inst. will be the last that will be conveyed by the vessels of that company. The mail service at present performed by the vessels of the same company between Port Louis and Natal will cease at the same time. No letters for Natal or the Cape of Good Hope can thenceforth be forwarded via Mauritius, and no letters for Mauritius can be forwarded via the Cape of Good Hope. The correspondence for Mauritius will be forwarded wholly by the French mail packets, the mails for which are made up in London on the evening of the 7th of each month, or on the previous evening when the 7th falls on a Sunday. Supplementary mails will also be despatched on the morning of the 8th, except when that day falls on a Sunday, when no supplementary mails will be forwarded.

DAILY MAIL COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.—At a meeting of the Society of Arts held yesterday evening, Mr. Hyde Clark, D.C.L., read a paper on the subject of "Daily Mail communication with India." The author advocated the adoption of the Euphrates Valley route via Constantinople, Aleppo, Baghdad and Bussorah in preference to any other, and went into the subject of the completion of a railway system through the valley, by which he stated Bombay could be reached in 12 and Calcutta in 16 days. The estimated cost of the necessary works to complete the line of route would be $20,000,000. At the conclusion of the reading several gentlemen, including the chairman, Colonel Sykes, offered remarks upon the subject, and while acknowledging the advantages of the route expressed doubts as to whether sufficient capital could be raised for the purpose of completing the works. A vote of thanks to Mr. Clark terminated the proceedings.

EXPORT OF COTTON GOODS TO THE FAR EAST.

Mr. Sam Mendel's tables for the present month contain the following details of the quantities of Cotton Goods and Yarn exported to Hong Kong, Shanghai, Japan, Singapore, Batavia, Manila, and Ceylon during the month ended 16th February, 1868. The exports for the two months ended 16th February, compared with those for the corresponding periods of the two previous years, are also given.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. LAURENCE OLIPHANT.—The Scotsman of the 25th says:—"Mr. Oliphant is about formally to announce his intention not to offer himself again for the representation of the Stirling Burghs—the cause of his retirement being, we are sorry to say, bad health. Mr. Oliphant, who has been for some time on a tour in the United States, found himself unable to be present at the re-assembling of Parliament, and has been advised by his physicians that any attempt at present to resume his Parliamentary duties would be highly dangerous. He has therefore resolved to pair off until the dissolution, and to announce at once that he will not seek re-election."

MURDER AND SUICIDE BY A CHINESE.—The foreman of the Consolidated Copper Mines, near Santiago de Cuba, an Englishman or an American, named Edward Andrews, was killed lately by one of the Chinamen working there. It seems that Mr. Andrews ordered the Chinaman to be thrown into gaol, when the revengeful Mongol drew a knife and stabbed Andrews in the right lung, killing him instantly. The Chinaman subsequently committed suicide, by jumping into the shaft of the mine, at the bottom of which he was found mashed to a jelly.

THE SCREW-STEAMER COLUMBINE.—This steamer built for China and Japan, has just been despatched for Annesley Bay with stores and sundries for the Abyssinian Expedition. The Columbine, Captain Lobneitz, is a very handsome composite steamer of 810 gross register tonnage, the first of two steamers for the China and Japan trade, contracted for jointly by Messrs. Charles Connell and Co., shipbuilders, and Messrs. James Howden and Co., engineers. The engines are of 100 nominal horse power, with surface condensers, variable expansion valves, and every modern improved ment.

LAUNCH.—On the 10th of February, from the yard of Elias Cox, at Bridport, a clipper barque of 950 tons burden, purchased by Messrs. James Shepherd and Co., of London, and intended for the China trade. She was named Rollo, by Mrs. Cox.

THE BRINDISI ROUTE.—The Florence correspondent of The Times gives a very unfavourable account of the present working of this route. He says:—"The opening of the Mont Cenis tunnel and of the Suez Canal are two events Italians naturally look forward to with the strongest interest, as likely to be highly beneficial to their country, through which lies the direct route from one to the other of those marvels of engineering skill and perseverance. Besides the pecuniary gain to the country, it will increase its importance to become part of the high road between Europe and the Indies, and the indispensable rapidity and punctuality that must be used will be of good example to Italian railway administrations and to the people in general. We cannot doubt that the Government and railway authorities are desirous to do all in their power to accelerate the end proposed, and that they will welcome information as to points where reform is practicable and vigilance needed. The Custom-house at Susa may be particularly pointed out to them. When writing from Turin early in last October I commented on the proceedings there—on the insufficient accommodation, the unnecessary amount of scrutiny, the vexatious delays which for the most part rendered the promises of railway companies and Messageries as to the time of arrival in Turin entirely illusory. Since then things seem to have got worse instead of better, and a flagrant instance of abuse and mismanagement has just come to my knowledge. Early on Thursday morning, the 6th inst., an English officer, the Marquis of Blandford, proceeding to India by way of Brindisi, and having no time to lose in order to catch the boat thence to Alexandria, arrived at Susa from Paris. Starting on so distant an expedition he naturally had a good deal of baggage, but it was all addressed to Calcutta, and his passport set forth his military profession and destination. Moreover, he was travelling in company with a Queen's messenger, Captain Robbins, who has been through Susa many scores of times, who must be perfectly known to all the officials there, and whose assurance that his companion was going right through, to embark at Brindisi, ought to have had the weight necessary to secure his passage without molestation from Custom-house searchers. Instead of that all representations were disregarded. Lord Blandford's trunks and cases, the most of which were not intended to be opened before arrival in India, were undone and ransacked, duty was levied on various articles, including two guns, and no sort of certificate could be obtained whereby to obtain restitution on embarkation at Brindisi of the money he had been unjustly compelled to pay at Susa. So protracted were the proceedings of the pedantic and unintelligent officials that the whole of the three hours' pause at Susa was consumed by them, and Lord Blandford narrowly escaped missing the train, and, consequently, the boat from Brindisi, by abandoning all remonstrance, and paying everything they thought fit to charge, leaving Susa without having had time even for such refreshment as is obtainable at that wretched place, and reaching Turin at 7 A.M., just in time to catch the train to Bologna. His report of the amenities of the Italian dogana and of the advantages of the Trans-Alpine route to India is not likely to encourage other English officers to adopt it until a better system shall have been inaugurated."

FOREIGN-OFFICE AGENTS.—Mr. T. B. Potter has asked some questions in the House of Commons about the Foreign-office "agents." He desired to know exactly how much they have received as "agents" during the last five years, by whom they have been paid, and whether it is true that the "agencies" are actually to be abolished. The five agents are all senior clerks, who are very well paid by Government, and whose regular duties might be supposed to be arduous. The payments to agents are, we believe, 1 per cent. on diplomatic salaries and outfits, and ten guineas a year for every consul. The five agents are said to receive among them about £4,000 a year. In return for this addition to their official incomes they receive and pay over their clients' salaries, and perform friendly offices for them, both connected with business and of a private character. But the Foreign-office should itself provide for the receipt by diplomatic and consular servants abroad of their salaries and correspondence without tax; and as for private offices, such as Mr. Alston enumerates in his lively evidence, gentlemen abroad are quite entitled to ask for them from these well-paid "agents," but if there were no agents to pay, they would probably get them done by friends and relatives for nothing. Mr. Alston had been asked by different clients to send out to them Redhouse's Turkish Dictionary, the Shipping Gazette, two dozen pairs of dog-skin gloves, ten shillings' worth of postage stamps, and Lloyd's Weekly News. Mr. Bernal, a consul, wrote to his agent, asking him to get a prescription made up for him. Can it be necessary or proper to keep up the agency system for such trumpery? Mr. Hammond mentioned to the Diplomatic Service Committee of 1861 that the Duke of Wellington, when he was Ambassador at Paris, refused to have one, and the Under Secretary volunteered to receive and pay over the Duke's allowances, and see that his letters were forwarded, and, says Mr. Hammond, "it was very good natured in him to do so." There are many poor consuls to whom ten guineas a year is an object; but they may perhaps fear that, if they refused to have agents, they would not find the Under Secretary so good-natured. The Ambassador at Paris has to pay £100 a year, and the Ambassador at Constantinople £90 a year, under this system—one per cent. on their salaries. These sums would go some way towards paying private secretaries, which the Foreign-office does not allow to ambassadors and ministers, unless they choose to pay them out of their own pockets, though all governors are provided with this assistance at the public charge. It might, perhaps, be worth while for Mr. Potter to ask further under what circumstances agencies have been handed over from one official to another, and whether anything in the nature of a sale of "goodwill" has occurred. As far as public interests are concerned the vice of the agency system lies in the private liaisons which are apt to be formed thereby to the prejudice of the service. I fit is not prop er for an Assistant Under Secretary to be an "agent," it cannot be proper for the Secretary of State's private secretary, who may have much influence on patronage, or for the chief clerk, who superintends all the finances of the office, or for head clerks of departments, to act as "agents," and place themselves in private relations of pecuniary profit with members of the service, which, as long as human nature is human nature, must have a prejudicial effect on impartiality.

THE CIVIC VISIT TO EGYPT.—Advices from Cairo state that Sir Thomas Gabriel, Sir Sydney Waterlow, and their ladies, accompanied by Mr. Deputy Virtue, reached Alexandria on the 27th of January, all well, having experienced a very pleasant, although rather stormy, passage from Marseilles. The British Consul-General came on board the steamer immediately on its arrival in the harbour, and kindly placed one of the Viceroy's State launches at the disposal of the party, and in charge of his own dragoman. Having visited Pompey's Pillar, Cleopatra's Needle, and the other sights of Alexandria, our friends departed the next day for Cairo. Since their arrival in this ancient and most interesting capital they have received every possible mark of attention. On the 30th of January they were entertained at an official dinner at the British Consulate. Zeki Bey, the Chamberlain of the Viceroy, attended them the day after their arrival, intimating the Pasha's desire to afford them every possible facility for visiting the various antiquities. The 31st of January was devoted to a visit to the Pyramids and the tombs in the vicinity. On the 1st of February the gentlemen were received by the Viceroy at the Palace of Ghizeh. On the 3rd the ladies were received by the Princess, the mother of the Viceroy, and the ladies of the harem. On the 6th of February the whole party left Cairo for a trip up the Nile to Thebes, Luxor, and the First Cataract, the Viceroy having most generously placed one of his steamers at their entire disposal, fully equipped with every luxury for 30 days; they do not, however, expect to be absent from Cairo more than 20 days.

THE ENGLISH ENGINEERS IN EGYPT.—A number of English railway engineers left this country for Egypt about the middle of May, 1866, having been engaged by the Viceroy's Government for three years, at the rate of £20 a month for the first year, £22 for the second, and £24 for the third, with overtime in proportion, and a free house, or in lieu £4 a month. The engineers had been only a short time in Egypt when they found a cause of complaint in their overtime not being paid in terms of their contract, and further in being left to provide lodgings at their own expense. They accordingly objected to this infringement of their engagement, and no attention being given to their remonstrances, they took the step of formally intimating to those in authority, that unless their grievances were redressed, they should leave the employment of the Viceroy. They did so on the 20th of April, 1867. They then applied to the British Consul at Cairo, and on his representations a commission was appointed to inquire into the whole affair, which set for eleven weeks, and reported in favour of the men's claims. Still no redress was given by the Egyptian Government. Our Consul, at Cairo, however, paid the men their overtime and lodging money, and shipped them free back to Britain. On arriving in this country, a number of them, who had procured employment in Edinburgh, immediately entrusted their business to Mr. D. F. Bridgeford, S.S.C., who proceeded to London and laid the proceedings before the Foreign-office. On returning to Edinburgh Mr. Bridgeford sought and obtained for his clients an interview with the Lord Advocate, which seems to have been decisive of the matter; for on the 10th instant a communication was received by Mr. Bridgeford from the Foreign-office, the effect of which is that the Egyptian Government agree to pay the men the sum due for the period they remained in Egypt while the commission sat, about eleven weeks, and also a further indemnity of three months' salary, in all something more than £100.

M. Magne, the Minister of Finance, has submitted to the Council of State the draft of a Bill authorising the Suez Canal Company to add lottery drawings to their loan of one million francs, the prizes to exceed each year one per cent. of the borrowed capital.

UNDER the heading of "Great Fermentation in China," Fun has the following jeu d'esprit:—

"Beer has been successfully brewed at Shanghai."—Reuter's Telegrams.

For "the cup that cheers," in spite of your jeers,
I shall never be loth to speak up;
But I thought till to-day, in the land of Cathay,
That the cup, so famed, was a tea-cup.
The only brew John Chinaman knew,
I'd have wagered a pound of hyson,
Was the tea of that ilk, which, with sugar and milk,
Is a pleasantly negatived p'ison.
But it seems that a gent, from Burton-on-Trent,
Connected with one of the ale-men,
Bass, Allsopp, or Salt, the uses of malt
Has imparted un-to the pig-tail-men.

NAVAL AND MILITARY.

The Magpie, first-class screw gun vessel for China, was launched from No. 2 building-slip of Portsmouth dockyard on the 12th. The vessel was named, with the usual ceremony of breaking a bottle of wine on her stem, by Miss Wellesley, eldest daughter of Rear-Admiral Superintendent G. G. Wellesley, C.B. The Magpie is one of eleven vessels, all alike in dimensions, construction, and propelling power, and now completing in their build and outfit in the several Government dockyards and provided for in the Naval Estimates for the financial year now drawing near its close. They are built of wood, carry no armour-plating, and average 665 tons measurement. Their other dimensions are:—Length between perpendiculars, 170 ft.; extreme breadth, 29 ft.; depth in hold, 12 ft. 5 in. Their propelling power consists each of a pair of three-bladed twin screws, driven by two sets of engines having a combined nominal power of 160-horse. The engines for the Magpie have been manufactured for the Admiralty by Messrs. Summers and Day, of Southampton. The accommodation for the officers and crew on board these vessels is ample, and the ventilation is also very good. As regards speed, too, they have not by any means been neglected, as they will average upwards of 11·5 knots under full speed. They are altogether very fit for the purpose for which they are supposed to be intended—the suppression of piracy in the Chinese and Japanese seas; but for fighting purposes in any other part of the world they would probably be useless. There is no reason, therefore, why they should not be sent out as fast as they can be completed.

The Bullfinch, another twin screw gun-vessel for China and sister ship to the Magpie, has been launched at Sheerness. The engines of the ship carry three guns—one 6½-ton, and two 40-pounder guns, all made so as were made by Messrs. Rennie and Co., of London, and are of 160-horse power, nominal, driving two propellers of the Mangin pattern. She will to act as broadside guns. Miss M. Hall, daughter of Captain W. K. Hall, C.B., superintendent of Sheerness Dockyard, broke the usual bottle of wine and wished success to the Bullfinch. A mallet and chisel having been handed to Miss Hall, the rope detaining the vessel was severed, and the Bullfinch slowly left her housing for the great basin, where she will be refitted with all possible despatch. A great number of naval and military officers and ladies were present. The keel and framework of another vessel of the same dimensions as the Bullfinch have been prepared, and the ship will be got on with at once.

An Admiralty order, received at Chatham dockyard, directs preparations to be forthwith made for the construction at that establishment of another powerful armour-clad war ship of the Hercules class, in the large dock from which the Hercules was recently floated out. The instructions accompanying the order state that the new vessel—the name of which is not announced—will be in all respects the same as the Hercules below the water line, and that the ironwork for the keel of the new ship is to be immediately commenced. Consequent on this order the extra mechanics taken on some time since in the smithery department will be retained in the yard instead of being discharged.

The news from our Australian squadron is not satisfactory. There have been several courts-martial, and the Lords of the Admiralty will perhaps feel disposed to think that the sentences have not been sufficiently severe to give salutary examples. The relations between the commodore on the Australian station and the captain of the Galatea (for in that light must we regard his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh) have not been conducted in the manner we could wish during the time that the Galatea has been within the bounds of Captain Lambert's command. The senior officer on one occasion communicated to his junior the orders he had received from the Admiralty, and the latter, by way of answer, replied by telegraph that he had later orders in his possession which rendered him independent, and much more to the same effect. If his Royal Highness is in charge of the property of the public, merely for his own gratification or for State reasons, the fact should have been intimated to the commanding officers on the different stations which he has visited, and is about to visit, so that no contretemps should have been permitted to exist; but if he is visiting different quarters of Her Majesty's dominions as a captain of the Royal Navy, he should be prepared to act as any other officer of his rank would on meeting with a superior.

We regret to hear that the last mail from Jamaica brought home unsatisfactory accounts of the health of that distinguished Arctic voyager Commodore Sir F. Leopold M'Clintock. Sir Leopold has had his broad pendant flying at Port Royal since the autumn of 1865, and now feels that he requires a change. He has, consequently, asked the Admiralty to relieve him from the post which he has held under very trying circumstances. Club rumour states that Captain Sherard Osborn, C.B., may succeed his old friend and brother explorer if he would only intimate his wish to the authorities, but, as the station is not likely just yet to show any signs of animation, it is not probable that so gallant and active an officer as Captain Osborn undoubtedly is would be content to take command of the Aboukir, which, if not already grounded on her beef bones, is hemmed in by the shells of defunct land crabs.

Five gunboats for the French Government have just been launched in the private yards of La Seyne; they are armour-plated, and will carry one large and three small guns. The idea is that they are intended for distant foreign stations, probably Cochin China.

BALL ON BOARD THE "LORD CLYDE."—A Naples correspondent, writing on the 15th, says, "A pretty fete was given yesterday on board the Lord Clyde, by the captain, Roderick Dew, to the English residents. Boats were in waiting at the 'Immacolatella,' at two o'clock, and from that hour till six o'clock dancing was kept up with great spirit. An improvised ball-room on board a ship of war is always an attractive scene and that which the quarter-deck of one of our fine ironclads presented was peculiarly so. This part of the vessel was covered over with awning and decorated with flags which reminded one of the dear old country and of its power to protect all British subjects in foreign lands. The guests were in number about 60 or 70, whose enjoyment of the dance and the hospitality of the captain was not in the slightest degree diminished even by a heavy shower of rain. The Lord Clyde leaves for Malta to-day at two o'clock, after a visit of ten days."

LEGAL.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

JONES v. JUST.—This was a case of considerable commercial importance, raising the question whether on the sale of a commodity which the buyer has no opportunity of inspecting and judging of, there is an implied warranty or undertaking on the part of the seller that it is reasonably merchantable or saleable by the description under which it is sold. The question arose upon the following state of facts:—The plaintiffs, merchants in this country, through the intervention of brokers, entered into a contract with the defendants for the purchase of a quantity of "Manila hemp," to arrive by a certain ship from Singapore. The price was a fair price—£39 per ton; but when the hemp arrived it was found to be in such a state as to show that it had been—probably in the course of the voyage from Manila to Singapore—shipwrecked, and wetted by sea water, and then dried and repacked, and afterwards re-shipped at Singapore. It appeared that Manila hemp is divided into several kinds or qualities, and that the hemp in question, if it had been in good condition, would have been of fair current quality. It was not so far damaged as to lose the character of hemp, and, being sold by auction, it fetched 75 per cent. of the contract price which similar hemp, not damaged, would have realised; and, as the market price had risen, this was not very much lower than the contract price. On the other hand, the buyer the plaintiff, of course, lost to the extent of the difference between the market price at the time of arrival and the price realised by the re-sale, and he accordingly brought this action on an implied warranty that the hemp should be merchantable, it being admitted that there was no fraud on the part of the seller. The case was tried at the Liverpool assizes, before Mr, Justice Blackburn, and it was contended, on the part of the seller, by Mr. Brett, Q.C., that it was enough that the hemp answered the description of "hemp," and that there was no such implied warranty as supposed, but that the maxim cavaet emptor applied. The learned Judge, however, was of a different opinion, and said that it was a question for the jury whether the hemp when shipped at Singapore was such as not only to answer the descriptions of hemp, but of hemp "reasonably merchantable," there being, in his opinion, an implied contract or warranty to that effect; and it being necessarily a question for the jury whether an article was reasonably merchantable. Upon that ruling the case went to the jury, who found for the plaintiff for £750, the amount of damages being measured by the price which the hemp would have realised had it been according to contract, as compared with what it actually fetched. The question was reserved for this Court whether there was such an implied warranty as alleged. Mr. Justice Mellor delivered judgment in favour of the plaintiff, the buyer, to the effect that there was an implied warranty that the hemp was reasonably merchantable, and that, therefore, he was entitled to recover on such contract. The main question, the learned Judge said, was as to the contract, and that was a question of some importance and difficulty. On the part of the seller, the defendant, it was insisted that the contract was performed by the shipment of Manila hemp, even although at the time it was shipped it was so damaged as to be unmerchantable; and that, as both parties were equally ignorant of the fact, the buyer ought to have stipulated that the hemp should be merchantable. But, upon careful consideration, the Court were of opinion that the contrary was the correct view, and that the direction of the learned Judge at the trial was in substance right. There was a distinction between such cases as the present and cases such as those relied upon by the defendant, on which the buyer had opportunity of inspection. In such cases the maxim caveat emptor might fairly apply, even as to latent defects, for, at all events, he had the opportunity of exercising his own judgment; and if he did not like to rely upon it he could stipulate for a warranty. On a contract for the sale of goods of a particular description—whether the buyer had or had not had an opportunity of inspection—there was an implied warranty that the goods should reasonably answer the description. And in every contract to supply goods of a specific description there was an implied warranty, not only that the goods should answer that description, but also that they should be saleable or "merchantable" by that description. This was an implied term in every such contract; and in this case the question appeared to be whether the article as delivered or shipped at Singapore was "merchantable" or saleable in the market under the description of "Manila hemp." And it appeared to the Court as the result of all the cases that the maxim caveat emptor could not apply, and that it must be assumed that the buyer and the seller both contemplated dealing in an article which was merchantable. The buyer bought for the purpose of selling, and the seller could not on any other supposition than that the article was merchantable have obtained a customer for it. The buyer, therefore, must be taken to have trusted to the judgment of the seller. It was clear that he could have exercised no judgment of his own, and this seemed to involve an implied warranty; and there was no difference in that respect between a sale of goods for a particular purpose and a sale of goods as answering a certain description. For these reasons, therefore, the Court were of opinion that the verdict for the plaintiff, the buyer, should stand. Judgment for the plaintiff.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.

IN RE GEORGE LYALL.—This was an adjourned sitting for last examination and discharge. The bankrupt was a member of the mercantile firms of George Lyall and C. F. Still, of Leadenhall-street, and of Lyall, Still, and Co., of Hong Kong. The liabilities of the London firm are stated at £76,409, against which there is a claim of £75,860 upon the house at Hong Kong; other assets £540. The separate debts of Mr. Lyall have been paid in full. Mr. Bagley appeared for the assignees; Mr. Reed opposed for M. Liebert, of Manchester, a large creditor for £4,000 or £5,000; Mr. Sargood supported. Mr. Bagley, as representing the assignees, expressed their approval of the accounts rendered by the bankrupt, which were probably as perfect as they could be made. The members of the firm abroad had obtained their discharge, and the assignees considered that Mr. Lyall was also entitled to be released from his difficulties. He proposed that the last examination should be passed, and the question of discharge reserved for future consideration. Mr. Reed said that M. Liebert had a very large stake in the matter, and it did not appear probable that he would ever receive a dividend of more than 1s. in the pound. The affairs of the firm at Hong Kong appeared to have been managed by Mr. Maclean, to whom consignments were made by the house in London, and he in his turn consigned produce to the London firm. The learned counsel at some length proceeded to criticise the accounts filed by the bankrupt. He submitted that the surplus arising from the bankrupt's private property had not been carried to the credit of the joint estate, and that the indebtedness of the house abroad, for which the bankrupt was responsible, had not been included in the balance-sheet, but only the indebtedness of the London firm. The liabilities, if properly returned, would amount to £692,370, instead of £76,409; and as the accounts were altogether inadequate for the full disclosure of the bankrupt's affairs, he asked that the bankrupt should not be allowed to pass upon the present accounts, and that he should be ordered to file an amended balance-sheet. He asked particularly that the bankrupt should be required to show how an alleged surplus in 1864 of £76,000 had in 1865 been converted into a deficiency of £65,000. The proper course under the circumstances was either for the Court to direct an adjournment sine die, or to direct the bankrupt to furnish further and better particulars of his dealings and position. Mr. Sargood, urged that the position of the firm abroad was well known to the opposing creditor. The object of M. Liebert was to regain possession of his goods instead of proving for a dividend. Mr. Liebert was entirely conversant with the bankrupt's affairs, and had been actively engaged in the investigation arising out of the bankruptcy of the Hong Kong house. For months before his failure Mr. Lyall had been in the hands of his creditors, and had made an absolute and unreserved surrender of his property. The learned counsel proceeded to combat, at some length, the objections which had been made to the accounts, and asked that the bankrupt might be allowed to pass his examination. His Honour, after consulting the official assignee, held that the bankrupt was entitled to pass his examination, as he had evinced every desire to give information, and the official assignee expressed his approval of the accounts filed. The order of discharge would stand for consideration on a future day.

COURT OF DIVORCE.

PARTRIDGE V. PARTRIDGE AND WOODWARD.—This was a husband's petition for a dissolution of marriage, and claiming damages. The respondent and co-respondent did not appear. The petitioner, who is a clergyman and schoolmaster at Yarmouth, married the respondent in April, 1855, and they lived together happily for ten years and had six children. It appeared that before her marriage with the petitioner the respondent had been engaged to the co-respondent, and, although the engagement was broken off, they continued to be attached to one another. The co-respondent, who was a China merchant, went abroad and did not return to England until 1865. He renewed his acquaintance with Mrs. Partridge, and ultimately an adulterous intimacy was formed between them, and in the latter part of 1866 she left her husband's house and never returned to it. Her brother-in-law found her living at Walton-on-Thames under the name of Mrs. Woodward, and she confessed that she had been guilty of adultery, and was then with child by Woodward. He was not then living with her, and she had not seen him for some time. Her brother-in-law went to him and asked him whether he would marry her in the event of her husband obtaining a divorce. Mr. Woodward said there was an obstacle in the way, for he had been married since the previous September. He wrote a note to Mrs. Partridge, acknowledging this fact, admitting that he had acted very basely towards her, and could not hope for her forgiveness, and stating that he was going abroad. There was no evidence whether he really was married, or whether, as was suggested, this was only an excuse for breaking his promise to Mrs. Partridge. It was proved that since his return from China he had stated that he was worth about £25,000. The jury assessed the damages at £500. Decree nisi, with costs against the co-respondent.

PARLIAMENT.

THE NEW CHINESE AMBASSADOR.

(Feb. 17th.) Colonel SYKES asked the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether any accounts had been received at the Foreign-office in confirmation of statements in the Friend of China of the 9th of December, 1867, and North China Herald, that Mr. Burlinghame, United States Minister at the Imperial Court of Peking, had accepted the office of Ambassador from the Chinese Government to the Governments in Europe; that he left Peking on the 24th of November for Tientsin, but was stopped on the road by rebels, and was only relieved from his position by the United States' steamship of war Ashuelot and a party of bluejackets from Her Majesty's gunboat Dove; and, whether he would lay upon the table the memorials from the commercial communities in China respecting the revision of the Treaty of Tientsin, addressed to the British Minister at Peking or to the Foreign-office.

Mr. E. EGERTON replied that intelligence had been received of Mr. Burlinghame's appointment as Chinese Ambassador to the European Governments. As to his detention and release, he would read an extract from a letter forwarded to the Foreign-office, containing a full statement of the facts. The writer said:—"Mr. Burlinghame's letter to Mr. Wade (enclosed by the latter to Mr. Hammond) is dated Shanghai, December 10, and in it he states:—'You have doubtless heard we were stopped at Hosiwu by a roving band of robbers. Our carts were brought to a halt by the cry that they (the robbers) were in front. The drivers could not advance, but made a stampede for Hosiwu, where we remained for 48 hours, menaced by 300 robbers. I sent messengers to Peking and Tientsin. Succour came almost simultaneously from both places. Captain Dunlop, of Her Majesty's gunboat Dove, mounted his "bluejackets" and rode 45 miles in 12 hours in the night, and was the first to arrive. Sir Rutherford's escort, under Murray, with Conolly and Baber as volunteers, came next, and thus it was that we were rescued. I wish everywhere to make known the most energetic and gallant conduct of Captain Dunlop.'" He had no objection to produce the memorials.

CEYLON.

(14th.) Mr. GORST said that on February 28, on going into Committee of Supply, he should call attention to a petition from Ceylon and to a despatch from the Governor enclosing the same, and should ask a question thereupon.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION WITH MALTA.

Sir G. BOWYER asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies what steps the Government are prepared to take for the conveyance of letters to and communication with Malta, in consequence of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamers ceasing to touch at the island.—Mr. E. EGERTON stated that by the new arrangement of passing through the Straits of Messina, instead of stopping at Malta, the transit of the mails between Marseilles and Alexandria would be accelerated by 12 hours. Other mails would still be conveyed to Malta by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, but what substitute would be given to Malta for the mail between that island and Alexandria was still under the consideration of the Government. As soon as any arrangement was made he would inform the House of it.

THE EAST INDIA CIVIL SERVICE.

(19th.) Mr. FAWCETT gave notice that, on the 24th of March, he would move "That this House, while cordially approving the system of open competition for the appointments to the East India Civil Service, is of opinion that the people of India have no fair chance of competing for these appointments so long as the examinations are held nowhere but in London; the House, therefore, deems it advisable that, simultaneously with the examinations in London, similar examinations should be held at Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras."

AGENCIES IN THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

(20th.) Mr. B. POTTER asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he had any objection to give a return of the names of the persons for whom the clerks in the Foreign-office now act as agents, or have so acted at any time during the last five years; of the emoluments which such clerks have individually received for such agency during the last five years, and the amount received by them from each person; and whether there was any truth in the statement which had appeared in the public press that the agencies in the Foreign-office were to be abolished.

Lord STANLEY: I have no objection to give a return of the names of those persons for whom the clerks in the Foreign-office now act, and for the last five years have acted as agents. With regard to the emoluments, I as prepared to give the aggregate annual amount received by each agent, am this is a matter of public interest; but I cannot see any advantage in giving the amount contributed by each person, inasmuch as it is a matter of a purely voluntary or private character. With regard to the last part of the question, I have to say that the subject of abolishing these agencies is at present under consideration.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

(21st.) Captain VIVIAN asked the Secretary of State for India, whether, looking to the very unsatisfactory state of the telegraphic communication between this country and India, the Government had taken any steps to establish a more direct system; whether the Government had opened any negotiations with any private companies with this object, and whether the Government had included in such negotiations the question of establishing a direct telegraphic communication with the Abyssinian forces.

Sir S. NORTHCOTE observed that the telegraphic communication between this country and India was not all that could be desired, but he did not think that it deserved the description of being in a "very unsatisfactory state." The average rate of the transmission of messages during the first twenty days of February, via Russia, was three days and nine hours, and by Turkey three days and eleven hours. Within the last week the average rate had been two days and twenty-two hours; and individual messages had occasionally been received on the day of despatch via Turkey and Russia, and frequently on the day following the date of the despatch. He might observe that steps were being taken, which he hoped would improve the existing lines of communication, in consequence of a concession recently obtained by Messrs. Siemens and Co., from Prussia, Turkey, and Russia. Nevertheless, it would be an object of interest and advantage to this country to obtain another line of communication by the Red Sea. Whenever the attention of the Government of India had been called to the subject, they had admitted that another line was much to be desired; but it was not the opinion of the Council of India that they had a right to burden the revenues of India with any guarantee or subsidy to establish such a communication; and it was obvious that the expense of any line of telegraphic communication between India and England, if borne by Government subsidy or guarantee at all, ought to be borne, not by India exclusively, but by India and the Imperial Government. The principle laid down by the Imperial Government with respect to submarine telegraphs was that it was not fit in the present state of things to advise a guarantee or subsidy, but that it was better to give facilities in the way of surveying and in other modes. Such being the case, several proposals had been made by private companies, but they had led to no result. However, at the time of the Abyssinian expedition it was brought under the notice of Government that the establishment of telegraphic communication between England and Massowah, or whatever other point might be selected as the point of departure for the expedition would be a great advantage; and in consequence of the sense which the Government entertained of the importance of establishing, if possible, such a communication, he entered into communication with the directors of the Telegraphic Construction and Maintenance Company, who were disposed to meet the Government in the most liberal spirit; but when their proposals came to be examined, it was found that it would not have been possible to establish a submarine cable from Annesley Bay, so that it could be worked before January. Under these circumstances, the great advantage of telegraphic communication, while the expenditure was organising, would be lost, and, therefore, it was not thought advisable to incur the cost of laying a cable to Annesley Bay.

THE NECESSITY FOR A GARRISON IN HONG KONG.

IT seems to us that in the memorial of the Hong Kong Association regarding the Military Tax, there is some confusion between two very distinct questions—the one, whether the colony should be called upon to pay for the maintenance of the garrison, and the other, whether any garrison is requisite at all. Had the memorialists confined themselves to the first of these, they would have kept on perfectly safe ground; in entering on the other they have attempted to prove too much, and have damaged their case considerably. For instance, in looking through the memorial we find this passage:—"Sir HERCULES "ROBINSON declared the troops superfluous as far as the safety "of Hong Kong was concerned, and undertook to be respon- "sible for the maintenance of good order in the colony with "the aid of the local police force alone." The late Governor may have made such a statement, but what is it worth? Arguments should be based on facts, not on such fallacies as this. It needs no very tenacious memory to recall one or two extraordinary illustrations of the amount of protection that might be expected from "the local police force alone." When Mr. NUSSERWANJEE was murdered in his own bungalow at night by an armed band of Chinese, it was shown at the coroner's inquest that the police who first arrived at the house were afraid to enter the compound; and although the noise of the attack was distinctly heard at the Governor's house, none of the police who were on duty in the streets adjacent to the attacked house came to the rescue, showing very clearly that they were hiding. Again, when Mr. SMITH'S bungalow was attacked, at midnight, by a similar band of marauders, it was proved upon the trial that the attacking party first drove the armed native constable away, simply by throwing stones at him! So much for the reliance to be placed upon the local police force as far as personal courage is concerned. As for the discipline and efficiency of the corps, we are informed that upon the last named trial several of the native constables accounted for their not having shot any of the thieves by stating that their carbines would not go off, and this arose from the charge having been in the piece for three or four months without having been drawn. Hereupon the whole force was mustered and the men ordered to discharge their carbines, when at least thirty per cent. of them missed fire. It was also a notable circumstance that many of the men were evidently afraid to pull the trigger, whether from innate cowardice, or from a conviction that the barrel might burst through the rust it contained, is an open question. These are suggestive facts, and they are supplemented by others given by our correspondent "Chancery-lane," whose letter will be found in another column. The lamentable inefficiency of the force as a means of combating the disastrous fires that so frequently occur, is clearly shown, as well as the want of judgment exhibited in the choice of a superintendent.

That the influence of the Hong Kong Association, if wisely and discreetly used, is calculated to be greatly beneficial to the colony there can be no doubt; but its members must avoid taking untenable ground. In dealing with the question we have here referred to the true subjects for consideration are, the strength and composition of the force required, and the question of liability for its support—a liability which the colonists have undoubtedly good reason to repudiate. The island, itself an unproductive rock, serves as a centre and rallying point for a vast trade which brings an uninterrupted stream of wealth into the national coffers. The China trade, and the interests of British subjects in China generally, therefore demand adequate protection, and a military establishment in Hong Kong is necessary as the nucleus of whatever forces are requisite, from time to time, for this purpose. But because Hong Kong is chosen for this, as the only spot in China waters that is actually British property, that is no reason why Hong Kong alone should be called upon to maintain troops that are liable at any time to be called away to protect British interests at Canton, or any other place at which they may be threatened. Still, it is going a little too far to assert that the presence of a garrison is an unmixed evil. The memorialists would have done better had they asked that the contribution should be suspended until the Mint question be solved and the colonial resources placed on a better footing; or else, that it be forthwith reduced to a much smaller sum.

With regard to another subject adverted to in the memorial, namely, the Praya question, we understand that for the purpose of aiming at a settlement it is the intention of the Hong Kong Government to institute legal proceedings against Messrs. JARDINE, MATHESON and Co., and to accept the decision in this suit, when obtained, as a precedent for the other cases involved. On the other hand, Messrs. JARDINE, MATHESON and Co., if the verdict prove an adverse one, will appeal against it on behalf of all the holders of Praya lots, who will contribute to a fund for the necessary expenses.

A NEW OVERLAND ROUTE.

A PROJECT is now on foot—not so much a new one, as an old one revived—which has for its object a work that will, if carried into execution, effect an extraordinary change in our system of overland communication with India. This is no less than the rehabilitation of the ancient port of Berenice, and its substitution for that of Suez. In whatever light we view it, whether political, geographical, or commercial, the scheme is an important one, and well worthy of careful consideration, even though its completion may be deferred for some years. In the first place, it is necessary to describe the port, of which many of our readers perhaps hear for the first time. Berenice is situated on the western side of the Red Sea, in the southern part of the vast desert of Thebaid, as the ancients termed it, or Said, as it is now called. It is in latitude 23.56 N., that is, about 6 degrees, or 360 geographical miles south of Suez. The ruins of the ancient city are still traceable at the head of a deep bay, formed by the promontory of Ras Benass, and close to a small lagune, now choked with sand, but which has evidently formed a sort of inner harbour. The city was built, or restored (for its extreme antiquity renders this point doubtful), by PTOLEMY PHILADELPHUS, somewhere about 250 B.C. During the period of the Ptolemies it became, and long afterwards continued to be, an important seat of Indian trade; its position, so much lower down the Red Sea than Suez, and its greatly superior anchorage, giving it a manifest superiority over that port. Indian merchandise arriving here was conveyed across the desert by caravan to Koptos (a city not actually on the Nile, but communicating with it by a canal some three miles in length), and thence up the Nile to Alexandria. The distance between Berenice and Koptos is about 260 miles, and was performed by the camels in 12 days. It is this, the earliest known "Overland route to India," that the present Viceroy of Egypt proposes to bring once more into operation, by reviving the ancient glory of Berenice, and connecting it by a direct line of railway with Cairo.

The undertaking is one of great magnitude, but must not therefore be regarded as chimerical. The vast sums of money, and the marvels of ingenuity and labour that have already been expended on the Suez Canal would more than suffice for its completion. Moreover the VICEROY has very cogent reasons for pushing it forward, as we shall presently show; and work once commenced, and prosecuted by fellahs under the iron hand of an Egyptian taskmaster, has seldom failed of completion, from the foundation of the Pyramids down to the present time. It has always been the ambition of the Viceroys to acquire territory on the Upper Nile, and on the coast beyond the boundary of Egypt proper, as they conceived that the possession of such would carry with it a distinct title of sovereignty, to which their position as feudatories of the SULTAN gave them no claim, Egypt being so distinctly a fief of Turkey; and of this ambition the Porte has long been aware, and has manifested no little jealousy. As one precaution against such encroachment the two ports on the coast held by the SULTAN (Suakin and Massowa') are, by a sort of fiction, held to constitute a Turkish province called Habesh (Abyssinia), although they are situated far apart, and the country between and around them is peopled by wild tribes, over whom the SULTAN exercises no sort of control. These, together with Jeddah, Nejed, and Yenbo', three ports on the opposite (or Arabian) shore, are included in the separate Viceroyalty of Habesh and the Hedjaz; and this semblance of rule would enable the SULTAN to meet any claim to sovereignty on the part of the VICEROY, with the plea that such acquisitions were merely appendages to the fief. The present VICEROY, however, seems inclined to run the risk, and it is in pursuance of his proposed conquest of Habesh that he intends to turn Berenice to account. A line of railway to the extreme south of his own province would give such facilities for pouring troops into the coveted territory as would ensure its easy subjugation. The attitude of the Egyptian Government in relation to our own Abyssinian expedition, and its manifest eagerness to improve the occasion by sending a force against King THEODORE, afford ample proof that we do not malign the VICEROY in imputing these desires to him. So much, then, for the political motives involved.

As a financial undertaking, too, the project has its attractions. The VICEROY, it is well known, is the principal shareholder in the omnivorous scheme of M. LESSEPS, and in the sandy bed of the Suez Canal he has sunk nearly all the wealth that should have formed a provision for his successor. More than this, indeed; for of late he has had to resort to the most oppressive measures to wring further contributions from his toiling subjects. However magnificent the works accomplished, and magnificent they are, undeniably, we cannot suppose that His HIGHNESS cherishes the slightest hope of receiving a respectable dividend on his canal investment; but the Berenice project offers a fair chance of retrieving this loss. There is no reason why it should not pay as well as the existing line between Alexandria and Suez. Once constructed, the mails, and indeed all the overland traffic to and from India, would necessarily be conveyed by it, and this alone would give an enormous revenue, the whole of which would belong to the VICEROY's Civil List. We should gladly accept the safe and commodious harbour of Berenice in place of the miserably inconvenient accommodation we have now to put up with at Suez. The change would do away with quite one-third of the Red Sea passage (the worst part of it, too), and a considerable saving of time would be effected. For these reasons the scheme is sure to receive the support of our own Government; but as it tends to give the land route an advantage over the Suez Canal, it has hitherto been opposed by the French. The VICEROY, however, appears able and willing to act independently in the matter.

As regards the practicability of the scheme we may safely assert that it presents no greater physical difficulties than have been surmounted in the construction of the existing Egyptian lines. It is believed—perhaps we shall be more strictly correct if we say it is hoped—that coal will be found in the vicinity of Berenice. A preliminary expedition is now preparing to visit the place, to inquire into this and other points of interest regarding it; the party consists of three gentlemen of undoubted scientific attainments, namely, Mr. BAUERMAN, who has recently published a practical work of great value on iron-smelting; Mr. LORD, a naturalist, and Mr. LE NEVE FOSTER, C.E., at present in the employ of the VICEROY. Until the report of these gentlemen is received it would of course be premature to speak with certainty as to the accomplishment of the plan; but of its feasibility, and the advantages to be derived from it, we ourselves entertain very little doubt.

THE following notice, issued by the Board of Trade, has appeared in the Gazette:—"The Right Honourable the Lords of the "Committee of Privy Council for Trade have received, through the "SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS, a despatch from "Her MAJESTY'S Minister in Japan, reporting that the foreign "representatives in that country have given their assent to an "arrangement with the Government of the SHIOGOON, by which "the opening to foreign trade of the city of Yedo and the port of "Neegata is deferred till the 1st of April next, instead of taking "place on the 1st of January last, on which date the five years' "postponement allowed by the London agreement of June, "1862, expired."

THE meeting of landowners in Hong Kong and others interested in that colony, of which we have already spoken, will take place on Monday, the 2nd of March, at 2 P.M., Mr. James White, M.P. will take the chair.

THE MAILS.

THE P. and O. Company have now published revised time-tables, showing the movements of their vessels under the new contract, and the POSTMASTER-GENERAL has issued an official notification based on them; we may therefore regard the present arrangement as final. According to this, the outward China mails during the year 1868 will be made up in London on the evening of the following Fridays:—

March ...	... 6 and 27	August ...	14 and 28
April ...	... 10 and 24	September ...	11 and 25
May ...	... 8 and 22	October ...	9 and 23
June ...	... 5 and 19	November ...	6 and 20
July ...	3, 17 and 31	December ...	4 and 18

The first departure for 1869 will be on the 1st January. The homeward mails leave Hong Kong as under, and are calculated to be delivered in London on the Monday mornings affixed:—

No alteration, we understand, will be made in the time-tables of the Messageries Imperiales, until it is settled whether the service is to be changed into a fortnightly one, or not; a point that is still under discussion. Doubts having been expressed in some quarters as to whether the P. and O. Company will always have a steamer in readiness at Alexandria, to bring the mails on, we are able to confirm our previous statement that such will be the case. The Post-office notification above referred to is as follows:—

The following notice has been issued by command of the Postmaster-General relative to the alteration in days for despatching the mails to India, China, and Australia:—A new contract having been concluded with the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, the following alterations will be made in the arrangements for despatching mails to India, China, and Australia after the departure of the mails of the 20th and 26th of February. The mails for the East Indies will be forwarded wholly to Bombay, and will be made up in London on the morning of every Saturday, commencing with Saturday, 29th February, for transmission via Southampton, and on the evening of every Friday, commencing with Friday, the 6th of March, for transmission via Marseilles. The mails for Ceylon, Singapore, Labuan, Java, the Philippine Islands, Hong Kong, China, and Japan will be made up on the morning of Saturday, the 29th of February, and the evening of Friday, the 6th of March; the next mails will be made up on the morning of Saturday, the 21st of March, and the evening of Friday, the 27th of March; and thenceforward there will be a despatch on the morning of every alternative Saturday and the evening of every alternate Friday. The packets will not call at Penang, and the correspondence for that settlement will be forwarded in the mails for Singapore. A branch packet will leave Shanghai for Yokohama, calling at Nagasaki, immediately after the arrival of each mail from England. The first mails for Australia under the new arrangement will be made up on the morning of Saturday, the 21st of March, and the evening of Friday, the 27th of March, and thenceforward on every fourth Saturday and Friday throughout the year. As the packet from Marseilles to Alexandria will not call at Malta, the correspondence for that island will be sent wholly by the weekly packet from Southampton. The homeward mails will be due in London as follows:—The first mails from India, Ceylon, China, Japan, and Australia on the morning of Monday, the 23rd of March, via Marseilles, and on the evening of Saturday, the 28th of March, via Southampton, and thenceforward; from India on the morning of every Monday, via Marseilles, and on the evening of every Saturday, via Southampton; from Ceylon and China on the morning of every alternate Monday and the evening of every alternate Saturday; and from Australia on the morning of every fourth Monday and the evening of every fourth Saturday.

MESSRS BLACKWOOD AND SONS announce as "in the press" a work entitled "The Ever-Victorious Army," being a history of Colonel Gordon's Chinese Campaign, and of the suppression of the Taiping rebellion. It is written, or edited, by Mr. Andrew Wilson, F.A.S.L., formerly editor of the China Mail.

THE appointment of JOHN GARDINER AUSTIN, Esq., to be Colonial Secretary for the Colony of Hong Kong (announced in our issue of January 27), was gazetted on the 18th inst. Mr. AUSTIN leaves for Hong Kong by the mail of March 27.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA AND CHINA.

A PAMPHLET bearing the above title, written by Mr. FRANCIS GISBORNE, has recently been published with the view apparently of introducing to public notice the INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY. This it seems is the name of the Company by which the concessions granted to Messrs. SIEMENS BROTHERS for a direct line of telegraph to India via Prussia, Russia, and Persia, is to be worked. A considerable portion of Mr. GISBORNE'S pamphlet is taken up with an exposure of the manifold shortcomings of the existing line—a work of supererogation, we should imagine, after all that has been written on the subject in these columns and elsewhere. A good deal of space is also devoted to a detailed account of the terms on which the concessions have been granted by the various Governments; but most of this information was given in our issue of the 10th September last. It appears that the works through Russia and Persia are promised to be completed within twelve months from the commencement of operations, at a cost of not more than £400,000; the Prussian Government also undertakes to complete its portion within the same period, but at what outlay is not stated. The line will be under the management of the English company throughout, who will pay out of its earnings the following "royalties" on each Indian message of twenty words: 2½ francs to the Prussian Government, 5 francs to the Russian Government, 2 francs to Persia, and for use of wires in Reuter's cable, 4½ francs—total 14 francs. At present it is proposed to charge £3 10s. for each 20-word message. The Prussian and Russian Governments are in perfect accord as regards the proposed line, and have invited the co-operation of Her MAJESTY'S Government, which has been promised. The Persian lines are already, by virtue of a special convention, under the management of the Indian Government. A map attached to the pamphlet shows the chief stations between London and Teheran (where it joins the existing Indian lines) to be—Hamburg, Berlin, Thorn, Warsaw, Odessa, Kerch, Poti, and Tiflis. So far, there does not appear to be a single drawback to the accomplishment of the work, so soon as the required capital is subscribed; but, as we have before suggested—supposing an European War should break out?

THE subject of telegraphic communication with India has been again before the House of Commons. Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE admits that it is at present in a most unsatisfactory state, and that good a Red Sea line is still a desideratum; at the same time he calls attention to the improvement likely to result from the Indo-European line to be constructed by Messrs. SIEMENS. Mr. GISBORNE, commenting on this admission, says (in a letter to The Times):—

I believe that the timidity, contradiction, and confusion which have hitherto prevailed in the councils of Government with reference to telegraphic matters are due to the absence of a Minister of Public Works. Every telegraphic project that is brought under the notice of Government runs the gauntlet of several departments, each which has something to say against it, especially the Treasury, if any financial assistance is asked for, and there exists no department or Minister to whom any appeal can be made to decide upon all these various difficulties. One would suppose that the Prime Minister of the day is responsible for the national interest, but he does not appear to think so, and invariably leaves the matter to be decided by the department which is supposed to have the greatest interest in it.

As Sir Stafford Northcote has informed the House of Commons, Prussia, Russia, and Persia have lately determined to establish a new line in opposition to that through Austria and Turkey, for the purpose of securing through their territories the transit of telegraphic communication between England and India. They have had the wisdom to break through the policy which has hitherto governed them in telegraphic matters, and have agreed to allow this new line to be worked by a company, thus securing to it advantages which the other line has not got—namely, unity of administration and the appointment of English electricians at the stations. While other countries are doing so much for telegraphic communication with India, with which they have but little interest, our Government is doing nothing in any direction. Now that land lines have been established to India it will be difficult for private enterprise to carry out the Red Sea and India line on account of the cost, which will be about fourfold, mile for mile, as compared to the cost of the competing land lines.

As regards other schemes, the ANGLO-INDIAN Company, we are told, "remains in abeyance, awaiting a favour-"able opportunity for proceeding with its undertaking." The INDIA, CHINA, AND COLONIAL Company, started last year to construct a complete line of submarine cable from Falmouth, via Gibraltar and Egypt, has sunk out of sight altogether. In our last issue we noticed a new plan for a line to China and Japan, via Russia and the Amoor Valley, but this does not seem to rest on any reliable foundation. In the meantime the Galle line is now working better than it has done for many months, as far as rapidity is concerned, though messages are still carelessly handled, and we have seen many that are quite unintelligible. GRANT'S Kiachta line reopened for the season on the 18th, and arrangements have been made to ensure greatly increased efficiency.

JAPAN.

IN startling contrast to a late telegram from Japan, which announced that the new ports had been peaceably opened on the 1st of January, is a message received via San Francisco, New York, and Atlantic Cable, to this effect:—"Intelligence re-"ceived here (New York) from Japan, dated the 27th ult., an-"nounces that the Daimios have revolted, and made the MIKADO "prisoner. The SHIOGOON had fled to Osaka, where he was or-"ganising a force to attack the Daimios. The town of Hiogo and "two palaces at Jeddo had been burnt. The Foreign Ministers re-"fused to interfere." This is an enigma, though just sufficiently intelligible to be recognised as the embodiment of some very bad news. Which of the Daimios have revolted? Not all, for in that case the SHIOGOON would hardly attempt to "organise a force" to attack them. Besides, we thought there was no SHIOGOON—had not STOTSBASHI resigned? Was the statement false after all, or has he repented and sought again to resume his position, thus provoking the hostility of certain of the Daimios? Or, again, have these princes, still jealous of his power, and not content with his dethronement, conspired to procure his entire destruction? The town of Hiogo and two palaces at Yedo have been burnt—accidentally, or purposely? If the latter, by whom, and with what object? The Foreign Ministers have refused to interfere—who asked them? Never was telegram more perplexingly obscure, more utterly worthless as a vehicle of information. The publication of such news as this serves no purpose whatever, its only effect being to create uneasiness and apprehension; a fact which we respectfully commend to the attention of Mr. REUTER'S New York agent.

MR. BURLINGHAME AND THE U.S. MISSION TO CHINA.

FROM the United States we hear that the President has nominated Mr. ROSS BROWN to succeed Mr. BURLINGHAME as Minister at Peking; but the nomination is not yet confirmed by the Senate. The representatives from California strongly urged the appointment of a native of that State, owing to its ntimate connection and large trade with China. A writer in a New York paper exhibits in a new light the ambiguous position in which Mr. BURLINGHAME has placed himself, by pointing out the illegal nature of his appointment according to the United States Constitution, which says (Art. 1., sec. 9), "No "title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no "person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, "without the consent of Congress, accept of any present, emolu-"ment, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, "prince, or foreign State." This indicates that Mr. BURLINGHAME must either have committed a flagrant violation of the laws of his own country, or have accepted office in the service of the Chinese Government conditionally on the approval of the President and Congress. The latter will probably prove to be the case; and as the selection made by Prince KUNG is considered in America to involve a high compliment to the United States, there will probably be no difficulty in getting a resolution passed, authorising Mr. BURLINGHAME to accept the office—and its emoluments. A New York correspondent, writing on the subject of the China Mission, says:—"The Senate will not "speedily confirm the nomination of J. ROSS BROWNE as "Minister to China. There is a mystery about Mr. BURLING-"HAME'S movements, concerning which the Senate desires an "explanation. Moreover, Mr. BROWNE is a man of no charac-"ter; he was probably set up by the PRESIDENT only to be "knocked down."

"ANTI-HUMBUG," in his letter on the Straits Settlements Budget, exposes some very weak points therein. For instance, the allowance of $6,000 as "travelling allowances for the Governor and Officers" is quite incomprehensible, when all the travelling they have to do—the occasional transit from one port to another—is done in a Government steamer. And this $6,000 too is within about $800 of the whole sum devoted to educational purposes! Here is something for the "Straits Settlements Association" to inquire into.

THE SWISS CONSULATE-GENERAL IN JAPAN.

A PARAGRAPH in the letter of our Hamburg correspondent which appeared in our issue of the 26th of August last contained an erroneous statement regarding Mr. BRENNWALD, the Swiss Consul-General in Japan, which we are glad to have an opportunity of correcting. The paragraph in question, after adverting to the recent dispute at Yokohama regarding the ownership of a plot of land granted to the Swiss Consulate there, mentioned a report that the Swiss Government was displeased with Mr. BRENNWALD's conduct in the affair, that he had been recalled, and that Mr. SIBER would succeed him. We find, however, that our correspondent was entirely misinformed. Instead of incurring the displeasure of his Government, all Mr. BRENNWALD'S acts have met with unqualified approval; and Mr. SIBER has simply acted as his locum tenens during his absence in Europe for business purposes. The following is translated from an official communication to the Swiss Bund:—"The "Federal Council is convinced that the conduct of Consul-"General BRENNWALD has been in all respects blameless, and "therefore it could not possibly discredit the steps taken by him "in the matter; and this it has declared in several diplomatic "notes to the Prussian Government, whose intervention was called "in by DR. LINDAU (a Prussian subject). It is thus evident that the "Federal Council could have had no idea of recalling Mr. BRENN-"WALD, who is certainly in Europe at present, but upon leave of "absence granted to him at his own desire. During his absence "a substitute is necessary, and that this substitute is Mr. SIBER, "his friend and partner, proves sufficiently that the above "mentioned report is incorrect."

POSTAL CHANGES—INDIA, CHINA, AND JAPAN.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL has issued a notification to the effect that from the 1st of April next book packets and pattern parcels may be sent by post from any port in China or Japan to any other port in either of those countries, at the rate of 3d. for every four ounces; such packets not to exceed two feet in length, width, or depth. It is also announced that concurrently with the establishment of the weekly mail service to India, the postage on letters between this country and the East Indies (including Aden) and Ceylon, will be raised to ninepence her half-ounce when forwarded via Southampton, and thirteen-pence per half-ounce when sent via Marseilles, either by British or by French packet. This increased charge will take effect on the 1st March. Simultaneously with the increase of postage, the scale of progression for charging letters to and from the East Indies and Ceylon will be modified, by substituting for the existing scale a scale of weight having half an ounce as a unit throughout with the postage advancing by single rates as follows, viz.:—via Southampton, not exceeding ½ oz., 9d.; above ½ oz. and not exceeding 1 oz, 1s. 6d.; above 1 oz. and not exceeding 1½ oz., 2s. 3d.; above 1½ oz. and not exceeding 2 oz., 3s.; for every additional ½ oz., 9d.—via Marseilles (by British or French packet), not exceeding ½ oz., 1s. 1d.; above ½ oz. and not exceeding 1 oz., 2s. 2d.; above 1 oz. and not exceeding 1½ oz., 3s. 3d.; above 1½ oz. and not exceeding 2 oz., 4s. 4d.; for every additional ½ oz., 1s. 1d. This increase of postage will not affect the letters of officers of the army and navy serving in India and Ceylon; such letters will continue to enjoy the privilege of transmission at the reduced postage of sixpence the half ounce via Southampton, and tenpence the half ounce via Marseilles.

THE case of Mr. LANGDON DAVIES (late of the Hong Kong Mint) will be brought before the House of Commons, Mr. VANDERBYL having given notice to move for copies of correspondence relative to his resignation. We presume that in the present disorganised state of the Mint no successor to Mr. DAVIES will be appointed.

M. OUTREY, Consul-General of France in Egypt, has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary in Japan, in room of M. LEON ROCHES, elevated to the rank of Minister, and placed en disponibilité. M. POUJADE, Consul-General of France at Turin, proceeds to Egypt in place of the first-named diplomatist.

THE steamers between Brindisi and Alexandria will in future start every Monday, and meet the P. and O. Company's steamers at the latter port. Homeward they will leave Alexandria, as before, a few hours after the arrival of the passengers and mails from India, China, &c.

WE understand that Sir HERCULES ROBINSON, the present Governor of Ceylon, and late Governor of Hong Kong, is expected in England on leave by an early mail.

THE CEYLON RAILWAY.

THE intelligence received by the last mail respecting the progress of the Ceylon Railway is highly satisfactory. We are told that the traffic receipts from September to December last year amounted to nearly £60,000, and that the estimated annual total would be £180,000, a sum largely in excess of former anticipations, and we must not lose sight of the fact that, for some time the traffic was interrupted, owing to the damage caused by an accident. Some slight shortcomings appear still to exist in the general management of the line, but there is no question that a genuine success has been achieved. The further extension of the line to Grampola will next occupy the attention of the Government. The permission of the SECRETARY of STATE is now the one thing required to enable the Government forthwith to commence operations. We may safely accept these facts as evidences that the introduction of a railway has been hailed as a boon by the colonists, and now that commerical affairs have recovered from the stagnation formerly so disastrously prevalent, it may be confidently predicted that the more rapid and certain transmission of produce from the interior will give an impetus to agricultural affairs productive of the most favourable results. We regret, however, to perceive that the Government persists in its intention to place the construction of the line under the control of the Board of Works. In a former article we strongly deprecated this course, and urged the necessity and prudence of taking a contract for the work in the customary manner. Amateur management has been proved by the expose in reference to the affairs of the Brighton Railway here in England to be bad enough, but the results of an attempt at amateur construction have to be shown. We trust that the Ceylon Government will yet reconsider its determination and refrain from saddling the already overburdened colony by attempting the construction of works, the ultimate cost of which it is utterly impossible to estimate.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS BUDGET.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—In the London and China Telegraph I see in the Straits Settlement budget the salary of the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Singapore put down at $11,400, whilst that of the Chief Justice is $12,918. This is surely a mistake, for what comparison does the one office bear to the other? The very idea is absurd—to give the Registrar of the Court in Singapore a greater salary than Sir D. Le Marchant, Bart., the clerk of the House of Commons, receives.

If, however, it be actually so, and "no mistake," then I am prepared to lay long odds that the name of the next incumbent will commence with an O.

Can you explain how the $6,000 "travelling allowances for the governor and officers of departments" is made up? Under another head we have the cost of the maintenance of Government steamers, which must include their trips to Penang with the Governor or the acting chief justice; so how are the $6,000 actually expended? The voyage to or from Penang is only a matter of some hours, therefore the table expenses of the "officers of departments" upon the voyage cannot be very great. Hotel charges in Penang and Singapore are moderate too, so it cannot go in that way. Can it be possible that the Governor charges the colony so much per mile for driving round the Esplanade every evening? If this $6,000 goes in chow chow and "pegs" the heads of departments must have capacious stomachs, as well as comprehensive minds.

Are these heads and stomachs too fragile to trust themselves as ordinary passengers in the P. and O. mail steamer? It might be infra dig. for the Governor to travel with a mail steamer, but the head of a department might perhaps do so without losing caste; if their business be urgent they had much better, in fact, take any steamer rather than a Government one. It appears to me, Mr. Editor, that this $6,000 travelling allowances is a rank job. $6,000 for travelling "extras" and $6,819 for education in Singapore! and then to add insult to injury comes "exclusive of petty charges for gharry hire."

Another wonderful item in this budget is this one, "$141 for wine for the Holy Communion and washing surplices." I presume this is for St. Andrew's Church. Now a surplice may, for washing purposes, be fairly compared to a shirt, and a hundred shirts cost to wash in Singapore $3. Therefore allowing the clergyman and the clerk 100 surplices per annum (the choir and the punkah wallahs don't wear any), there then remains $138, or $11.50 per month for the communion wine, representing at a fair price half a dozen bottles. Leaving it for those more nearly concerned to determine whether this is the actual quantity consumed, or, if not, how much each communicant costs the colony, I shall confine myself to asking why the public at large should be taxed to provide the congregation, which is the smallest in point of numbers, and the richest in point of wealth, in Singapore, with the necessary elements for their most sacred religious rite?

It is regretable that Singapore does not possess in its Legislative Assembly some member who has the courage to prefer the public welfare to the blandishments of the Governor, and it seems to be highly desirable that a Singapore Association be formed in order to put a check on the unlimited extravagance which seems to obtain in Singapore, in respect to the doings of the Governor and his heads of departments.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

HONG KONG FIRES.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—In reference to the late disastrous conflagration in Hong Kong, I think that the proper remedy for the prevention of these oft-recurring calamities would be the appointment of an experienced and energetic Superintendent of Police. Although Sir R. G. MacDonnell has shown himself very able in dismissing his incompetent and corrupt subordinates, he has been singularly unfortunate in his appointments; and this is well illustrated by his appointment to the onerous position of Captain Superintendent of Police of a young gentleman scarcely out of his teens. I do not for a moment mean to imply that the present incumbent of the superintendency is not a deserving public servant, so far as his years and experience go, but as we have now had two enormous conflagrations during his term of office, it is quite clear that he is deficient in his mode of combating this ever-impending danger.

On the "resignation" of Superintendent Quin, it was generally acknowledged that the most suitable man to fill the vacant position was the Governor of Victoria Gaol, Mr. Douglas, who, to great personal energy unites an intimate knowledge of the native character—at least that portion of it that it is imperative for a chief constable to know, and, in addition, possessed experience (gained at home) as a fireman. To the surprise, however, of everyone, Governor MacDonnell appointed to the superintendency a young gentleman who had just emerged from his civil service cadetship. If Sir Richard were asked why he made such a hazardous appointment, he would probably reply that these cadets were sent out by the Home Government in order to fill public offices, and that, consequently, he was bound to either put them to work or let the colony keep them going about idle; but I submit that it would be much more profitable to even pay them to abstain from active employment than to suffer thus for their inexperience and incompetency. Whilst the system of recruiting the Civil Service of the colony by cadets sent out from home has undoubtedly certain advantages, it possesses this great disadvantage—that all talent not contained in this corps is of necessity lost to the public service of the colony. Besides it gives an undue power to the Governor; for if all his subordinates are to be cadets, the whims and caprice of their chief are likely to weigh more with the young aspirants than the material interests of the colony. This system might be compared to a fleet officered by one admiral and a number of passed midshipmen.

It is certainly wonderful that Sir H. Robinson and Mr. Mercer, who expended so much public money on the gaol on Stonecutters Island and the Mint, should not have invested a few thousand dollars in the purchase of some steam fire-engines. However, to look to the future; if Sir Richard will pass a building ordinance, compelling the Chinese to build a fire wall between each hong, purchase a fair number of steam fire-engines, and appoint a superintendent of police that knows how to work a fire brigade, we should not see a recurrence of these conflagrations. Let the insurance companies see to it.—Your obedient servant, CHANCERY LANE.

London, Feb. 17, 1868.

(ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.)

The intricate and vexed question of military expenditure in Ceylon is at length settled. The transfer has been duly made from the colony to the Imperial Government, the colony paying a fixed contribution of £160 000 per annum. According to the despatches now before us, the fight between the different authorities has been a sharp one. The Duke of Buckingham, representing Her Majesty's Government, "concurs with the Commander of the Forces, Major-General Hodgson, that the European troops cannot be reduced to the extent recommended by the late commission," but the Colonial Government vehemently opposes the Secretary of State for the Colonies, who takes leave of the subject in a peculiarly curt and laconic despatch to the Governor. The principal combatants, however, have been Sir Hercules Robinson, the Governor of Ceylon, and Major-General Hodgson, the Commander of the Forces—the Governor contending for the pure local interests, the General for Imperial and military. The report of the Major-General addressed direct to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, is a very important document. It fills the greater part of the volume containing the despatches, and leaves no military point connected with Ceylon untouched. It has been printed and published in Ceylon, where it has created a profound sensation; and we understand that General Hodgson complains bitterly that a despatch, written with the utmost unreserve by a general officer to the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, should have been circulated among the community on whom he had commented severely. The consequence has been that he is held up as an enemy to Ceylon, and efforts are making to array the community against him. He is accused of having used all the ingenuity of "an Old Bailey practitioner to carry out military views, and to blind the authorities at home as to the character of the population, European and native." The Ceylon Times, in an article entitled "Major-General Hodgson Dissected," and written in a tone of ferocity and scurrility which, for the honour of our craft, we had hoped was exploded even in colonial society, speaks of the "singular and mysterious secrecy which surrounded the Major-General's despatch for eighteen months, and that it was only after eighteen months' iterated requests that the Government of Ceylon was able to obtain it, and be placed in a position to fight the battle of the colony against Pall Mall and Downing-street, and prevent the evil machinations of the General from telling severely on the colony." The Ceylon Observer, while admitting, that the General has proved himself "utterly indifferent to the offence he might give to Governor, civil officers, planters, merchants, or every editor in the place," declares that the officers "ought to feel indebted to their chief for the strong case he has made out for them, for the Army, and the soldiers in Ceylon generally." We hope soon to review General Hodgson's report in extenso, and show how military affairs are conducted and thwarted by civil agency in the important colony of Ceylon.

THE PROSPECTS OF REBELLION IN CHINA.

(PALL MALL GAZETTE.)

One source of pleasure connected with the study of Chinese matters is that it is not necessary to be in any hurry in forming a conclusion about them. Most other nations change so rapidly at present, or rather perhaps are supposed to change so rapidly (for there is a good deal of delusion extant on that subject), that it is necessary when writing about them to make a pretext of descanting on the last telegram, but as yet no such necessity exists in regard to China. That immobile country advances so slowly that it is of much more importance to understand the direction which it is taking than to dwell on the individual facts which may be conveyed by each mail. Indeed, any one who attached importance to the telegrams which come from China must have believed that the Imperial Government had been ruined and resuscitated several hundred times during the last few years; and even during the last six months the notices which have appeared of the Nienfei rebels must have been rather puzzling to those who judge of the Celestial Empire by the analogy of European nations. As the time is now close at hand when the Treaty of Tientsin will have to be revised, and when China consequently will be a little more interesting to us than it has been of late, it may not be amiss to point out the actual facts of its present position.

After Prince Kung's coup d'etat of 1861, and their unreserved acceptance of their new relationship with foreign nations, the Celestials entered upon a new and improved phase in their national history. This was further improved by the assistance which Sir Frederick Bruce, Admiral Hope, Captain Roderick Dew, R.N., Colonel Gordon, and other foreigners rendered in suppressing the Taiping rebellion. With the fall of Nanking in July, 1864, that rebellion was virtually ended, but there are still persons who suppose it to be yet in existence. For the benefit of these we may recall the facts relating to its last dying struggles. When Nanking was taken, Hung Sew-tsuen, the Taiping monarch, was found dead, having committed suicide; the Faithful King, the Shield King, and his other principal chiefs were executed by the Imperialists; the provinces of Kiangsoo and Chekiang were entirely restored to Imperialist rule; and at that time the Taipings had no footing elsewhere in China. Only a remnant of them who escaped from Nanking and other places went down through the sterile mountains which border on Chekiang, Kiangsi, and Fuhkien, under the leadership of two insignificant chiefs, the Kang Wang and the assistant king. Out of these mountains they emerged in 1865 and took the city of Changchow, near Amoy, in Fuhkien. A few foreigners, who had served either with or against them, joined them at this time, and Le, the attendant king, put forth a ridiculous proclamation, calling on foreign nations to join with him in partitioning China. But the Imperial Government brought down a few thousand troops who had been disciplined to the use of foreign arms at the Fung-yung Shan camp of instruction, which had been organised by Colonel Gordon before he left China, and quickly drove the Tai-pings back into the uninhabited mountains between the provinces of Quangtung, Fukian, and Kiangsi, where they probably perished miserably. At all events they have never been heard of since then, and China has been free from the curse which they brought.

The rebels of which we have heard since then have been the Nienfei, or marauders of the Yellow River. From the earliest historical times that stream has given a great deal of trouble, because a considerable portion of its bed being above the level of the surrounding country constant labour must be expended on its embankments, in order to prevent it from overflooding immense tracts of land. The troubles of the last 25 years in China have interfered with the proper embankment of the Yellow River, and the consequence is that large numbers of the people in the provinces which border upon it have been thrown into a state of destitution and so have formed themselves into bands of robbers who go about looting their more fortunate neighbours. These Nienfei, as they are called, have no political purpose in view, and no union among themselves, beyond what their common interests may dictate, but they have given a good deal of trouble in China during the last eight years, and the Imperial Government has never dealt with them in a sufficiently energetic manner. No means, so far as we are aware, have been employed to relieve the necessity from which they suffer, and they have been allowed to go on robbing until they collected into bands of a formidable size. But whenever they have gathered to a certain extent the Government has moved against them, and dispersed them by force. Hence the puzzling nature of the information which comes from China regarding these rebels. According to one mail they have gathered head and become formidable; according to the next, they have been defeated and dispersed. The last intelligence which we have represents them as having been almost put down, but in the next they may be represented as threatening Peking. The truth is that they are not politically of the slightest importance, but it is a matter of regret that the Imperial Government cannot deal with them in a more satisfactory manner. Tseng Kwo-fan, the generalissimo of the empire—a native Chinese who obtained his present high position by his success in putting down the Taiping rebellion—has abundant means at his command to restore to order all the districts in which the Nienfei appear, and his protege Li, the Governor-General of the Two Kiang, is an able military commander; but these two high mandarins are viewed with jealousy by the Tartar Court, and by a considerable portion of the bureaucracy of China. This jealousy prevents them from doing what they might do with their disciplined troops. Were they to push on matters so as to completely suppress the Nienfei, though that might be regarded as a very laudable effort in Europe, yet in China it would almost certainly appear to be a sacrilegious interference with district self-government, and a proof that they aspired to obtain supreme power.

The Mohammedan rebels in the North have given more trouble to the Chinese Government, though even they do not affect any more of the country than the provinces of Shensi and Kansuh. Some time ago we pointed out to our readers the exact state of matters between the Celestials and their Moslem subjects. Since then the only change which has taken place in the state of matters is that the territory in the north more properly Chinese has been more strictly defined from that which is Mohammedan. In Shensi, and a great part of Kansuh, the Imperial Government has obtained the upper hand, and put down the Mohammedan rebellion; at the same time it has lost its colonies in Ili, where the people are entirely Mohammedan, and where Chinese officers ruled only by invitation and sufferance. The immense mountains which separate Ili from China proper render it difficult and inexpedient for the Chinese to attempt to uphold their rule in the former district of country. If they can preserve Shensi from Mohammedan rebellion they are not likely to trouble themselves much about the wastes of Kansuh.

Thus we see that rebellion in China is at present at a very low ebb, and that the process of its subjugation has been going on steadily for several years. It being rather the weakness of the Government than any positive abuse of its power which gave rise to disorders in the country, restoration to a state of peace has necessarily been very slow. If the present vantage ground which the Government has obtained be held wisely, we may look for a restoration of China to that happy and productive state which obtained for it the title of the Great Flowery Land, and which filled the early European travellers with so much admiration; but there is a danger that the present period of repose may only produce new troubles by again fostering the growth of an inefficient and corrupt officialism.

HAMBURG, FEB. 28.

The late unfortunate case of the Hamburg emigrant ship Leibnitz, hence to New York, on board of which the cholera broke out and carried off 105 of the passengers, has made a deep impression in Germany, and is commented on with more or less acrimony by all the organs of the press. On the reopening of the German Parliament next month it will probably form the subject of Federal legislation. The chief alleged complaint against the owner of the vessel is that there was no surgeon on board, and the Berlin papers add, with more bitterness than veracity, that there were also no medicines on board; but this latter is disproved by the shipowner, who has published his defence, in which he gives a verified copy of the account paid by him to one of the first apothecaries of this city, with details of the medicines furnished by him to the above-named vessel for the voyage in question. With regard to the other part of the charge, there is no law in any continental State making it compulsory for emigrant ships to carry a surgeon; though each of the large passenger steamers belonging to the North German Lloyd at Bremen, and the Hamburg-American Steam Company of this city, is provided with a duly qualified medical man; but I may add that this is only a voluntary expense they put themselves to in their own interest, and to create greater confidence on the part of the public. It has long been a vexed question with the legislative bodies of the different German States whether or not emigrant ships should be compelled by law to carry surgeons; but as nothing has ever been decided the subject has hitherto remained unsettled, but will probably meet a speedy solution now that it is thus prominently brought into public notice. No one can deny that on the score of humanity it would be highly desirable to make it compulsory; but there are objections to be offered and difficulties in the way of a practical adjustment of the question. In the first place it would entail a considerable expense on the owners, which would compel them to raise their passage money, and thus drive the emigrants to embark in the ports of other competing countries where such compulsion does not exist. It must also not be lost sight of that with very few exceptions the German emigrant vessels are not exclusively confined to that branch of the trade, but are always open to a charter for a cargo of goods to some other distant country; and not only would it entail needless expense to have a surgeon permanently attached to each ship, but even in those few exceptional cases where vessels find regular employment in carrying out emigrants to Canada, Australia, and the United States, the cost of a surgeon would be doubled by having to feed and pay him for the return voyage when his services would not be required. Besides all this, there must alway be considerable difficulty in obtaining the number of surgeons required. Last year Bremen despatched 213 vessels with emigrants and Hamburg above 100; so that for those two ports more than 300 surgeons would be wanted. This is a large contingent even in a country where the profession is very numerously represented; and it must be conceded that it would require very tempting offers to induce a medical man worth having to give up a lucrative and steady practice at home and on dry ground in exchange for the discomforts, inconveniences, and want of room in an emigrant ship, and on an element to which he is unaccustomed, and for which, as a landsman, he may be supposed to have a decided aversion.

It has been proposed to offer a free passage to young surgeons who, having finished their studies in Germany, are desirous of emigrating, as a set-off for their taking medical charge of the ship during her voyage; but the objection to this is that the statistics of the last ten years show that the demand would be much greater than the supply, the average number during that period not being more than ten German medical emigrants annually. It is moreover urged with great show of reason that such medical men, never having previously been at sea, would be worse than useless during the voyage, and thus the object sought to be gained would be hopelessly lost.

A good many other proposals more or less plausible have been started to meet the difficulty, among which the most practical one seems to be that adopted with great success by the authorities at Bremen, and which has been in operation for some time. It is to make it obligatory on candidates for certificates of qualification as mates of vessels to pass an examination in surgery and medicine, by which the captain and chief mate of all Bremen vessels are fairly qualified in case of accidents of usual occurrence at sea, and perhaps equal to the emergency of such an exceptional case as that which has given rise to the present controversity in the German press.

But the subject appears to have caused quite as much excitement on the other side of the Atlantic as here, and at New York the Committee for the Protection of German Immigrants propose to pass a law to compel all vessels with more than 50 passengers to carry a surgeon. The most desirable thing would be to establish the principle by an international treaty between the Governments of all countries whence emigrants embark, by which the shipowners would all be placed on the same footing of equality, and would be able to raise their fares for passengers in the same proportion; though in the present state of the medical science, especially with reference to the vexed question of the origin and contagiousness of the cholera, it would still remain doubtful whether the presence of the most efficient medical man on board would have prevented, though of course it may have mitigated, the frightful ravages of the malady on board the Leibnitz.

On the 13th a meeting of shipowners and underwriters was held at the Exchange Rooms in this city, being convened by the provisional committee for the classification of ships for the purpose of forming a coalition with the Bureau Veritas, confirming the arrangement made with the latter, and the election of the local committee agreed to. In the above-mentioned arrangement it is stipulated that, with the consent and approbation of the Bureau Veritas, a central committee of Hamburg and Bremen shipowners, underwriters, and shipbuilders be formed, with full power and authority for the final settlement of all questions relating to the classifications of all German merchant vessels. The following firms were elected members of the committee:—Messrs. J. C. Godeffroy and Son, A. J. Hertz and Sons, William Oswald and Co., and A. J. Schon and Co.—all shipowners; and Mr. M. G. Amsinck and Mr. H. C. Stulcken, shipbuilders. By order of the Senate, the outlying ports and agricultural districts of the Hamburg territory, Bergedorf and Geesthaac, have been incorporated with the Zollverein. This arbitrary conduct appears to have given offence to the Burgerschaft, who in their sitting yesterday agreed to a resolution requesting the Senate to inform them by virtue of which article of the constitution they had taken such a step without the preliminary consent of the Burgerschaft. In the state of the markets there is no alteration to report. The Peru sailed yesterday for Shanghai, but by this morning's telegram from Cuxhaven had not then put to sea.

ROTTERDAM, FEB. 28.

The elections are at last brought to an end, except in Haarlem, where on Tuesday next the last election must take place. The candidates are Mr. A. S. van Nierop (Liberal) and Mr. Koorders (Ministerialist). The result of the elections at Amsterdam and Groningen was very favourable to the Liberal party, Messrs. Heemskerk Bz and Geertseema having been duly elected. The Liberals having now a majority in the Second Chamber I need not say that the position of the Cabinet is most critical. On Tuesday next the sitting will be opened in the name of his Majesty by the Ministers of the Home and Financial Departments. I think a smart debate will at once ensue, which will lead to a proposal for a vote of want of confidence. Other rumours, however, tell us that no hostile position will be taken before the definitive Budget of Foreign Affairs is brought into discussion, it being impossible for the greatest number of the members of the Second Chamber to deal with that Budget after what happened before the Chamber was dissolved. At all events the Cabinet will be struck by a vote of want of confidence; but sooner or later the King again must decide between the alternative to dissolve the Chamber for the third time or a new Cabinet. Of course the Ministerialists are quite aware of what must happen; and a fraction of this party—the Orthodox—are very busy with the organisation of a general petitioning to the King in order to urge the necessity that the Second Chamber again must be dissolved. I think it would be very hazardous to grant this demand, which is brought forward in addresses most characteristically and biblically styled.

The anniversary of H.M. the King was celebrated on the 19th inst. As usual, marks of distinction were conferred upon persons of great merit. The whole nation was thus most surprised to find amongst the number of persons the actual Minister of the Colonial Department, Mr. Hasselman, on whom the knighthood of the Order of the Netherlands Lion was conferred. Now that it is matter of public notoriety that nothing justifies this mark of distinction, the rumour is generally believed that this Minister s on the eve of tendering his resignation. The riband should be the douceur for the few months that Mr. Hasselman held the portfolio of the Colonial Department. Mr. 's Jacob is named as his successor, formerly M.P., but who was at the last election defeated at Alkmaar and Amsterdam.

The subscription lists in behalf on the Papal army are closed now. The total amount is f.184,375.22½.

Mr. A. J. Bauduin is appointed Netherlands' Consul for Hiogo and Osaka.

COFFEE.—The result of the auction of the Trading Company, which was held on the 19th, and at which 129,636 b. were offered, was that white and yellow Preanger was paid at valuation, Demerary ½c. above valuation, Tjilatjap from ½c. to 1½c., but Malang was sold at 1c. to 3c. under valuation. For good ordinary yellowish greenish 35¾ to 36¾ was paid. Since the auction the market is very inactive. The transactions only include 650 b. Java, ex Nederland, at 41½c., and 1,050 b., ex Insulinde and Tweelingen, and 600 b., ex Nicot, at prices that did not transpire.

SUGAR (RAW.)—The market was very firm last week; holders, however, were not inclined to operate without an advance, so that the transactions were but very inconsiderable. Only 800 m. Tagal, No. 13, were sold, at 31¾f. The stock of raw sugar is 31,667,100 kilo., against 30,345,121 kilo. in 1867.

RICE.—The market remains in a firm state; 2,396 b. Rangoon were sold at 8¼f., and 445 b. do., inferior quality, at 7¼f. 2,840 b. Java, ex Susanne, were sold at prices that did not transpire; the valuation of the last parcel, however, was from 10f. to 13f.

SPICES.—Dull, and without alteration in prices.

COTTON.—The market is very animated, and during the last week about 4,000 b. E. I. sorts were sold at high prices.

INDIGO.—There is still much demand for fine quality, but the stock being very unimportant only 50 ch. were sold.

VANILLA.—The 225 kilo. Bourbon offered on the 17th at auction were sold at 3¾f. to 8¼f. per half-kilo.

KAPOK.—The 514 b. imported, per Nicot, from Samarang, were sold at auction at 19 to 52c.

BANCA TIN.—The market is inanimate; there is want of buyers. The only transactions were 100 slabs at 52¾f., 1,300 at 52¼f., and 650 slabs Billiton at 51¼f. Besides these parcels were sold, to deliver from the forthcoming auction, 1,000 slabs Banca at 52¾f., and 500 do. at 53f.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Camphor: There was a very firm demand, and important transactions took place, especially for export. Cassia Vera: unaltered. Cubebs: In consequence of the low prices there is some demand. Gummi Capal: Of the 15,000 kilos offered in auction only 8,000 kilos were sold. Gummi Elasticum: The parcels ex Koerier and Tweelingen were sold at advanced prices. Rattans, with a good demand and at firm prices, were sold 8,422 b. 296 pic. ex Java, and 3,212 b. ex Aldebaran.

MONEY AND STOCK MARKET.—The markets for public stocks and shares were better in some respects, through increased purchases, but on the last days the prices were not altogether sustained. The principal speculative funds rallied somewhat, and the impression is that a further improvement will follow.

PASSENGERS INWARD.—From Java, per Pieter Adolf: Mr. Moesman and family.

Monetary and Commercial.

The rapid rise in cotton—chiefly Indian and American sorts—together with the advanced rates for Manchester goods and the steady improvement in tea and silk, has imparted a more cheerful spirit in the City. The long-continued depression and quotations showing heavy losses have given way, and one hears now of 2d. and 3d. per pound profit on Indian cotton, and on China tea that has been properly bought. It is a matter of some anxiety how far the speculation in cotton may be carried, but in the meantime importers of Indian qualities which have cost say 5½d. have but one thing to do, viz., to sell at the current rate of 8¾d. The telegraph companies between this and Bombay, as also between this and New York, have had a golden time lately, and we hear of telegrams being sent to India with orders to buy and re-sales at a profit of 1d., while buyers of shirtings here at 9s. to 9s. 6d. are closing their purchases at 11s. in preference to shipping. To talk of such transactions in place of losses is felt to be an immense relief, although prudent men of business are not unmindful of the usual result on a sudden advance in prices of any staple. There is, however, good reason for assuming that we have turned the corner, and that 1868 will at least be marked by rises as well as falls, and that the net result will be better than the past few years.

The first dividend of 6s. 8d. has been distributed to the shareholders of the Western Insurance Company, now winding up. The Western had agencies in the Straits and China.

The liquidators of the China Steam Ship and Labuan Coal Company, Sir James Elphinstone and Mr. J. B. Gibbons (of the firm of Harding, Whinney and Gibbons), have issued a circular to the shareholders, informing them that an offer of £7,500 had been received and declined, and that the Court had decided that tenders could be received for the whole estate, including the machinery, plant, and property of the company at Labuan The liquidators point out that it is still practicable for the shareholders to avail of this opportunity to form a new company, and avoid the sacrifice of the whole of their property. It is, therefore, entirely in their hands, the liquidators having done everything in their power to mitigate the consequences of the Messrs. Lairds' petition for a complete winding up. The following is from the report of Sir James Elphinstone:—

"From the financial statement that was prepared and filed in the Court of Chancery in the autumn of 1867, it appeared that the assets of the company were more than sufficient to pay every liability without a sale of the mines and plant; but as the Court of Chancery ordered a sale, it could not be put off without the assent of the creditors and shareholders.

"I think it right, therefore, to inform you personally that the inevitable result will be that the property will be sacrificed, and must be sold for whatever it will fetch, in order to finally liquidate the affairs of the company, unless some of you, who are willing to give the time and take the trouble, think it worth your while to canvass the large body of shareholders with the hope of forming some new association for buying the property, and reaping the reward of the many years' labour and the very considerable outlay on the part of those who have hitherto had confidence in these mines."

A further dividend of 2s. 6d. has been authorised by the Court to be paid to the creditors of the Commercial Bank Corporation of India and the East, the funds for which are in the hands of the liquidator. The distribution of this cannot, however, take place at present, as a section of the new shareholders are contesting their liability on certain claims, which they hold apply only to the old bank before its reconstruction. The decision of the Lords Justices must therefore be obtained.

The directors of the Agra Bank (Limited) have declared a dividend at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, free of income-tax, for the year ended 31st December, 1867, on the new capital or A shares of the bank. That portion of the bank's capital which is represented by B or "reserved" shares will not (in accordance with the articles of association) participate in the payment of dividend until after the present year.

The biddings for £200,000 in bills on India were held on the 19th at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta £186,000, and to Madras, £14,000. The minimum price was fixed as before, at 1s. 10¼d. on Calcutta and Madras. Tenders at 1s. 10⅛d. on those Presidencies will receive about 33 per cent., and all above will be allotted in full. No tenders on Bombay were invited. Telegrams have been received from India announcing a rise to 1s. 11¼d., and as buyers were very firm a further advance in rates is expected. This in turn will influence the China Exchanges.

Messrs. W. H. Smith, Barry, and Co., in the East India trade, have suspended. The liabilities are about £60,000, and the assets in England £15,000, and a balance is due by the Calcutta house to the London house of £45,000.

Mr. E. J. Leveson has retired from the firm of Remè, Leveson, and Co. The business will be carried on in future by Messrs. G. Adolph Remè and G. Hermann Remè, under the style of Remè Brothers.

Mr. Thomas Hanbury retired from the firm of Bower, Hanbury, and Co. on the 31st December last.

We understand that advices have been received by this mail announcing the settlement of the salvage claim on the Maggie Leslie, and that the vessel would leave for London.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Nyanza, from Southampton on the 20th inst., was—in gold to Alexandria, £7,000; to Galle, £500; in silver to Hong Kong, £240; to Yokohama, £200; total gold, £7,500; silver, £440.

ARTICLES OF IMPORT.

TEA.

Our market during the past fortnight has been very firm, and a considerable amount of business has been done, and which would have been larger but for the firmness of importers, who have refused offers in very many instances, hoping for better prices. In common teas there has been a further rise, whilst fine to finest Moning and Wopack kinds of Congou have been taken freely at advanced rates. Congous: Siftings have sold readily. The Moning kinds are becoming scarce, and have sold at full prices. The fresh supplies of Kaisow have also sold rather higher. Broken-leaf remains very firm at the late advance. Fair to good common have been sold to some extent at from 1s. 1½d. to 1s. 1¾d. per lb., being ½d. to 1d. per lb. higher. Fair to good flavory kinds have sold at slightly better prices. Good to fine Kaisows show no material change, the inquiry being moderate. Pak Lings remain much as before. Common to fair black-leaf kinds have been saleable at fully former prices. Fair to good medium kinds have sold at an advance of 1d. per lb. Fine to finest show a rise of fully 2d. per lb. Fair to good Oolongs still remain difficult of sale at about former prices; fine to finest have been saleable at full prices. Common to good qualities of Souchong have been taken at full prices; in the fine to finest kinds transactions continue limited. Flowery Pekoes have been sold at full prices to a limited extent. Scented Capers: The Canton kinds remain very firm at fully previous prices. Foochow kinds show no improvement. Scented Orange Pekoes: Canton kinds have been rather more saleable, and prices have ruled rather higher. The Foochow kinds remain much as last advised. In uncoloured Japans there is nothing of interest to report. Green Teas: There has been a fair business doing in these, at fully previous prices for nearly all kinds. Moyunes are in demand, and really fine qualities would sell readily. In Canton Gunpowders sales have been made of fair common at public sale at about 1s. 3d. per lb.

The sales of China tea on the 18th inst. comprised 9,462 packages, of which 6,730 packages were sold, all without reserve. There was a fair assortment of Greens out of recent arrivals, but many were sold beforehand or withdrawn. About 1,000 packages, ex Wild Deer, were sold "with all faults and without reserve," and the prices obtained indicate pretty fairly the present state of the market for fine Green teas. Fine Gunpowders realised 3s. 2½d. to 3s. 6½d. per lb.; medium, 2s. 3½d. to 2s. 9½d. per lb.; Imperial, 1s. 10½d. to 2s. 0½d. per lb.; Young Hyson, 1s. 10d. to 2s. 4d. per lb. Some common Gunpowders, ex Hyacinth, sold at 1s. 2¾d. to 1s. 4½d. per lb.

The quantity expected from China for the season is 118,000,000 to 120,000,000 lbs. The deliveries are still at about 12,000,000 per month, but there is a distinct intention to keep no more than three months' stock. The quantity afloat at present is as follows:—

The following is a specimen of the statements put forth with a view of alarming the trade into giving higher rates and buying largely:—"The latest accounts from China are unanimous in affirming that, in consequence of the lowness of prices ruling, so little of the present season's yield has been prepared for export, that the total remaining and which can be shipped between January and May is 11 to 15 million lbs., to meet our requirements of 12 to 13 millions per month, or 60 to 65 millions for the five months. The overland supplies from China to Russia are also greatly deficient; Germany and Holland have diminished shipments; and to France the direct imports are a mere bagatelle. The latter countries may be expected to follow the example of Russia, which is fast draining off our stock of common tea. Under these circumstances it is impossible to foresee to what limits stocks may be reduced before the new crop arrives. The trade are making many unsuccessful attempts to depress prices and get into stock, failing in which, although compelled to acknowledge a rise, they quote and offer in small quantities common Congou at 1s. 2d., but attempts to purchase any but the most inferior parcels at that price are mostly ineffectual."

The following from a contemporary gives a correct view of the duty, &c.:—The feeling that an increased duty will be placed upon tea when the next budget is brought forward is growing strong. It is impossible at so early a date to conjecture with any degree of safety, but we are inclined to think that Mr. Disraeli would prefer some better means of meeting the expenses of the Abyssinian war than by arresting the progress of such an important branch of commerce. Besides, we believe that the policy of recent Governments has been to remove as much as possible the burdens of taxation from articles of universal consumption. Left in its present condition, without any legislative check, the tea trade must no doubt develop itself to a greater limit than has ever been experienced."

SILK.—The improvement noticed in our last has continued. In China silk some large forced sales from second hands at tempting prices first attracted the attention of Continental buyers, and led to a general demand, which most importers were willing to meet. Japan silk has been eagerly bought both from first and second hands at improved quotations, especially for the better qualities. The deliveries indicate some increase in the consumption of Asiatic silk, but scarcely justify the large business of the past fortnight, which, as is usually the case in such "spurts," has been mostly of a speculative nature. Deliveries from 1st to 24th inclusive: China, 2,690 bales; Japan, 476; total, 3,166. Good No. 4 Tsatlees have fetched 22s. 6d.; Red Peacock, 23s. 6d.; Maibash No. 2 to 4 has fetched 29s. to 32s. The public sales of 5,940 bales India, China, and Japan sorts were held on 19th and 20th. The attendance has been hardly up to the average, though slightly varied on account of an unusually large parcel of thrown silk being offered for positive sale. The biddings were chiefly confined to those lots moderately taxed or to be sold "without reserve," also to the throwns, which were all sold.

COTTON.—In the London market the week ended 22nd inst. was one of extraordinary activity. The demand, which at the period of our last report was quiet, became extremely brisk, and prices continued to advance until business was done at higher rates both for sales on the spot and "to arrive," than have been previously paid this year. Surats and Madras were 1⅛d. and other descriptions 1d. higher than our last quotations. The market remained steady at the advanced rates until the 24th inst., when the inquiry slackened to a considerable extent, and prices generally receded from ¼d. to ⅜d. per lb. The sales since our last report have been 8,680 bales on the spot, and 7,800 "to arrive." In the Liverpool market, the demand was extremely active up to the 21st inst., and a corresponding advance to that in the London market was established. Since that date there has been a dull market, and prices have fallen ¼d. per lb. for sales on the spot and ½d. in transactions for arrival. The quotations on the spot are:—American, 9¼d. to 10d.; Egyptian 10¾d. to 15d.; Surat, 7¼d. to 9¼d.; Madras, 7⅞d. to 8¼d.; Bengal, 7¼d. to 8d.; and China, 8d. For sales "to arrive" the following quotations are current:—American, basis of middling.—From Charleston, 9⅛d.; Savannah, 9⅛d. (good ordinary, 8⅜d.); Mobile, 9¼d.; New Orleans, 9½d. Oomrawuttee.—Fair new merchants, January sailing, 7¾d.; March to April shipment, 7½d.

COFFEE.—The quantity offered in public sale has been very light, but the result of the Dutch sale on the 19th inst. has tended still further to increase the depression that has now so long existed, especially for pale kinds. Good Native Ceylon has been realised in auction at a reduction of fully 2s. per cwt. on the rates ruling a month since, while for doubtful quality there are no buyers even at a greater decline. Coloury Plantation Ceylon is steady, and besides the public sales about 250 casks out of parcels recently withdrawn from auction have been sold by private contract. Of Singapore, 500 bags at auction realised 71s. to 72s. 6d. for bright yellow Bonthyne, 68s. 6d. for Brown, 55s. for Bugis, and 33s. for unpicked Bally. The quotations for Plantation Ceylon are:—Triage and ordinary, 40s. to 58s.; fine fine ordinary small, 64s. 6d.; middling, 72s. to 73s. 6d.; bold, 79s. 6d. to 84s.; and peaberry, 84s. For Native Ceylon fine ordinary has realised 53s. to 54s. 6d.; good ordinary, 50s. 6d. to 52s.; small, 44s. to 47s.; fine bold 60s. 6d.; peaberry, 66s. 6d.; and garblings 22s. 6d. to 23s. 6d. The Dutch Trading Company's sale, consisting of 129,600 bags Java, went at 1 to 2 cents below the valuations for all except the prime qualities, which were supported, showing on the average a decline of about 2 cents since November last. The next sale, which is to take place about the middle of March, is not expected to exceed 95,000 bags.

COCOA-NUT OIL.—There has been a most restricted trade with a further reduction in rates for Ceylon of 10s. to 20s. on our last quotations. About 160 casks Ceylon have been taken at the sales.

CUTCH.—There is a limited business doing in Pegu at 55s. per cwt.

GALLS.—An improved demand for China and Japan has been exhibited at advanced prices. A good business has transpired at 56s. per cwt. for China, and 52s. 6d. for Japan.

GUMS.—Benjamin: Generally cheaper; auctions have embraced 14 cases Siam, sold at £10 to £10 10s. for middling dark; and 91 cases Sumatra, mostly sold at £9 10s. to £9 15s. for fine 2nd quality; £7 7s. 6d. to £7 10s. false packed; £5 15s. fair 3rds; and £2 5s. to £2 10s. 4ths. Copal: Firm, and in demand; 468 cases sold at auction at 28s. 6d. to 38s. per cwt. for ordinary rough to good hard, and 20s. to 28s. 6d. ordinary to good soft.

INDIA RUBBER.—Of 164 baskets Singapore offered at the sales one-fourth sold 1s. 7¾d. to 1s. 8d. per lb., and by private contract business has been done at the same terms.

JAPAN WAX.—The quotation for good saucers is 108s. per cwt., but there is no supply, although the demand is extremely pressing.

MANILA HEMP.—The dulness noticed in our last has continued without relief, and prices are again lower. Of 1,856 bales offered at auction, about one third sold at £48 to £49 per ton for fine roping, and £40 15s. to £43 for ordinary. In addition 200 bales "Albay" Manila realised £48 per ton.

PEPPER.—The auctions of black were again important, amounting to 4,590 bags Penang, which were all taken at rather better prices, grey to fair West Coast 3¾d. to 3¼d., a few extra good 3¼d. to 3⅜d. The private sales are about 600 bags, Penang at 3⅜d., Singapore 3⅜d. to 3½d. White.—231 bags fair Singapore at public sale brought 5¼d. to 5⅜d., and 71 bags good Penang 5¼d., one lot 5⅜d.

PLUMBAGO.—Prices are slightly higher, and 209 barrels Ceylon at auction realised 33s. 6d. to 38s. per cwt. for good to fine lump, 25s. 6d. to 28s. for chips, and 11s. to 16s. for dust.

RICE.—The market has had a firmer appearance, and common qualities have met a more ready sale, fully recovering the decline quoted in our last. On the spot privately about 7,000 bags Bengal have been sold, chiefly ordinary to fair old Ballam at 9s. 8d. to 9s. 10½d., a few Moonghy at 11s. 3d., also 1,000 bags Ballam just arrived at 10s. 3d. ex ship, and 800 bags at 10s. 7½d. landed. At public sale 49,688 bags Saigon were held firmly and principally bought in, but greater part afterwards placed, fair to good at 10s. 9d. to 11s. 3d.; 2,032 bags Ballam sold at 9s. 9d. to 10s.; 682 bags White were withdrawn at 15s. A cargo of Saigon, consisting of 1,070 tons was reported sold, but the terms were not published, and cargoes consisting of 2,400 tons Siam, to arrive, sold at 10s. 6d. ex ship, or 11s. landed without guarantee, and 800 tons Rangoon (spring shipment), sold at 11s. 9d. for the Continent.

SPICES.—Cinnamon: We quote 1st sort at 1s. 11d. to 2s. 6d. per lb.; 2nd, 1s. 5d. to 2s. 5d.; 3rd, 1s. 4d. to 2s. 1d.; and 4th and Jungle, 1s. 2d. to 1s. 8d.; 294 bales sold at auction at rather improved prices. Mace: Dearer; of 21 cases Penang, 7 cases Singapore, and 2 cases Batavia at auction, two-thirds sold at 2s. 10d. to 3s. 8d. per lb. for middling to good palish, and 1s. 3d. to 2s. 5d. very low red to good bright reddish. Nutmegs: Rather higher; and of 47 cases Penang, 11 cases Singapore, and 10 cases Batavia at auction, the greater portion sold at 2s. 6d. to 4s. 4d. per lb. for middling medium and bold to fine bold, and 1s. 3d. to 2s. 1d. ordinary small to good medium.

SUGAR.—Both Clayed and Muscovado Manila have been in request, the value has gradually improved, and is now 1s. per cwt. higher than a week since, but holders are not free sellers even at this advance. In public sale 27,000 bags clayed were taken duty 8s. at 28s. 6d. to 29s., and duty 9s. 7d. at 29s. 3d. to 29s. 9d., and 12,000 bags Muscovade at 25s. 9d. to 26s. per cwt. Private returns make the imports of raw sugar into the four chief ports of the United Kingdom, to the 15th of February, 49,780 tons, against 44,880 tons in 1867. The clearances for home consumption 55,160 tons, against 71,040 tons, and the stock at that date 119,550 tons, against 151,710 tons.

SAPANWOOD.—In strong demand, and dearer; moderate business done privately, chiefly in Siam, up to £15 10s. per ton; 14½ tons Ceylon at auction sold at £13 10s. to £14 per ton, and 10 tons Manilla very mixed at £12 to £12 12s. 6d.

TIN.—An advance of 20s. per ton for Straits which was established subsequently to our last report has since been lost, but a fair business has been done, and the demand is still moderately active. Quotations are—Banca £91 to £91 10s., Straits £89 to 89 10s. per ton.

ARTICLES OF EXPORT.

The latest London quotations are as follows:—

IRON.—Welsh bars, £6 5s. to £6 10s.; Staffordshire bars, £7 5s. to £7 15s.; nail rods, £7 5s. to £7 10s.; hoops, £8 7s. 6d. to £9; sheets, £9 10s. to £10; discount 2½ per cent.

COPPER.—Ore, 14s. 8d. per unit net; Spanish cake, £71 to £78 per ton; Australian, £79 to £87; English tough, £75 to £77; best selected, £76 to £79; sheet sheathing, &c., £79 to £81; discount 3 per cent.

YELLOW METAL.—Sheets, 4 feet by four, 6¾d. per lb.; sheathing and rods, 6½d. to 7d.; discount 3 per cent.

LEAD.—Pig, W.B., £21 5s. per ton; do., other brands, £19 5s. to £19 15s.; Spanish, soft (ex ship), £19; sheet, £20 5s. to £20 15s.; shot (kegs extra) £22 10s. to £22 15s.; white do., £27 to £30; red do., £20 15s. to £21; discount 2½ per cent.

SPELTER.—Silesian, £20 5s.; English (smelted from ores), £19 15s. to £20 net.

QUICKSILVER.—In bottles of 75 lbs. each, £6 17s. per bottle; discount 3 per cent.

ZINC.—English sheet, £26 to £26 10s. per ton; discount 2½ per cent.

The following is from the circular of Messrs. French and Smith:—

In the Iron Trade there is no improvement, prices remain unchanged.

COPPER.—There is a small improvement in this metal. For English the price is firmer. Chili also is a little dearer. In Australian there is no improvement in prices obtainable. Burra is quoted £83, Wallaroo £79, Kapunda £87.

TIN PLATES are in good demand, but the large production prevents any but a trifling advance in prices at present.

LEAD is much in demand, and has improved during the past week quite 5s. per ton.

SPELTER is rather firmer.

MANCHESTER MARKETS.

Mr. Sam Mendel's circular of Tuesday says:—"During the latter part of the week just closed this market assumed a quieter and somewhat irregular tone. This morning the depression had increased, but since noon there is a better feeling, with transactions on a free scale, chiefly re-sales at about 5 per cent. below producers' prices; and on these terms such lots are rather pressed forward. The general tone of the market both for yarns and goods is fairly steady, and at the close of business the feeling is rather inclined to firmness." Quotations are:—Grey Shirtings, 7 lbs., 8s. 9d. to 9s. 6d.; 8¼ lbs., 10s. 9d. to 11s.; Cotton Yarn, Nos. 16-24, 13½d. to 14½d.; Nos. 28-32, 14½d. to 17d.; Maddapollams, 8s. 10½d.; Long Cloths, 9s. 9d.; T-Cloths, 6s. 6d.; White Spot Shirtings, 11s. 8d.

The Admiralty have invited tenders for the conveyance of 6 tons meast. stores from the Thames to Colombo.

CASUALTIES.

The Zeemanshoop, van Monnom, from Batavia to Rotterdam, pu into Mauritius, Dec. 28; she was thrown on her beam ends during a hurricane, Dec. 16, in lat. 26 S., lon. 67 E., and had her lee deck under water for 6 hours; having then 6 feet water in her hold; she bore up for Mauritius for repairs, and had been ordered to discharge.

Advices from Mauritius, dated Jan. 6, state that the Warrior (American paddle steamer), Patterson, from New York to China, was stranded there, but would come off after discharging, and would probably require docking. Another account, dated Jan. 5, states that she had got afloat without damage.

The 6 Gezusters, Ritschert, from Batavia, which arrived at Bremen, Feb. 8, had bulwarks damaged, &c.

The Betty (Dutch barque), Chevalier, from Newcastle to Java, which got on shore on the north sand head of the Goodwin, Feb. 11, put into Brouwershaven, Feb. 17, leaky.

The Carmeline (French ship), Gallet, from Macao to Havana, which put into Mauritius, Jan. 9, dismasted, had lost main and mizen topmasts, and had badly sprung lower masts, during a violent hurricane, Dec. 25, near the Straits of Sunda; when near the island of Mauritius, on the 3rd Jan., she experienced another hurricane, during which she lost foremast and bowsprit.

The Arbutus, Turnbull, from Padang to New York, which put into Mauritius, Jan. 11, with damage, had been thrown on her beam ends during a severe hurricane Jan. 4 in lat. 24 S., lon. 62 E., when she lost bulwarks fore and aft on the starboard side, and had to cut away topmasts; after the hurricane, when the vessel righted herself, she had three feet water in her hold. The surveyors ordered the discharge of her cargo, which must have been considerably damaged, but her hull had sustained little injury.

The Warrior (American steamer), Patterson, from New York to China, which was stranded at Mauritius, had been got off after discharging her coals, with damage to cutwater and part of keel, and with some of her planking chafed.

Advices from Mauritius, dated Jan. 18, state that the Gabrielle Alice, Lancelot, from Saigon to Bordeaux, which put in there Nov. 16 leaky, had sold about 300 tons of rice, and was then seeking a fresh freight.

The Burgomeester Hoffman, Gaathuis, from Batavia to Rotterdam, put into Simon's Bay, Dec. 30, leaky, having experienced a succession of heavy gales off the coast; a large portion of her cargo had been discharged.

The Catharina, Doble, from Singapore, which put into Capetown, leaky, Sept. 29, sailed after undergoing repairs, arrived at St. Helena, Jan. 5, and sailed, 6, for Boston.

The Golden Empire, Milroy, which sailed from Falmouth for Hong Kong, Feb. 12, after repairing put back, Feb. 21, leaky, with loss of sails, boats, &c., and crew refusing duty.

The Amicus, Brit. barque, Olsend, from Shanghai, which arrived at New York, Feb. 4, after discharging about 2,500 packages of tea was struck by ice on the 10th inst., while at her moorings, and drifted down off Robin's Reef Lighthouse, whence she was towed back badly strained, and with her metal damaged. She was making no water, and the cargo remaining on board was uninjured.

The Benvenue Brown, which sailed from London Feb. 14, for Penang, arrived off the Wight with foretopsailyard sprung.

BISHOP'S

GRANULAR

EFFERVESCENT CITRATE OF MAGNESIA,

INVENTED, INTRODUCED, AND PREPARED BY

ALFRED BISHOP, Manufacturing Chemist

17 & 18, SPECK'S FIELD'S, MILE END NEW TOWN, LONDON.

THIS perfectly white and delicately clean granulated preparation possesses remarkable effervescent qualities, which far surpasses the ordinary Seidlitz Powder in its cooling, refreshing, and mild aperient properties, as well as in its flavour as a saline draught. It is particularly well adapted for women and young children, on account of its most agreeable flavour and mild effect.

N.B. The genuine has the name BISHOP upon the Bottle, also the Name and Trade Mark upon the Label, and is sold in convenient sizes, and secured in so perfect a manner that it may be shipped with safety to any part of the world.

Manufacturer also of Granulated and Effervescent Carbonate of Iron, Citrate of Iron, Citrate of Quinine, Citrate of Quinine and Iron, Carbonate of Lithia in Tubes, Citrate of Lithia, Vichy Salt, Seidlitz Mixture, and all other Granulated Preparations.

IN CHANCERY.—CAUTION.—BISHOP'S GRANULAR EFFERVESCENT CITRATE OF MAGNESIA.—Mr. Bishop, having discovered that the Label which he has used for the last five years was being imitated, recently applied to the COURT OF CHANCERY for an INJUNCTION to restrain such imitation. The injunction was immediately granted, and the defendant was ordered to pay all Mr. Bishop's costs and destroy the labels complained of.

Mr. Bishop is determined to stop the imitation of his label, and will, without notice or delay, take proceedings in Chancery against any person who may copy or colourably imitate the same.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Diseases of the most formidable and chronic character have been cured by Holloway's remedies. Ulcerations, which have proved themselves incurable by any other known means, have healed kindly under the purifying and regenerating influence of this excellent Ointment. Sprains, erysipelas, stiff joints, contracted muscles, glandular swellings can be most safely and effectively treated by Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which can do no harm under any circumstances. Neither of these medicaments have anything deleterious in their composition, but are essentially purifying and strengthening in their nature. The combined power of these noble remedies enables them to cope successfully with most descriptions of injuries, and to cure, or at least relieve, most varieties of disease.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

From the New York papers we have now some fuller details of the revolutionary movement that has taken place in Japan. The Pacific mail steamer Great Republic, which brought the first intelligence, left Yokohama on the 27th January and reached San Francisco on Feb. 16. The following is a summary of her advices, which however must be received with caution, as telegrams to a later date via Galle (given in another column) do not corroborate the more important details:—

A formidable revolution has taken place in Japan, in consequence of the opening of the new ports to foreigners. The young Mikado was seized by the three leading Princes of the Empire—Satsuma, Chosiu, and Tosa—and remained a prisoner in their hands. The late Shiogoon, Stotsbashi, fled from Miako, and shut himself up in the castle of Osaka, where he placed himself under the protection of the fleets of the foreign Powers in that harbour. But the Ministers of the treaty Powers have given a distinct solemn assurance to the Japanese that they will not in any way interfere in the struggle. Stotsbashi was collecting forces and organising an army, with which he would attempt to recover his lost power. Meantime the confederated Daimios proposed no immediate action.

It is not probable that the foreign Ministers would make any efforts for a settlement of their relations with either of the opposing parties until after the assembling of the nobility of the Empire in council. Meanwhile the country was without a recognised head. Disturbances of a serious nature had taken place at Yedo. The enclosure of the principal palace of the Shiogoon was broken into by a mob, and the castle and residence of the ladies of his Court were set on fire and destroyed on the 16th of January. The widows of the former Shiogoons, who lived in the palace, were killed. It is said that the mob consisted of the people of Satsuma, who were attempting to rescue a sister of their Prince, the wife of a former Shiogoon. Two days after this outrage the great palace of Prince Satsuma, in Jeddo, was attacked and destroyed by the Shiogoon's troops, and a large amount of the Prince's property in other parts of the city was plundered or destroyed.

The officers of the Shiogoon disavow any intention to quarrel with Satsuma, but declare that they only wished to dislodge bands of robbers who were located in the places which were destroyed. It was reported that 140 of Satsuma's men were killed and 160 wounded, and that the troops of the Shiogoon lost from 50 to 60 killed and wounded.

Some of Satsuma's men made their way out of the city to a small steamer belonging to the Prince, and steamed out into the harbour. They were followed by a war vessel of the Shiogoon, and a fight took place in which the latter was worsted and the steamer escaped.

The ports of Hiogo and Osaka were formally proclaimed open to foreigners on the 1st of January, but trade had not yet commenced at either place, owing to the disturbed condition of the country. The town of Hiogo was burned on Christmas-day.

The condition of the first settlers at the new ports was very unpleasant. Their houses were of an inferior description, and provisions of all kinds were scarce and dear. The main settlement was located at Kino, a miserable fishing village two miles from Hiogo. The foreign Ministers were generally censured for selecting a site so inferior in every respect to that of the port of Hiogo.

Mr. F. G. Myburgh, the British Consul at the new port, died on the 21st January. [The cause of death is not stated.]

Another account states that a terrible mortality had broken out among the foreigners at Hiogo, twenty-four having died in as many days.

The 25th of January being the Japanese New Year, all business was suspended at Yokohama, and trade and commerce had been dull for some time past. Grey shirtings were in slight demand at $2.75 to $3.40; cotton yarns, $47 to $53. Silk market firm but quiet; best Maibash, $850; Ashu, $710; Koshio, $730; Atchiscan, $520. Tea steady; good business doing and prices firm, while stock was small; fine, $34; medium, $30 to $34. Exchange on London, 4s. 0¾d.; four months' credit, 4s. 4s.; Bous, 298. Freights steady; on New York, £3-10; on London, £4.

YOKOHAMA.

By the French mail delivered this morning we have advices from Yokohama to Jan. 18. The outward mails of Nov. 11 and 18 arrived out on the 9th and 15th Jan. respectively. Up to the departure of this mail there had been no actual hostilities between the Daimios and Stotsbashi, and a "bloodless revolution" was expected. The telegraphic news since received, however, tells a different tale.

The Japan Times gives the following outline of the situation:—"The ports have been formally proclaimed open by the Ministers, and letters have been received from the settlers at Hiogo by more than one opportunity. Trade is impossible in the present juncture of political circumstances, and in the total absence of the necessary appliances of Custom-house, quay, warehouses, &c., the present situation is most critical and unsatisfactory. The late Shiogoon, Stotsbashi, is quite retired from public life for the time, the Mikado and his Council are in the hands of the Southern Daimios, and the treaties of 1858 are waste paper. Sir Harry Parkes is said to be preparing to visit Kioto; it is to be hoped that he goes at the invitation of the men who are now masters of the situation, and not with any foolish idea of supporting the fallen Stotsbashi by moral or material aid. It is a great misfortune for English merchants, and indeed for commercial men generally, that England is not represented in Japan by an abler man at this critical time. Sir Harry's rashness and vacillation together have made shipwreck of whatever reputation he had in China as a diplomatist. We have no fear for the ultimate result of the present agitation. The combination against the Yedo family and their party is far too strong to admit of any thought of armed resistance to the Southern Daimios, without foreign aid. The Mikado and his Cabinet have put themselves into their hands, too, of their own free will, and the decrees which the Daimios will dictate will bear with them no reservation on account of the Emperor's position in the midst of their camp. The House of Iyeyas is beaten on all points and must succumb to fate. We have positive assurance that until the fleet leaves Hiogo Bay the Daimios will not deliberate. Admiral Keppel has just arrived in this port in his flag ship, the Rodney, and it is to be hoped that this is the signal for the dispersion of his squadron. It is probable that the compromise necessary to ensure peace will shortly be effected at Kioto, certainly within a couple of months. The Daimios do not demand the opening of the whole country, nor of the whole seaboard; they profess themselves perfectly satisfied that Yokohama, Osaka, Nagasaki, and Hakodadi should remain the entrepots of trade, provided that the customs collected there are collected for the Mikado, and applied to general and imperial purposes, not merely to swell the Yedo exchequer; and that they shall have equal rights with the Tokugawa family and the Fudais, its vassals—the rights of free entry of their own goods and untaxed purchase of the manufactures imported by foreigners."

One desponding correspondent writes from Hiogo, under date of January 10th:—"This place is a real 'take-in' for the first year or two, and I am sorry I ever came. At Osaka the Japanese merchants are offering 25 per cent. less for European manufactures than they will sell for in Yokohama, and do not seem inclined to deal even at that." Another writes:—"The Japanese Government and the foreign Ministers appear to have placed the site of the settlement in as nice a position as they could possibly think of to prevent foreigners from intermixing with the natives, Hiogo (proper) being only two miles distant from where foreigners will be allowed to reside. All Japanese merchants of any standing or wealth reside in Hiogo, so that if any person wishes to have any conversation with this class he has to walk to Hiogo. This is not all; when he is about a mile on the road, if he chances to look back, he finds a Japanese officer (spy) following him wherever he may go. At present there is no business of any kind doing between foreigners and Japanese. There seems to be some secret influence holding the Japanese in check, and I do not believe a sale of foreign goods to Japanese has been effected since foreigners landed here.

It is with much regret that we have to record, among the incidents attending the opening of these ports, the death of Admiral Bell, of the American navy, who was drowned on the 11th inst. with his flag Lieutenant, Commander Reid, and ten men, while attempting to cross the bar at the mouth of the Osaka river. Admiral Bell entered the service in 1823 and distinguished himself during the recent civil war, in the course of which he received rapid promotion. One circumstance attendant on his untimely death is very saddening; he was actually on the retired list, holding command of the China squadron only until the arrival of his successor. He was frequently, of late, expressing to his friends here the pleasure with which he anticipated returning to his family. We understand that he was much respected and beloved by those under his command.

The condition of Yedo and its surrounding districts during these evil days has been pitiable. The Government officers conceal from the Consulates as much as they possibly can of the state of the country, but they were compelled a few days ago to intimate that real danger existed for foreigners who went on expeditions to any distance. The house of a Hatamoto, at a place of common resort for foreign tourists, was attacked on the night of the 9th by a considerable body of ronins and completely gutted of everything of value. Yedo is almost in a state of siege by these masterless men, and the distress prevalent there in consequence is great. The numberless beggars, the poverty-struck look of many of the houses, and the deserted condition of the streets, are melancholy to look upon. The Kokushi Daimios, no longer compelled to keep up their establishments in Yedo, are withdrawing them—Satsuma has already dismantled his yashikis—and the tradespeople are naturally shutting up their shops, either to follow their customers or to seek new ones in less expensive towns. The foreigner is accused as the cause of all this inevitable distress.

In a postscript, dated noon, Jan. 18, the Times adds:—"A rumour is current among the Japanese that a meeting has taken place between Sir Harry Parkes and Stotsbashi. The night before last a fire broke out in the Shiogoon's palace at Yedo, which was not extinguished till yesterday. The palace, or castle, is divided into two main parts—the O-shiro and the Ni-shiro, of which the former is the chief. The fire has destroyed a smaller building within the O-shiro enclosure, called the Ni-no maru, which, so far as we can make out at present, is a strong place for retirement to in case of need. This has been totally consumed, and the accident is said of course to have been the work of incendiaries."

The Japan Herald, under the head of "Latest Intelligence" says: "The Foreign Ministers at Osaka have held a solemn audience and tendered their unanimous expression of sympathy to the late Tycoon, to whom the strict observance of the Treaties is due. Stotsbashi on his part has replied, protesting against the recent events at Kioto, assuring the Ministers that the honour of Japan is engaged in the maintenance of the Treaties and Conventions, and that this he would yet guarantee."

A paper has been established called the Hiogo and Osaka Herald, in connection with the Japan Herald at Yokohama.

CHINA.

SHANGHAI.

The dates are down to the 26th January. The London mail of November 26th arrived out on the 12th January, with telegrams to the 6th of December.

A meeting of land-renters, &c., was held on the 10th, at which various topics were discussed. The collection of the Land-tax on its old basis, up to the end of the financial year, was assented to. No further steps towards appointing a committee for the purposes of re-assessing land were taken. A re-assessment of Chinese house property was ordered, the previous assessment having proved very inexact. It was announced that H.B.M. Government have decided to build a gaol, on a plot of ground on the Soochow Creek adjoining the gasworks; and a road which is marked through it on the plan, was given up by the land-renters. The Municipal Council had previously issued an interesting supplementary report, designed to bring before the land-renters the principal topics that awaited their discussion. Amongst these, besides the questions above referred to, were the construction of a public slaughter-house, and the opening of the new cemetery and final closing of the old one after the 1st April next; but consideration of these was deferred.

The Customs returns of trade at Shanghai during the month of November show a decrease in the import of shirtings from 207,000 to 122,000 pieces; in T-cloths from 49,000 to 32,000; in drills from 25,000 to 6,000; in camlets from 12,000 to 2,000; in long ells from 13,000 to 11,000; in lustres from 24,000 to 17,000; in iron from 10,000 to 5,000 piculs, and in sugar from 86,000 to 52,000. The import of coal has slightly increased, from 7,000 to 9,000 tons. There is an increase of 4,000 piculs in the import of black tea from Hankow, but a corresponding decrease from Kiukiang. Green tea, from both Ningpo and Kiukiang, is much the same as last year; 19,000 piculs of black and 41,000 of green tea have been re-exported.

A correspondent expresses apprehension that game is about to become scarce in the neighbourhood of Shanghai. The supply of pheasants is ample, so long as excursionists merely look on sport as a means to the enjoyment of a few days' trip. But if wholesale slaughtering expeditions come in vogue, the result must, he argues, be the gradual extinction of one of the best sources of healthy recreation that Shanghai commands.

In the bankruptcy case of T. C. Jones, Government claimed $3,981, and opposed his discharge. The Chief Judge said he was placed in a difficult position. He had to administer justice, and at the same time study what was best for the creditors. Mr. Myburgh said it was in the power of the Court either to withhold the bankrupt's discharge, or to give it conditionally, or imprison him. The Chief Judge remarked that the Crown were in a different position to the other creditors. It might be all very well for them to make an example, but the other creditors would suffer. He would therefore take time to consider his judgment.

It is satisfactory to find that the Chinese Government are making some tardy reparation for the old Fung Shui disturbance, which resulted in the destruction of Mr. Reynold's telegraph from Woosung. Steamers approaching the port are now to be signalised for Woosung to the Harbourmaster's hulk and thence to the Customs' hulk, from which signal guns are to be also fired on the arrival of the mail. So far so good; but after all, why not have the telegraph, which would be much more accurate and much more rapid?

The most important item in connection with commerce is the notification issued by Mr. Consul Medhurst, and approved by Sir Rutherford Alcock, cautioning merchants against the acceptance of written guarantees or "security chops" of Chinamen, without other and collateral security. The next notification we may expect will be that it has from custom become law, that the Chinese may with impunity cancel all their obligations to British subjects.

A villanous outrage was perpetrated a few nights ago, at Trefancha Farm, by some villagers. They broke into the stable, in the absence of the owner, and stabbed two ponies, one of which was found dead with his entrails protruding, and gashed in a fearful manner; the other is so badly cut that he will be useless. They also cut through the leg of the colt Javelin, who was only bought a short time back. It is probable this cowardly attack was made in revenge for Mr. Bidwell prosecuting some villagers some time back, in the Mixed Court, for a similar outrage. The matter has been represented to H.M.'s Consul, who has referred the matter to the Taoutai, requesting that prompt measures be taken to discover the miscreants.

A meeting of shareholders in the Recreation Fund was held, to discuss a claim by the Race Course Committee for payment of a balance of 3,700 taels, balance of purchase money for the land inside the race course. Messrs. Hogg, Overweg, and Groom were appointed a committee to deal with the matter.

A meeting of shareholders in the Shanghai Wharf Company was held on the 22nd, when the sale of the wharf to H.B.M. Government for 25,000 taels was formally announced. The mortgage had been paid off; and a small balance remained at the credit of the company in the bank.

A fully attended meeting of members and shareholders in the Shanghai Club, was held on the 17th, when rules were passed; and it was arranged that general and balloting committees should be elected during the current week.

A meeting of members of the Rowing Club was held on the 20th, at which the accounts, showing a balance of Tls. 131 in favour of the club, were passed. Messrs. Little, Low, Geary, Scott and Batt were elected a committee for the ensuing year, and Mr. Little was re-elected captain of the club.

A meeting of shareholders in the Racket Club was held on the 21st, at which it was shown that the liabilities incurred beyond the subscribed capital amount to nearly 3,900 taels; against which, however, there are about 2,000 taels of prospective assets. The club is paying a net profit of about 100 taels per mensem. A committee, consisting of Messrs. Bell, Maccall, Robinson, Mackintosh, and Groom, was appointed, to report on the position of the club, and to suggest a scheme for paying off the debt.

It is expected that the total export of tea from Ningpo will hardly equal last year. The export of cotton has nearly ceased, the Hankow demand having failed. The exportation of silk is 200 pieces short of last year.

We learn from Chefoo that the inundation of the Yellow River, in Shantung, has subsided, and that its banks have been repaired.

The Commissioner of Customs of Chiukiang says the increase in the importation of English piece goods continues most satisfactory, a month's importation now being equal almost to the yearly supplies some time back. Nevertheless, the stocks, large as they appear, are easily disposed of, at fairly remunerative prices.

HONG KONG.

The dates are down to the 30th January. The London mail of the 10th December arrived out on the 22nd January. The P. and O. mail was to leave on the 1st Feb.

The half-yearly general meeting of the Hong Kong Chamber of Commerce was held on the 18th January. The principal resolution carried at the meeting was to the following effect: "That in view of the irregularity of the receipt of telegrams from Mr. Lane, of London, it is proposed that telegrams through that source be discontinued at once, and that the secretary be authorised to communicate with Messrs. Gibson, Thomson and Co., of Galle, for the transmission of the latest news from England, and, if this mode should not prove more efficient, that telegrams be discontinued altogether."

A meeting of the Hong Kong Fire Insurance Company was held on the 25th January, the Hon. W. Keswick in the chair. The meeting was held for the purpose of adopting the report for the past year, and approving of the accounts up to the 31st December last. Copies of the same were handed round for their inspection. Mr. Burrows congratulated the shareholders that they had escaped with so small an amount of loss ($74,000) from the late fire. The Chairman observed that the loss was $88,951.60, but they had reason to congratulate themselves even then. Mr. Bosman proposed that the report be now adopted, and the accounts passed; which, being seconded by Mr. Deacon, was carried unanimously. Mr. Rowett then proposed that the committee for the year should be composed of the following members:—Messrs. Duncanson, Heard, Kaye, Ryrie, and Rangel the two latter being re-elected; which motion was also unanimously carried.

A public meeting of residents was held in the Supreme Court House, for the purpose of forming an auxiliary branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society. H.E. the Governor occupied the chair, and was supported by the Lord Bishop, the Chief Justice, and the Revds. Messrs. Warren (secy.), Beach, and Vaughan (from India). A large number of ladies, nearly all the clergy of the district, and others attended.

The observance of the Chinaman's New Year's Day, on Saturday, the 25th January, was celebrated with the usual amount of chin-chinning and firing of crackers by the natives, and by the foreigners with cricket and football and other games. The day was observed almost as a general holiday. The Government offices were kept open for an hour or two, but there being nothing to be done, they were closed.

A Foochow letter advises the laying down of a gunboat for the Chinese in connection with the Arsenal. The steam machinery was also put in motion, viz., lathes, saws, &c., &c. They also laid the first stone of the workshops, &c. At present the shops are all wood. It it really wonderful what they have done in twelve months. The place itself was a low swamp covered with water at every spring tide. It has been raised five feet throughout, viz., about 1,400 yards of river frontage, and, falling to the hills, about 600 yards back. They have built six enormous houses for the swells, and many smaller ones for the mechanics. They have two schools one for English, where they teach navigation, &c. This school is under the charge of a Mr. Carrol, late of Greenwich school, assisted by Lai-Sun. The other is a French school, with only about 20 scholars. This does not seem to take so well as the English, although there is a very good fellow at the head of it,—a Mr. Borel. The buildings are very fine, and built in a most substantial manner.

Mr. Thomas Child Hayller, barrister, from Bombay, was introduced to the Court, and his name enrolled. The Chief-Justice remarked that he supposed Mr. Hayller had read the local ordinances, but he nevertheless would take this opportunity of saying that he would be enrolled as an advocate in this court, subject, however, according to section 10 of Ordinance 6 of 1845, to be removed and struck off upon reasonable cause.

On the Hong Kong petition to Parliament the Daily Press says :—

The petition against the Military Contribution was, we understand, to have gone home by the mail of the 1st, but owing to the necessity of making various arrangements for securing it proper support in England, it appeared doubtful whether all the necessary correspondence on the subject could be ready to go forward with the petition by this opportunity. We believe therefore that the important document will be held over till the mail of the 12th. It will reach England leaving here, even then, in such good time, that the trifling delay will not matter. Sent away in the middle of February, it ought to reach England about the end of March, when the session will still be in its infancy. Giving the promoters of the petition at home a month to make their arrangements, the presentation may take place in the early part of April, and about the end of May we may be looking out in the London papers then coming to hand to ascertain the fate of the enterprise. The names of eighty European and American firms, including nearly all which are well known, are appended to the sheet on which the petition ends. Several sheets of individual names have already been filled up, and advantage will be taken of the extra time, which will be obtained by postponing the departure of the petition over the present mail, to increase the strength of the main body of signatures. One interesting feature of the petition will be a sheet covered with Chinese hong stamps, the names of the hongs being written underneath, or by the side, in English, letters. The total number of signatures will, we have no doubt now, considerably exceed that of the signatures to the memorial of 1864, and the anthenticity of the present petition, as an expression of the opinions and aspirations of the Hong Kong community, is thus placed beyond dispute."

The Daily Press has the following reports of bankruptcy cases :—

IN RE DENT AND CO.—JAN. 15.

This was a petition by the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation to annul an order made by the Chief Justice on the 9th of December, 1867, by which the firm of Dent and Co. were adjudicated bankrupts. Mr. Ball, instructed by Mr. Hazeland, appeared for the Corporation; and Mr. White, instructed by Mr. Gaskell, for the firm of Dent and Co.

The acting Attorney-General contended that the adjudication was invalid because the acts of bankruptcy on which it was founded were committed by Mr. Dent alone, and he referred to Deacon on Bankruptcy, and cited several cases to show that, with regard to partners, each must commit a separate act to support a joint adjudication. He further contended that it was not competent for one partner to bind his co-partner by an act of bankruptcy; nor was it a case in which a subsequent ratification by an absent partner would have the effect of binding him, and so making him liable for acts of bankruptcy in the commission of which he was not concerned; he then referred to the affidavits of Mr. Dent, Mr. Gomez, and Mr. Da Silva, on which the abjudication was founded, and insisted that they did not prove acts of bankruptcy, even on the part of Mr. Dent, under the provisions of the local ordinance.

Mr. Whyte, on behalf of Dent and Co., took several formal objections to the petition as presented, and contended that under the Bankruptcy Ordinance the Court had no jurisdiction to annul an adjudication on the petition of a creditor, but could only do so on the aplication of the debtor. The jurisdiction of the Court was only a statutable one, and it did not possess the extensive power conferred by the English Acts on the Courts of Bankruptcy in England. He argued that, for the analogy of joint-stock companies and dormant partnerships, a firm could be adjudicated bankrupts on an act committed by one member, and referred to Sir E. Hornby's decisions at Shanghai in Dent and Co., and Smith, Kennedy and Co. He relied on the fact of the four absent partners having consented to the adjudication in the present case, as a proof that they accepted and ratified the acts of Mr. Dent, and drew a distinction between the cases cited by Mr. Ball and the present one. He showed that at all events the Court could exercise a discretion in setting aside an adjudication, and that the policy of bankrupt laws was to consult the interests of the large body of creditors, not of any individual one.

Mr. Ball briefly replied, and the Chief Justice intimated that as the case was on important one he would take time to consider before he delivered judgment.

IN RE LYALL, STILL, AND CO., EX PARTE LIEBERT.—JAN. 22.

This was an application on behalf of Mr. Liebert to recover possession of 100 bales grey shirtings, ex Pakwan, under a judgment of this Court, but suspended by order under notice of appeal. Mr. Whyte, instructed by Mr. Sharp, appeared to make the application.

It appears that on the 13th of July last his lordship made an order ordering the official assignee, Mr. Masson, to hand over to Mr. Parr, agent for Mr. Liebert, the 100 bales in question. This order was, however, subsequently suspended, on the statement of Mr. Pollard that it was intended to appeal. Leave to appeal was granted, but attention was called to Section 10 of the rules of the Privy Council for Appeal, regarding the security to be given. This provided that security must be given within three months from the time leave was granted, and although more than three months had elapsed no such security had been completed. The applicant therefore prayed that an order might be made handing over to him such goods or the proceeds as were now in possession of the Court. The official assignee, in reply to his lordship, said he did not intend to complete the security.

The application was thereupon granted, and an order made accordingly, giving to the applicant possession of the goods or the proceeds of the sale of them, and costs in the sum of $50.

IN RE VAUCHER AND CO.—JAN. 24.

In granting the order of discharge, his Lordship said that he thought it right for the Court to express its views on granting the discharge of a bankrupt, and regardless of what others might think, he should do what he deemed his duty. It was often that the Court had to deal with fraudulent bankruptcy, often brought about by the misconduct and recklessness of those concerned, and on such occasions it was a painful duty to have to refer to those penal sections of the laws made for the protection of the honest. It was on the other hand a satisfaction for the Court to allow a bankrupt to go out of the court without a stain upon his reputation or good name, to go out with a statement that he so left the court honest and true. This he considered a duty incumbent upon the Court. In the present instance Mr. Vaucher had said upon his oath, that but for the insolvency of Mr. David he would not have been driven to become bankrupt, and that until this he had not the slightest suspicion of the insolvency of the firm, and and he, the judge, believed him when he said this. He would, in all probability, at this moment have been solvent but for this, and the terrible depreciation of property that had fallen upon so many in this colony within the past year. They were, therefore, obliged to succumb to the depressed state of trade. He took pleasure in making this order of discharge.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

—o—

SINGAPORE.

From this port we have files of daily papers to the 7th ult., but they contain no items of what can justly be called news. The English mail of Dec. 26 arrived out on Jan. 30.

It was currently reported that H.E. the Governor would proceed to Batavia shortly after his return from Penang, in company with Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Keppel, K.C.B., in H.M.'s Rodney, for the purpose of making some inquiries regarding the encroachments of the Dutch on the coast of Sumatra. The recent events in Japan, however, are likely to necessitate the Admiral's return to that quarter, and a stay there of some duration.

The Chamber of Commerce had held a special meeting to consider the question of the adulteration of gambier and the proper steps to take with a view to its suppression. A rough draft of a Bill proposed to be submitted to the Legislative Council was laid before the Chamber.

We are glad, says the Straits Times, to hear from Labuan that Governor Hennessey has gone to work there in a spirit and with a vigour which promises well for the future of the place. Every expenditure that will render Labuan attractive, either as a place of commerce or of residence to the Eastern races, is to be commended at this stage of its existence, when it has already obtained the nucleus of a trade, and possesses in its own soil the undeveloped germs of wealth.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

(RECEIVED VIA GALLE, March 5.)

HONG KONG, Feb. 12.

Intelligence received here from Japan announces that the conflict between the confederate Daimios and Stotsbashi, the Shiogoon, continued. Further fighting had taken place.

Admiral Keppel has arrived at Hong Kong on board Her Majesty's ship Rodney.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamship Niphon has been lost, together with her cargo.

[With reference to this telegram we learn from the P. and O. Company that the Niphon was lost in the neighbourhood of Amoy. According to the last advices received by the company from China she was to be placed at Shanghai by the 1st of February to take the mails to Japan. It is therefore assumed that when she was lost she was working her way up to Shanghai, calling at the coast ports without English mails or through cargo. The company's agent at Hong Kong wrote under date of the 14th of January as follows :—"In consequence of the near approach of the Chinese new year (25th inst.) the coast trade continues very depressed." It is not probable, therefore, that she had even a large local cargo.]

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—We have no change for the better to report. The disturbed state of the country, the excitement prevalent in consequence of opening of the new ports, and the approach of the Japanese New Year's holidays, have all operated as causes to prevent any improvement. The business done has been of the most insignificant character and the prices of some principal staples have again declined. Cotton Yarn was down $2 a picul and S.S. Camlets $0.50; Black Velvets have retained their value. No business was reported from Osaka or Hiogo where political intrigue was likely to stop the commencement of the trade for some time to come. Cotton Yarn: Was in moderate demand at quotations, which will be observed to show a fall of from $2 to $3 a picul on last rates. A considerable quantity has been sold ex Neville, badly damaged chiefly, but still at proportionately very low prices. Grey Shirtings: Were in less demand. 7lbs. have fallen slightly. All other descriptions of Cotton piece goods were out of demand and nominal at quotations, except Black Velvets, which have retained their value and were in request. Quotations were:—Cotton Yarn: Nos. 16 to 24, $48 to 50 per picul; Nos. 28 to 32, $58 to 61; Nos. 38 to 42, $54 to 55. Cotton Piece Goods: Grey Shirtings, 7 lbs., $2.75 to 2.90 per piece; do., 8.4 lbs., $3.30 to 3.40; do., 8.6 to 8.8 lbs., $3.30 to 3.40; White Shirtings, 56 to 60 reed, $3.30 to 3.50; do., 64 to 66 reed, $3.70 to 3.80; do., 68 to 72 reed, $3.90 to 4.20; T-Cloths, 6 lbs., $2.25 to 2.50; do., 6.8 to 7 lbs., $2.70 to 2.90.

SHANGHAI.—Grey Shirtings: Have continued in fair inquiry, and several cash sales have been effected at 2.22 to 2.27 for 8.4 lbs. Rates to arrive were much as last quoted, say 2.2C to 2.27 per piece, at which figures some further transactions are reported. 7 lb. goods were worth 1.90 to 1.95 taels per piece. White Shirtings: Have changed hands to arrive at 2.34 to 2.5C for 64 reeds. T-Cloths: The low prices ruling have tempted buyers, and a moderate business has resulted. Woollens: Continue very dull, with the exception of Camlets, which have been in good inquiry at a slight advance on last prices. It seems probable, from the present aspect of affairs, that there will be an active business after the native holidays. Metals: Iron Nail Rod: No business doing, the market remains steady. Stocks were light Hoop, Flat and Round without change. Coals: Supplies were somewhat in excess of demand, still, in one or two kinds rather better rates have been marked. The quotations were:—Grey Shirtings: 7 lbs., $1.9 to 1.9.5 per picul; 8¼ to 8½ lbs., $2.2.2 to 2.2.8; 9 to 9¾ lbs., $2.6 to 2.8.5. White Shirtings: 56 Reed, $2.1.8 to 2.2 per picul; 60 reed, $2.3 to 2.3.5; 64 reed, $2.3.5 to 2.4; 66 reed, $2.4.5 to 2.5.5. T-Cloths: 6 to 7 lbs., $1.4. to 1.9 per picul; 8 to 8.4 lbs., $2.2 to 2.6.

HONG KONG.—There have been a few transactions in piece goods, and thus far the appearance of the market was of decided weakness. Sales reported embrace 2,500 pieces 8.4 Grey Shirtings at $2.95, 1,000 pieces 6 lbs. T-Cloths at $1.90, 50 bales 16-24 Cotton Yarn at $1.30, and 200 pieces Camlets to arrive at $19.25. Raw Cotton was very firm, and the market appears to have a slightly upward tendency. Stocks were very much reduced, and but two cargoes were coming forward. Any activity in the demand for this staple would clear the market.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—Business here in this staple has been rather less than during the period last reported. About 3,800 piculs only have been settled, at prices which have varied considerably, but close as quoted, with hardly any alteration from our last. Stocks were much reduced, there being only about 1,600 piculs of marketable tea in stock, and some teamen were asking an advance on quotations in consequence. But we hear of considerable stocks up country, and foreign buyers do not concede the rise. The quotations were:—Laid down in London, at exchange 4s. 4¼d.:—Finest, 1s. 9½d. to 1s. 10d.; fine, 1s. 6½d. to 1s. 8½d.; good medium, 1s. 3½d. to 1s. 5½d.; medium, 1s. 1⅜d. to 1s. 2½d.; good common, 11¾d. to 1s. 0½d.; common, 10¾d.

SHANGHAI.—Black Teas: In these we have no change to report. The stock consisted exclusively of a class of tea which continues to be in excess on the London market, and only a few isolated buyers have been willing, in consequence, to concede the higher rates demanded. Arrivals have been few, so that notwithstanding the small amount of settlements the stock shows a farther diminution. The settlements comprise:—Exchange at 6s. and freight £3 per ton:—1,200 chests Oonam (common Congou) at tls. 18 to 18.5, equal to 1s. ½d. to 1s. 1d.; 1,200 chests Ningchow (third crop in half-chests) at tls. 19 to 21, equal to 1s. 1¼d. to 1s. 2½d.; 200 chests Hohow (common flat leaf) at tls. 16.7.5, equal to 11⅜d. Reshipments, 600 chests. Stock, 7,400 chests, against 14,000 at same date last year. Green Teas: A very active competition has absorbed the few supplies that have come to hand immediately on arrival. Prices again show a marked rise in all kinds, but the lower grades have proportionately commanded the highest advance. Compared with last year we find common Japan and Shanghai packed teas about forty per cent. dearer, these being the grades which a short crop is expected chiefly to benefit. American and English buyers have shown themselves equally eager to purchase, and the three chops of good tea left in stock were being held over the China new year in the expectation of still higher prices. The settlements comprise:—14,000 half-chests, Moyune, common to fine, at Tls. 38.0.0 to 45.5.0, equal to 2s. 1d. to 2s. 5¼d; 4,000 half-chests, Teenkai, common to fair, at Tls. 35.0.0 to 44.0.0, equal to 1s. 11d. to 2s. 4½d.; 3,000 half-chests Fychow, common to medium, at Tls. 32.0.0 to 36.0.0, equal to 1s. 9d. to 1s. 11⅜d.; 3,000 half-chests Pingsuey, common to medium, at Tls. 34.0.0 to 37.5.0, equal to 1s. 10½d. to 2s. 0¼d.; 4,000 half-chests Shanghai-packed common to fair Japan medium, at Tls. 28.0.0 to 39.0.0, equal to 1s. 6¾d. to 1s. 11½d. Reshipments, 14,000 chests. Stock, 5,000 half-chests of all kinds, against 38,000 at same date last year.

HANKOW.—By advices to the 18th January we learn that the total transactions in Tea had been the sale of 1,400 chests common Oonam, at Tls. 12.3.5 to 13.7 per picul, prices nearly on a par with the sales at Shanghai. About 1,000 chests had been shipped to Shanghai on teamen's account, and about the same quantity more was expected from the country to complete the supply for the season, there being no stock on the market.

KIUKIANG.—We have advices from this port to the 20th January. Black Tea: The total settlements amounted to 700 packages—500 Kiukiang packed tea at 13.3 to 15 tls., and 200 half-chests Ningchow at 14⅛ tls. One chop had been shipped on native account, and no stock was left. Green Teas: There had been two settlements, amounting to 500 half-chests Moyune at 26.2.5 to 27 tls., or fully 3 tls. below prices here; the other arrivals had been at once shipped to Shanghai, leaving only 700 packages in stock, some 10,000 packages more being expected from the country before the close of the season, leaf of common quality being very cheap, and the high rates paid at Shanghai tempting speculators.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—Prices have been gradually rising until an increase of $50 has been fully established, and the market closes firm. A large business would have been done in fine silks, therefore, had supplies been available. These, however, have been very meagre, and the stock was reduced from 550 to 400 piculs, most of which was of inferior sorts. Anything good was taken up immediately on arrival from the country, or on its redemption from godowns where it has been lying in pawn, in which position there is no doubt that a considerable quantity of good silk remains. The high prices ruling may be expected to bring this out, and after the new year's holidays, which would commence on the 25th January, we may confidently look for an active business with a well stocked market. Quotations laid down in London at exchange 4s. 4¼d. were:—Mybash and Sinshu: Extra, 33s. 3d. to 34s. 1d.; best, 31s. 4d. to 33s.; medium, 29s. to 31s.; inferior, 23s. 2d. to 27s. Oshu: Best, 30s. 2d. to 31s. 6d.; medium, 25s. 6d. to 27s. 6d.; inferior, 21s. 2d. to 23s. 6d. Koshu: Best, 26s. 8d. to 28s. 3d.; medium, 23s. 6d. to 24s. 8d.; inferior, 21s. 7d. to 22s. 9d. Sodai: Best, 26s. 8d. to 27s. 10d.; medium, 24s. to 25s. 6d.; inferior, 21s. 7d. to 22s. 4d.

SHANGHAI.—There has been a very excited Silk Market, and a large business has resulted, the more favourable advices of the Home Market inducing foreigners to operate largely. Settlements were estimated at fully 1,800 bales, including 500 bales settled at the close of last mail. The greater proportion of the transactions consist of medium and second crop Silks, chiefly Tsatlees, many parcels of which were rejected after inspection, only to be settled at much higher prices subsequently; in fact no Silk has appeared too inferior for some Chinese brokers, who purchased all parcels refused, and resold them at a profit to foreigners. Prices have considerably advanced, and may be quoted 15 to 25 taels per picul higher for Chop Tsatlees; 30 to 50 taels per picul higher for medium and common Tsatlees; 15 to 30 taels per picul higher for Karshing and other Taysaams; 15 to 35 taels per picul higher for Hainings, &c., &c. At one period the Chinese succeeded in obtaining almost any prices they chose to ask for their Silks. The unsold stock, at one time reduced to a few hundred bales, was estimated at about 1,200 bales, chiefly undesirable descriptions.

MEETING OF HONG KONG MERCHANTS, &c.

A numerously attended meeting of bankers, merchants, and other gentlemen interested in the colony of Hong Kong (a list of whom will be found below) was held on Monday, the 2nd inst., at the London Tavern.

Mr. JAMES WHITE, M.P., who took the chair in accordance with the wish of the meeting, opened the proceedings and said: I recognise amongst my old friends here many who have much larger interests in the colony, and who are much better qualified than I am, from having more recently visited and resided in Hong Kong, to take the chair. I am, however, most anxious to co-operate with you in our common object, and without the slightest desire to control your proceedings, to lend my humble aid towards the redress of those grievances which all who are interested in Hong Kong are complaining of. This is a preliminary meeting, and we do not so much expect to move resolutions or to give effect to any decisions that we may come to, but rather to hear what any gentleman has to say, and see what action it will be best for us to take.

Mr. DUDDELL: I think it would be the best to propose at once that w resolve ourselves into a co-operative association to aid the Hong Kong Association, and for that purpose it will be proper to elect a committee. Having constituted ourselves into such a body as this we shall then have a status, and be prepared to discuss the various topics affecting the interests of Hong Kong. I think it will be best that the present meeting should at once proceed to elect a committee, and that thenceforth we shall all earnestly co-operate to improve the condition of Hong Kong. An old resident in the colony, Mr. Lapraik, has just put a list of names into my hand, but we must first have the sanction of the meeting for our general object, that is, the formation of an association to co-operate with the Hong Kong Association, and I shall be obliged if some gentleman will make a motion to that effect. I had perhaps better first explain the object for which the Hong Kong Association was inaugurated. Hong Kong is a Crown colony, and does not possess a Representative Legislative Assembly. There are three mercantile gentlemen to five or six colonial officials who form the Executive Government of the colony. Sir John Bowring endeavoured to improve the legislative position of the colony, but Mr. Labouchere put his endeavours upon one side, and from that time until now, for more than 15 years the colony has remained under the control of the Governor and a majority of Crown servants. As you know, a variety of grievances have cropped up in the community; the English and foreign European residents have from time to time called aloud for redress, but have always been overridden by the official element in the Government as at present constituted, and have never yet been able to make themselves heard in England. The first thing of which they complain is the enormous tax of £20,000 a year levied upon the small European community of Hong Kong as a military contribution. (Hear, hear.) Against this they contend that Hong Kong is a second Gibraltar in that part of the world, and that it protects not only the interests of the commerce of England but of Europe at large, as there is no other great military or naval station of any other Power so close to China, and all Europe reaps the benefit of this establishment, which the European community of Hong Kong is compelled to support. (Hear.) I am an ex-resident of Hong Kong, and for a long period I worked hard there, and did much to make it a colony; and therefore I feel deeply aggrieved to see it in its present deplorable condition. I am informed that the Chinese population is quitting the colony, in consequence of the arbitrary legislation constantly changing and extremely irksome to which they are subjected. The public works are being carried on in a most slovenly slip-shod manner. At a time when numbers of able and competent men would be willing to go out to erect the Praya and hospitals, to lay out the streets and drains, we are under the Surveyor-General, one of the officials of the colony in whose charge is the whole of these works and repairs, which are done by a most inadequate staff of Chinamen. (Hear, hear.) I will not further take up your time. When we have formed our association, which shall have a status—but until then we have none; and I at least feel that I am presuming to attack the Government of the colony and its ordinances. I therefore beg to propose that we form ourselves into an association to co-operate with and aid the Hong Kong Association, such association to be constituted by all the gentlemen now present, and under the guidance of a committee to be now proposed.

Mr. LAPRAIK seconded the motion.

After some conversation as to the terms of the resolution,

The CHAIRMAN put it as follows:—"That a Hong Kong Association be now formed, and be constituted of the gentlemen now present, and of such others as from local concerns, or feeling an interest in the colony, may be disposed to join."

Carried unanimously.

Mr. LAPRAIK then moved that the committee be composed as follows:—Messrs. James White, M.P., R. Gilman, W. Walkinshaw, W. H. Vacher, C. J. F. Stuart (Oriental Bank), J. Whittal, Thos. Sutherland, Ed. Halton, D. Lapraik, Geo. Duddell.

The CHAIRMAN: Has any gentleman any other name to suggest? We shall probably have to wait upon the Duke of Buckingham, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with a plain temperate statement of facts, and bring the matter before the Imperial Government as well as before the public in this country. What other steps there are to be taken will rest with the committee which, if I may judge at all, will not commit the association to any course without first convening you and taking your opinion. We desire no assumption of power, but to co-operate so that we may all work together for the common object. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. GILMAN suggested that Mr. Mercer, late Colonial Secretary, should be added to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN then put the resolution, which was also agreed to unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN: We shall be glad to have the suggestions of any gentleman present who has lately been in Hong Kong, and can afford us any information.

Mr. GILMAN: As my name is on the committee, I should like to say a few words, but I do not know whether, in expressing my own sentiments, I am expressing the opinions of the gentlemen with whom I am associated. I think it is desirable that the committee should be informed of the particular objects to which we shall have to direct our attention. We have already received a copy of a petition from the Hong Kong Association addressed to the House of Commons. The petition itself has not arrived and I do not know when it is coming, or to whom it will be sent; but having glanced over that petition, it appears to me that it does not treat the question in the most judicious manner. I do not think that the case of Hong Kong is stated in the best way, and other things which ought not are mixed up with it. I allude to the question of the Praya we are called upon to repair in consequence of the injuries done by the late typhoons; but whether we are justly called upon or not is a matter to be decided by a legal tribunal, and I believe I am right in saying that an action has been commenced by the Government against Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co. to try the question. If the law decides that the owners are to make the repairs, we cannot expect the Government to step in between us and the law. That question, I think, should not be mixed up with the general case. The most substantial grievance is the tax of £20,000 a-year as a military contribution, in the benefit of which all China shares, and which it is most unjust to charge upon Hong Kong alone. (Hear, hear.) It is to this matter, I think, that the efforts of the association should be at first directed. The committee when it meets will have the opportunity of discussing what other matters it should direct its attention to; but I should like to know what it is intended to do, for I should not like to be on the committee unless I could do so with all my heart. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. DUDDELL: Allow me to explain my idea of the objects of the association. First of all, we have to obtain a status with an active and willing committee supported by the eclât which it will receive from such an influential meeting as this. Having done this, we shall gain a hearing when we proceed to concert our measures, and I do not think the committee is likely to ask anything that is not correct or proper. The Praya question will, no doubt, be legally decided. The petition is coming home, and not being a Parliamentary agent I cannot say whether we can interfere with the terms of it. I think it would be desirable to get the means to employ able legal assistance, or obtain some one to sit at the board of our com mittee as our Parliamentary agent or honorary solicitor. In doing this we shall steer clear of all shoals or misadventures. I suggest, therefore, that we at once raise a subscription to supply the sinews of war wherewith to employ a solicitor to aid us in any attempt that we may make to benefit Hong Kong. There are many matters on which the Hong Kong Association will have to refer to us for advice which they cannot get in China at any price, and which we shall by this means be able to afford them.

The CHAIRMAN: As our arrangements are still in an immature condition I may be pardoned if I say what I think the committee is intended to effect. In the first place we ought to draw up a memorial to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, setting forth in temperate terms the pleas which we have to urge with reference to the military contribution, the Praya grievance, and the magnitude of the assessments, which in some cases, as I can testify, are largely in excess of the absolute rental. We shall also be incorporated as a general association to suggest what we think will benefit the colony, or point out what we think will be detrimental to its interests. For instance, the establishment of the Mint, and similar questions. I must say, I think we shall act unwisely if we identify ourselves with this petition. There is much in it with which I for one do not agree. We have all of us been in the colonies, and we know—perhaps it is the climate, or perhaps it is not having representative institutions to act as a vent—that there is a tone of invective and animadversion in them which would not be tolerated in England. We should especially avoid adopting this kind of language; it would be highly mischievous if we mean to approach the Colonial Office. Whilst we wish to co-operate with the Hong Kong Association, I should be sorry to identify ourselves with, or adopt every resolution that might come from it. If we do our influence will be much diminished, and our status quite destroyed. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. H. B. GIBB: I presume you will look to information from the Hong Kong Association to guide you?

The CHAIRMAN: We wish to act with the Hong Kong Association in doing what is best for the colony, but not to identify ourselves absolutely with it. Our union will be mutual, but it is really too much to expect that we should accept, without consideration of our own, every determination that the Hong Kong Association may come to. That would place us in a false position.

Mr. GIBB: It struck me that this association was to carry out the views of the Hong Kong Association.

The CHAIRMAN: Would you ask us to adopt this petition? (Hear.)

Mr. GIBB: I think that our memorial ought to be framed in accordance with that petition, only in a different shape.

Mr. KINGSMILL: We are not to be a mere echo of the Hong Kong Association. We are quite as much interested in the welfare of the colony. Many of us have only left it a short time, and many of us are going back again. It would be unwise to place us here in the position of a mere echo of the association in Hong Kong. We shall be glad of information as to the state of the colony, and to act with it in everything for its benefit, but we still ought to have an opinion of our own as to the best way of carrying out these views. We can both of us be independent, and still act side by side. (Hear, hear.) I have a strong opinion on the Praya question, but now that is referred to a court of law I think it would be foolish to try and take it away. The chances are it will not end in the Hong Kong court, but will go to the very highest tribunal of all—the Privy Council, and we may feel assured, whatever be the decision, that it will be strictly in accordance with the law. We must not put ourselves in opposition to the law, but if the decision be unfavourable we must try to have the law altered for the future. Allow me also to make a suggestion with respect to one matter to which the committee ought to direct their attention. It has long appeared to me that the constitution of the Legislative Council wanted altering. (Hear, hear.) There is too great a predominance of the official element in it. It is mockery that there should be only three non-official members. They can, it is true, raise their voices; but what is that to the men who have the majority of the seats? What is the good of raising their voices? They may protest until they are black in the face, but the official element will control everything. Take the case of the estimates. They are laid before a committee, but what alteration can we get made in any one of them? They are made up by the Governor beforehand, and all the Council has to do is to pass them. Many of the officials have been friends of mine, but still, standing here, I cannot conceal my opinion of the waste that has been going on. The Surveyor-General's department has for years been literally throwing money into the sea. Most of the public works have been of no use, and many of them have had to be done two or three times over. If we had the money that has been wasted in this manner available now this £20,000 a year would not trouble us much. We want an entire reform of the Administration; we want a local element of sufficient power to control the expenditure—to say that this shall be done and that shall not be done. At present the Governor has absolute control over everything. He goes out for his five years, and avails himself of the opportunity to air his own hobbies. We know the grievance of the water frontages. That was a Governor's hobby, although all practical men at the time said it would never be of any good. Before I went to China I knew something of bricks and mortar; but I used to blush for shame to see the wretched way in which the public work used to be done there. It was bad altogether. Some gentleman has mentioned the Mint. I am afraid that the Government was not altogether responsible for that. Great expectations were entertained as to what would result from the Mint. It has cost a lot of money, a long time, a great quantity of materials and land, and there it is—of no use whatever. Then, again, with respect to the roads and bridges; the way in which they are laid out and constructed could only result in a most grievous waste of money. Bearing this in mind, it would be well if the committee would collect the principal facts with respect to this expenditure during the last few years, and lay them before the Duke of Buckingham. We must press upon him the necessity of altering the constitution of the Legislative Council. There must be less of the official and more of the local element.

Mr. CLEVERLY: I can hardly stand by and hear such attacks on the department with which I was connected, and especially on myself, who as Surveyor-General had charge of the public works. Those who knew me then know how heavy a charge that was. I was singlehanded; I had no assistance either in my office or out of my office. I had to do all my own office work and then to go out to make my surveys and superintend all works. It was utterly impossible for me to say whether they were well or ill done, for I had no overseers for that duty, except perhaps a soldier or a sailor whom I had to instruct as I best could. I complained time after time, and if gentlemen will call for some of my reports they will see how I suffered from want of overseers, and will arrive at a correct knowledge of what they are pleased to call my laches.

Mr. KINGSMILL: I had not the slightest intention of attacking Mr. Cleverly personally, but I must thank him for so exposing the very bad state of things to which I wished to call attention.

Mr. ARTHUR SMITH: I think it would be as well in the first place to communicate with the association in Hong Kong, for they will think that they are quite as competent to form an opinion on the spot as we are here. Neither do I believe that they will submit to have anything that they suggest put into any other form by any committee in this country; but knowing the gentlemen who are going to take an active part on the committee, I feel little doubt that they will cordially assent to have their views put into shape by such a committee, knowing perfectly well the trusty hands to which this duty will be assigned. I think it would be better to leave the committee to decide with respect to drawing up the memorial.

Mr. DUDDELL: I do not wish to supersede but to co-operate with the association in Hong Kong, and it will be our first duty to communicate with them. We have all of us been I believe, by the last mail, requested to co-operate with them, and I have no doubt that whilst we are communicating with Hong Kong and getting their sanction to our united co-operation, we might also communicate with the Secretary of State and request him to assist us in preventing the flight of the Chinese from the colony in consequence of the incessant annoyances to which they are subjected from the perpetual changes in the police regulations. I have just received the last ordinance for the prevention of contagious diseases. Its clauses are the most extraordinary ever issued to an immoral, ignorant people like the Chinese. It is not surprising that they leave the colony when they are pestered with such ordinances as these—with Chinese protectors, and the police visiting them at all seasons, and prying into their most domestic affairs. If this is to go on, you must not be astonished if Hong Kong sinks into a mere fishing village, and Canton rises on its ashes. I am afraid, however, that we cannot approach the Colonial Office without some authority from the colony, for it is contrary to the regulations to do so, except through the colony. We have, however, a precedent before us. The community of Singapore has already constituted a Straits Settlements Association; but we must be cautious.

Mr. H. B. GIBB: No doubt the Contagious Diseases Act is irksome to the Chinese, but it is of great importance to the colony. The evil had risen to such a pitch, that it was absolutely necessary to deal with it.

The CHAIRMAN: Were you a member of the council?

Mr. DUDDELL: All I can say is, that the Chinese are leaving the colony through fear of it.

Mr. A. SMITH: It has already been of great benefit to the military.

The CHAIRMAN: Does any other gentleman desire to make any remarks? No one coming forward,

Mr. VACHER proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, which, having been seconded in several quarters, at once was carried by acclamation, and the proceedings terminated.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1868.

THE MEETING OF HONG KONG MERCHANTS, &c.

THE meeting which we announced in our last issue was held at the London Tavern on the 2nd inst., and a full report of the proceedings will be found in another column. It was numerously attended, and must be considered in all respects a satisfactory demonstration; while from the unanimity that prevailed it may be anticipated that the committee will have little difficulty in carrying out the objects in view. It will be seen that the justice of our strictures on the Hong Kong petition was fully confirmed by the chairman as well as by other speakers. At the first meeting of the committee (to be held in the course of a few days) a memorial to the Duke of BUCKINGHAM, Secretary of State for the Colonies, will be drawn up, to be afterwards presented by a deputation. Until they have taken this step, and ascertained from the manner of their reception the feelings entertained by his Grace regarding their grievances, the committee cannot well know on what ground they stand. In the Duke however they will find a man who gives close personal attention to matters thus brought to his notice, and who invariably receives such deputations with patience and courtesy. The question of the liability of Crown lessees to rebuild the Praya destroyed by the late typhoons is purely a legal one, and should be allowed to remain so. Should the decision from Hong Kong be an adverse one, the appeal case will at once be placed in the hands of Messrs. FRESHFIELDS, who will be supported by the most able counsel. This is undoubtedly the best course to adopt in this particular case, but we think that on other points, the committee will do well to conduct their affairs as far as possible, without being fettered by legal advice and forms.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS ASSOCIATION.

A GENERAL meeting of this association was held at the offices of Mr. BOUSTEAD, on the 21st ult., to consider the recent Acts of the Straits Legislature, and questions of revenue and expenditure generally. Mr. JOHN CRAUFORD, the president, was among those present, and Mr. W. NAPIER took the chair. With regard to the Passenger Ships Act of 1867, several condemnatory resolutions were passed, to the effect that the Act, so far as it applies to ships trading between ports within the colony, is totally unnecessary, as no abuse or overcrowding calls for it; that it is valuable only as applied to ships going distant voyages, such as to Arabia and China, and should be restricted to such; that the three days' notice of sailing to be given to the Surveying Office by every passenger ship, is vexatious and oppressive; and that the penalties for contravention of the Act are arbitrary and excessive. The well known passage in Governor ORD'S speech, hinting at the possible "establishment of import or other duties" was then read, and resolutions passed condemning it as subversive of the vital principles on which the Government of the Straits is founded. On both these subjects it was decided to communicate the opinions of the Association to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The Dutch encroachments in Sumatra were next discussed, and it was decided to solicit the intervention of Her MAJESTY'S Government to check them; and the business concluded with a resolution to support the petition now on its way from Penang, regarding the omission of that port from the new mail contract. The Straits Association has certainly commenced its work with praiseworthy vigour.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE FAR EAST.

THE Army Estimates for the present year, just issued, include some items of special interest to our readers,—namely, those relating to the military forces maintained in China, Japan, the Straits, &c. The "Hong Kong Corps," which it was last year proposed to raise for special service in that colony, does not appear at all, a regiment of native Indian troops (880 men) being substituted.* Hong Kong—under which head are included all China and Japan—is set down for a total force of 2,685 men; and the whole military expenditure for this station (including works) is estimated at £233,956, of which £20,000 is to be repaid by the colony. The Straits Settlements including Labuan, take 1,609 men, at a cost of £97,398, of which £59,300 is to be refunded from the Colonial Treasury. Ceylon figures in the estimates for 2,084 men, costing £146,824, while the amount to be returned is no less than £160,000. Thus Ceylon pays a sum actually in excess of the entire cost of its military establishment; the Straits Settlements, contribute nearly two-thirds of it; and Hong Kong only a trifle over one-twelfth. As a mere matter of proportion therefore, Hong Kong would seem to have the least reason of all three to complain; but it must always be remembered, firstly, that Ceylon and the Straits are rich in natural productions, while Hong Kong is a mere barren rock; and, secondly, that the force set down to Hong Kong is really for service in all parts of China and Japan, while that in each of the other colonies is solely for its own protection. We may add, that the colonies take altogether 50,025 men, at a total cost of £3,388,023, the aggregate return being £365,700. Canada, Nova Scotia, and the West Indies return nothing.

TELEGRAPHS TO INDIA AND THE FAR EAST.

THE very seasonable question lately asked in the House of Commons by Captain VIVIAN, relative to the telegraphic communication with India, was answered by Sir S. NORTHCOTE in a manner which showed that the members of the present Cabinet are fully alive to the national importance of the subject, and may, when they have leisure to devote attention to the subject, do something to atone for the culpable indifference of previous administrations. Perhaps the moderate guarantee of 5 per cent. asked for by the Anglo-Indian Company will ere long be accorded; and this is the only thing wanting to enable its projectors to carry out their praiseworthy scheme, regarding which The Times, in an able leader, remarks:—"No improvements "which can possibly be made in the overland lines via Russia. "Prussia, and Turkey, can deprive this proposal of its great "recommendations, because, even if they were successful, they "would merely end in throwing an immense amount of traffic "into the single cable now laid in the Persian Gulf. Three "land lines would be carrying messages to one submarine "cable, where a block would inevitably occur." There is no doubt that the advantages of another line of communication with India, via the Red Sea are too great to be overlooked, and the project will doubtless be shortly carried into execution by the Telegraph Construction Company, into whose province it legitimately falls; but there are other lines connected with the East which equally command the sympathy of the commercial community, and have no slight claim to the consideration of the Imperial Parliament. There are our communications with China and Australia. True it is that information is already quickly conveyed to and from the former by way of Russia as well as by Japan and America, but these lines are likely to be interrupted at any moment by political complications, and the same may be said of Messrs. SIEMENS' new land line. It should be our endeavour, as it is our duty, to ensure the safety as well as the rapidity of our communications with the seat of our important trade in the Far East, as well as with our valuable Australian colonies. How this desirable end is to be attained with the best chance of success, the least delay, and the minimum of cost to the public is a question which does not appear to be involved in such great difficulties as might at first be supposed, and the solution of which simply consists in the extension of a land line from the Tenasserim provinces to Singapore, through the native States of the Malay Peninsula. From the best information obtainable, the plan does not present any obstacle which has not been already repeatedly overcome in India, Burmah, Sumatra and Java; and by a comparison of the cost of similar lines in the above countries it will be easy to form a fairly correct estimate of the cost of construction and maintenance of such an undertaking. There can be no doubt that it would be infinitely less costly in the first instance, and less expensive to keep in order than a cable laid in those treacherous waters, and also would be put in efficient working order in a much shorter time. The immediate consequence of the completion of this line would be the transmission of messages to and from China in fourteen days under ordinary, and nine days under favourable circumstances, as steamers to and from China are daily passing Singapore. The Netherlands Government are prepared to lay a cable between Malacca and Bancalis, and thence through Sumatra and Java to Sourabaya, so that Sydney would also be able to communicate with London in fifteen days with ordinary, and twelve days with favourable opportunities; the communication between Java and Cape York, where the Australian telegraphic line would probably terminate, being kept up by fast steamers running between Brisbane and Batavia. With time, these communications would be improved by cables laid between Singapore and China, Java and Australia; but in the meanwhile the plan suggested would, if carried out, prove a very considerable improvement upon existing arrangements, would be of easy accomplishment, can be put into execution without loss of time, and would offer, from the comparatively small outlay required, a fair prospect of remuneration.

* Orders have been transmitted to Madras for this force to proceed at once to Hong Kong.

DEATH OF ARTHUR ANDERSON, ESQ.

It is with deep regret that we record the death, on the 28th ultimo, of Mr. Arthur Anderson, who was one of the originators, in 1840, of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, of which he has been chairman since 1862. He was also chairman of the Crystal Palace Company, and director of the Union Steamship Company and the Marine and General Mutual Life Assurance Society. In private life the deceased gentleman was greatly respected, and his death will be mourned by a very large circle of friends. He was in his seventy-seventh year.

Mr. Anderson was born at Lerwick, in Shetland, and in early life joined the navy as purser's clerk. He subsequently left the navy, joined Mr. Willcox in London, and became a partner with him in 1822. He married the sister of Mr. Thomas Hill, of Southampton, whom he has survived but a few years. In Lerwick he was much beloved. He there founded schools, recently built cottages or almshouses for the poor, and took much interest in improving the mode of fishing and opening the trade for the staple in the locality. So much was he respected that, some years since, when he became candidate for the Orkneys, he defeated Mr. Dundas and the hereditary interest of that family and sat in Parliament accordingly. Mr. Anderson and Mr. Willcox joined the late Mr. William Bourne, Mr. James Hartley, and others, and laid the foundation of the P. and O. Company, of which he became one of the foremost supporters, and has ever since continued a steadfast friend. He directed the negotiations for the new contract just concluded with Government, and on its accomplishment it really seemed as if his work in this world were accomplished. A school was erected and maintained in Southampton for several hundred children mainly through his liberality, and entirely through his influence.

The funeral took place on the 5th inst. at the Norwood Cemetery, near the residence of the deceased, and was attended by a large circle of friends and relations, including all the directors of the P. and O. Company, the two secretaries, and others in the office at Leadenhall-street, as well as the captains now at home. Mr. Thos. Hill, his brother-in-law, and Captain Bain, who married his niece, were the chief mourners. The cortege on arrival at the grounds proceeded to the Dissenting chapel, for Mr. Anderson was of that order, and did not forget to give assistance to the formation of new chapels, &c. A very appropriate address was given by the officiating minister, in which he pointed out some of the varied acts which distinguished the deceased as a man of sympathy with the trials of human nature.

The Times has passed a very high eulogium on his worth and merits in the following words:—

"Few men were better known or esteemed in the City than the deceased for although in early life he came to London a simple-minded Shetlander; yet he very soon by sheer force of character took up a high position in concert with his partner, the late Mr. Wilcox (who represented Southampton till his death), among the rising firms of the day connected with shipping. His enterprising disposition prompted the establishment, 32 years ago, of a steam communication to the Peninsula, which afterwards extended its operations to the Mediterranean, and subsequently became the Peninsular and Oriental Company, possessing now the largest fleet of steamers in the world. During all this period he took a leading part in its management, and commanded the entire confidence of his colleagues in the direction as well as the shareholders. In politics he was an earnest Liberal, and in Parliament a most useful member, and one of that band of worthies who, in concert with his friend, the late Mr. Cobden, determined that free trade should be the law of the land, and never abated their efforts until it was accomplished. In private life he was, in the highest sense, a large-hearted man; for when his allowances from the Peninsular and Oriental Company had risen, under an early arrangement, to a very splendid annual income, he dedicated a large portion to the establishment of schools for the children of the employés at Southampton, and the foundation of a good service fund for retired officers. His donations to all public institutions for the benefit of seafaring people were munificent, and nobody with a genuine appeal to his generosity ever asked in vain. Like most of our useful men who leave their mark behind them, he was a hard worker to the last, and presided at the late annual meeting of the company. He was then suffering from bronchitis, but lacked none of his wonted fire. The effort, however, was beyond his strength, and although he had intervals of comparative relief, he sank under repeated attacks, bequeathing a name that will ever be associated by those who knew him with the best attributes of our nature."

THE TEA SEASON, 1868-69.

THE following is a list of clippers expected to be ready to load at Foochow or Hankow with the new season's teas. It is possible that a steamer will also be despatched:—

Taeping	Sir Lancelot	Eliza Shaw
Lahloo	Black Prince	Challenger
Spindrift	Whiteadder	Min
Ariel	Falcon	Maitland
Undine	Chinaman	Ada
Flying Spur	Taitsing	Gossamer
Ziba	Serica	John R. Worcester
Yangtsze	Golden Spur	Leander.
Fiery Cross	Titania

WE are authorised to contradict the following statement which recently appeared in the Java Bode, and was quoted in our last issue:—

"We understand from good authority that the Netherlands India Steam Company will next year open a line with their boats via Singapore to Ceylon, Aden, and Suez, as well as a monthly line from Batavia via Singapore to Hong Kong and a line to Australia. Mr. S. van Hulstyn, superintendent of the company, will proceed to Europe by the first mail in January to make the arrangements."

No such plan is contemplated by the Netherlands India Steam Company. The only portion of the paragraph founded upon fact is that announcing the return to Europe of Mr. VAN HULSTYN, which is unfortunately necessitated by his ill-health.

WE understand that the correspondence regarding the resignation of Mr. LANGDON DAVIES, late of the Hong Kong Mint, which was to have been moved for by Mr. VANDERBYL, is found to be too voluminous for publication.

THE Singapore and Penang testimonials to General CAVENAGH will be presented at a banquet to be held at the Albion Tavern on Saturday, the 14th inst.

A BLUE BOOK has been issued containing the reports of the Foreign Commissioners at the treaty ports of China, with an analysis of Chinese commerce during the year 1866.

HIOGO AS A PORT.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—By the last accounts from Japan we are told of a melancholy accident having happened to the boat of an American man-of-war, by which the Commodore and thirteen men lost their lives. This is stated to have occurred on the bar at the mouth of the Osaka river, while the Commodore was on his way from the anchorage at Hiogo to visit the city of Osaka.

It is, perhaps, too late now to discuss the relative advantages of Hiogo as a seaport, but this melancholy accident leads to a question which may be natural to any one acquainted with the relations of the three places. Why was Hiogo preferred to Sakkai as the anchorage or port of Osaka? Sakkai has always been looked upon by the natives as occupying that position, and has advantages over Hiogo in several ways, and among others in being connected with Osaka by a straight broad road. Hiogo, on the other hand, is separated by one or two broad rivers requiring the use of ferry-boats, and the passage entirely stopped when the rivers are in flood; while if the sea route is followed there is a distance of fourteen miles to be crossed in an open boat, with the risk of being capsized when within hail of one's destination, and of braving those sudden storms which get up without warning, and are overwhelming while they last.

Sakkai seems, so far as native accounts can lead us to judge, to be in many ways preferable to Hiogo, as being nearer the open sea, and being more conveniently situated for interior commercial purposes. Why then was Hiogo settled upon as the port? It must have been agreed to by Mr. Harris on the recommendation of the Japanese commissioners, probably with the political view of confining foreign trade to a spot where it could be more easily controlled on a small Desima-like piece of ground, which, moreover, is liable to be submerged by any of those earthquake-waves not very uncommon on this part of the coast.—I am, Sir, &c.,

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS IN THE STRAITS.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—Justice is said to be immutable, and to be the same in all parts of the world. This may or may not be true, I am not able to decide; but that justices are not the same all over the world is an evident fact. In your issue of Feb. 27th you informed us that Captain Ord was ordered to proceed to Malacca to assume the duties of Police Magistrate and Commissioner of the Court of Requests. That just proves what I affirm. To administer justice to his fellow beings is rightly esteemed one of the greatest privileges to which a man can attain, and to insist upon wisdom and conscientiousness being represented on the bench, is the right and duty of a people. That Captain Ord does not possess a sufficient amount of the latter quality to dispense justice I do not for a moment imply, but I beg leave to doubt whether he possesses the legal knowledge to entitle him to dispose of all the civil and criminal cases that may arise in the colony of Malacca. The captain (who is, of course, a member of the Governor's family) came out with the little party who accompanied Sir Harry Ord to the field of his governmental duties last year, and, previously to that time, he is said to have followed the honourable but agreeable profession of a half-pay officer at home. Scarcely arrived in the colony, he was appointed Acting-Commissioner of the Court of Requests at Singapore, in which capacity his utter ignorance of the Malay language, and of the customs of the natives, are said to have lent to his decisions an unusual degree of impartiality. We now find that his brother the Governor has not been blind to this magisterial aptness of the captain, and no doubt the promotion to the onerous position of Administrator of Public Justice of Malacca is the result. But, as I said before, it may be doubted whether, despite the personal esteem which his brother the Governor evidently cultivates for Captain Ord, the good people of Malacca have not been, to some extent, victimised in having so important a public office filled by a mere soldier.

If there is one means of maintaining a hold upon the Easterns subject to our rule, other than force of arms, it is by impressing them with our intellectual superiority and moral greatness through our courts of justice; and it is upon these public grounds that I beg leave to protest against any appointment to judicial functions that might in the remotest degree be ascribed to nepotism, and not to the conscientious fulfilment of the duties of a Governor towards those whom he has been deputed to govern, and whose welfare is so largely in his keeping.

Hoping the Malacca people will keep a strict account of the sayings and doings of their new judge,—I remain, your obedient servant,

Ramsgate, March 2, 1868. ANTI-HUMBUG.

TREATY REVISION AND THE CHINESE MISSION.

(DAILY NEWS.)

The appointment of a Chinese Embassy to the Christian Treaty Powers, with an American diplomatist at its head and an English diplomatist as its secretary, is an event of singular interest, and, it may turn out, of great importance. The explanations as to the probable motives of the Peking Government given by our Shanghai correspondent throw great light on what has taken foreign interests, both in China and out of China, by surprise. That Mr. Burlinghame will be well received at Washington, whither he first goes, and at London and Paris, where he is expected in May and June next, may be regarded as certain; and, as Mr. Wade, the First Secretary of the English Embassy, has recently arrived in London, Mr. Burlinghame will, it may be anticipated, find our Foreign-office somewhat better informed on Chinese affairs than there is reason to believe it has recently been; for, of late, it can hardly be doubted our Foreign-office has been drifting a good deal in its Chinese policy, if, indeed, it has had any.

The European treaties with China come under revision this year, and the interval between now and the arrival of Mr. Burlinghame may be well occupied by Lord Stanley in mastering for himself the somewhat difficult question how best to give full efficacy to the Treaty of Tientsin without disturbing our relations with China; in coming to some general understanding with the French and other Governments affected by the treaty as to the reception of the Chinese proposals; and in considering the elaborate memorials from the English communities and merchants in China, which have lately been sent home. First of all, however, Lord Stanley will have to make up his mind whether the negotiations on the treaty, which now arise out of its provisions, and which all parties concerned regard as inevitable, will have to be carried to a conclusion in Europe or in China, where only such negotiations have hitherto been conducted.

A decision on this last point will, of course, somewhat depend on the powers conferred by the Chinese Government on Mr. Burlinghame. Unless they are of the most complete kind, authorising him to give as well as to take on the part of the Chinese, and justifying him in concluding arrangements which there is no reason to doubt the Government he represents will ratify, useful as Mr. Burlinghame's explanations of Chinese affairs even then may be, it may rather retard than advance business to enter into actual negotiations with him. But even should Mr. Burlinghame's powers to act for the Peking Cabinet prove ample, the question arises, is our Foreign-office itself in a position to deal here with the revision of the treaty? Has it made up its mind whether to insist on, or to abandon, the full advantages of the treaty as to the right it gives of free access to, and residence in, the interior of China, which up to this time has been a nullity? Has it resolved on the nature and quality of the pressure to be placed on the Chinese Government, if it resolve to hold that Government to its engagement in the treaty of Tientsin?

On these two questions really depend our future policy with China. For there is not wanting reason to apprehend that the Chinese Government seeks, without closing the foreign ports, to make their export trade more and more Chinese, and less and less European. On the other hand, the European communities desire to have all that access to the interior, and that freedom from internal extortion, which the Treaty of Tientsin contemplated, and for this reason—that at the foreign ports they find their own foolish competition for teas ruinous to them in the presence of the Chinese combination to keep up prices. The Chinese Government dreads giving that access to the interior which it has undertaken by Treaty to give, because it is wholly opposed to its exclusive habits and, in its opinion, full of risks and dangers to its authority. Without that access the European communities look with apprehension towards the future. The subject is one of immense importance to them, and of far more importance, they think, to China. The time has come for a decision on it, and Mr. Burlinghame's views on the question ought to be listened to with respect and attention. On it we do not at present, therefore, express any opinion beyond this: that to keep such a right in existence, and to submit to its non-exercise, is more than an absurdity—it is a source of danger. The Foreign-office will soon have to decide on its enforcement or abandonment.

Supposing it to be decided to effect the revision of the Treaty by negotiations at Peking, a further question arises—Is our diplomacy at Peking of an order and kind competent to advise and act upon a subject of this magnitude? Sir Rutherford Alcock, our ambassador there, has passed a quarter of a century in China and Japan; the experience and knowledge he possesses, his familiarity and acquaintance with Chinese manners and habits, his long intercourse with Chinese officials, are eminent, but the question is asked by merchants, Are they an advantage or disadvantage to England in such a matter as this? Some of them are disposed to argue that prolonged official residence in that country, constant intercourse with its great functionaries, and a natural desire for ease and comfort in relation to the Chinese Government, insensibly diminish the value to his own country of an old resident, and that, without his being aware of it, the power of usefulness of his representation wastes away. On this account there is a strong wish in China for the "freshness of the political life of Europe" at Peking, as a means of recovering a position there which has certainly not improved, and of dealing with the necessities of the year 1868. This is not altogether new language, and we ought by this time to know pretty well what it means. Translated into the vernacular it is:—"We want a Minister who knows what would suit our interests, and who does not know, and will not ask, what the Chinese Government can safely promise and fairly be expected to perform." If we have resolved to press certain demands without reference to the situation of China and the power of its Government, then the special knowledge of Sir Rutherford Alcock, tending, as it must do, to check the absoluteness of our requirements, is undoubtedly a disqualification in a British negotiator. This, again, is a matter on which Lord Stanley will have to make up his mind. What are wanted just now as to Chinese policy are definite views ably enforced at Peking, and a deliberately formed policy in the Foreign-office. Have we the security of either?

As yet it is more the duty of the press to elicit than to express decided views on a subject which is only opening up on the country, and on which it will require all the information that can be brought to bear, and the soundest judgment, to avoid great mistakes. Already English Chambers of Commerce and English houses of eminence are sending home memorials explanatory of their views, wants, and suggestions. And no doubt, before Mr. Burlinghame arrives we shall be in a position to discuss the objects he comes to attain in that spirit of frankness and fairness that are, above all things, indispensable to a satisfactory revision of the Treaty of Tientsin in 1868.

RUSSIA, GERMANY, &c.

HAMBURG, MARCH 3.

Just a year ago I stated in my letter (London and China Telegraph of Feb. 27, 1867) that the Oldenburg China Ship Company had agreed to liquidate their affairs, and that a first return of 10 per cent. to the shareholders was announced. In May a general meeting was held—if the presence of three directors, the manager, and one shareholder deserves that appellation—and the business of winding up the concern was entrusted to Mr. Taaks, of Bremen, one of the directors, with an allowance of 1½ per cent. as his remuneration. I now learn that all the ships have been sold, and the affair would have been formally settled long ago, as the money is deposited in the Bremen Bank, but for a dispute with an insurance company about one of the vessels condemned at Hong Kong as unseaworthy. The shareholders in this unfortunate undertaking are much to be pitied, and it will be no wonder if they are sick of joint-stock companies, for during the ten years of their operations they have managed to lose no less than 220,000 dollars out of their original capital of 250,000 gold dollars besides all their earnings. One would think that there must have been some extraordinary mismanagement which requires being carefully looked into, but neither the "statutes" of the company nor the laws of the country permit any such searching examination to be made. It will not be the fault of the liquidator, who is a very energetic man of business, if the affair be not wound up very shortly. The final return to be paid to the shareholders will however be very trifling, probably not exceeding 5 or 6 per cent.

Herr E. von Melle, one of the three members for Hamburg in the North German Federal Parliament, having been called up into the Senate, a vacancy has occurred for the second elective district. A meeting of the principal merchants has therefore been held at the Patriotic Building in this city to propose a candidate for the office, and the selection fell on Herr M. W. Hinrichsen, of the firm of May and Hinrichsen, who is an active member of the Board of Trade here and a thorough-going freetrader, and as such is recommended by the Exchange as deserving the confidence of the citizens; for it is felt that in the present state of affairs a merchant of great experience and liberal views is absolutely required to take charge of the commercial interests of this city, and uphold the principles of free-trade in the German Parliament, where the majority understand but little of commerce on an extensive scale, and are wont to follow the cuckoo cry of "Zollverein and protective duties." The election takes place this week, and as no other candidate has hitherto been put forward, Mr. Hinrichsen will probably walk over the course without opposition.

The negotiations with the Zollverein for the definitive line of demarcation to be drawn around this city are now in so forward a state that the details will be submitted in a few days to the Zollverein Parliament, which was opened yesterday at Berlin. There is to be a first-class Zollverein

Custom-house established here, and other facilities for traffic, among which may be mentioned a Zollverein Depot or Bonded Warehouse, where the produce and manufactures of the Commercial Union may be deposited, and if not exported, returned duty free or sent to any other part of their territory. The most difficult part of the transaction, which is still in abeyance, is the question of finance, as Prussia, on the part of the Zollverein, requires Hamburg to bear exclusively the expense of all the arrangements and the erection of all the buildings for custom-houses and a proper control of the Zollverein frontiers against smuggling. It is true the principle is established in all the States of the Zollverein that each separate Government has to erect and keep in repair all the buildings within its territory required for the joint service; and Prussia, moreover, appeals to the terms of the treaty entered into in 1856 with Bremen, by virtue of which that city bound herself to pursue the same principle. But it is to be expected from the patriotism and self-interest of this city that their Senate and Burgerschaft will be prepared to vote any sum required for the above purposes, provided they are allowed to retain, as hitherto, the advantages of their free port, as well as free commercial intercourse with all the world.

The sensational telegram from New York with the extraordinary intelligence from Japan mentioned in your last impression was received here with general disbelief; and the Hamburg papers, while printing it verbatim, could not refrain from adding a note of interrogation to express their doubts of its authenticity.

Monetary and Commercial.

The time for receiving tenders for the Labuan Coal Mine, its plant and machinery, has been extended to the 7th inst. It is doubtful if the old shareholders will complete arrangements for taking it over, and in that case it must fall to some capitalist at the highest bid.

Mr. Ritso, the London agent of the East India Telegraph Company, has received advices from New York that fresh arrangements are now in progress by the directors for placing their shares in the United States and in this country, and that on their completion contracts for the cable will be at once made.

Mr. J. H. Catling, who retired from the firm of Messrs. Peek Brothers and Co., in June, 1866, has commenced business as a tea broker, in partnership with Mr. A. Andrews, under the firm of Catling, Andrews, and Co., at 28, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

The biddings for £200,000 in bills on India were held on the 4th at the Bank. The amounts allotted were, to Calcutta, £190,600, and to Madras £9,400. The minimum price was fixed at 1s. 10¾d. on Calcutta and Madras—an advance of 2 per cent.; and tenders on those Presidencies at 1s. 11d. will receive about 22 per cent., while those above that price will be allotted in full. These results show a considerable revival in the demand for means of remittance to the East, consequent on the recent rise in cotton. The Banks ask 1s. 11d. for their paper.

The East Indian Railway Company last week notified that, having received authority from the Secretary of State for India to borrow £450,000 on debentures, they were prepared to receive applications at par to that extent, bearing interest at 4¼ per cent. per annum. Although this is the lowest rate of interest yet proposed on Indian railway securities they were all taken in the course of a single day.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Bangalore, from Southampton on the 29th Feb., was in gold, to Alexandria, £160,100; in silver, to Galle; £275; to Shanghai, £12,805: total in gold, £160,100, in silver, £13,080.

BOARD OF TRADE RETURNS.

The returns of the Board of Trade for the month and twelve months ended the 31st December, 1867, have been issued. The total value of our exports in 1867 was £181,183,971, showing a falling off of only about 4 per cent. from the year 1866, and an increase of 9 per cent. upon the year 1865. Considering the lower prices that prevailed for nearly all descriptions of raw material, and especially of cotton, the total thus exhibited for 1867 may be taken to represent a larger and more profitable amount of British industry than has in any preceding year found an outlet in foreign markets. As regards the importations of the year, it appears the supply of cotton was 8 per cent. less than in 1866, while in the arrivals of wheat there was an increase of 48 per cent.

The following is a summary of those figures which relate to our Import and Export trade with China and other countries in the Far East:—

TEA.

The market has become much more quiet. Importers continue firm in their demands, and business has been limited; prices for common to fair kinds of Congou have ruled rather easier, other kinds showing but little change. Congous : In sittings there has been no change, the demand being steady. Broken-leaf kinds also firm. Fair to good common have sold ¼d. per lb. lower, the quotation at the public sales being 1s. 1¼d. to 1s. 1½d. per lb. Fair to good flavory kinds have been less in request. Good to fine Kaisows remain steady, with a moderate business at full prices. Common to fair black-leaf kinds a shade lower. Fair to good medium show no change. Fine to finest have been in fair demand at the recent advance. Oolongs and Souchongs remain as before, also Flowery Pekoes. Scented Capers : Canton-make have been readily taken at very full prices for all kinds. Orange Pekoes : Canton make have sold rather more readily, and in some instances at rather better prices. Foochow kinds remain steady at late quotations. Uncolored Japans remain without transactions. Green Teas show but little alteration. Ping Sueys have sold at about previous prices. Moyunes continue in demand, and fine kinds command full prices. Hysons are wanted for export. Canton Gunpowders have been sold at about previous prices. The public sales of China Tea on the 3rd inst. comprised only 8,956 packages, of which 8,318 packages were sold, all being without reserve. The stock in thet United Kingdom on the 29th ultimo was estimated at 87,700,000 against 99,300,000 lbs. last year.

The Circular of Messrs. Fred. Huth and Co. says:—"Our deliveries continue very promising, and stocks must gradually decrease. Whether, however, we shall have only 55,000,000 lbs. in stock on the 31st August, as some predict, seems very doubtful; 65,000,000 lbs. would perhaps be nearer the mark. We must, at all events, be prepared for a larger China export than has hitherto been expected, and we must likewise add the increasing Indian supplies. The question is, therefore, shall we not have a total export from China and India for the season 1867-68 of 135,000,000 lbs., or somewhat near it; and further, what will be afloat of new teas by the 31st August? Judging from the comprehensive preparations made on this side of the water for operations in China, and from the number of hands gone out to assist at the shipping of new teas, there is every reason to infer that shipments will be large and rapid, that they will cost high, but will be met here by that new order of things which has of late years baffled and defeated all exaggerated calculations, and will continue to do so, it is to be hoped, for a long time to come No doubt that some of the very fine chops of both Black and Red Leaf teas will again fetch high, and perhaps very high, prices on arrival here, but the majority of fine will not; therefore, we cannot counsel our friends to go beyond 2s. to 2s. 1d. per lb. for the finest sorts (excepting the few crack chops which would probably fetch 2s. 4d. to 2s. 9d. or more), 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. for best second crop leaf, and not above 11d. to 1s. per lb., laid down here, for common and fair medium descriptions. Of the so-called new district teas, our friends should choose such only as have strength and pungency, without taking the price which 'Oui Han' fetched as a criterion. This class of tea will meet here an exceptional reception only in case the Kaisow crop should be wanting again—otherwise, not; the finest of them should therefore not cost above 2s. to 2s. 2d. per lb."

The Produce Markets Review, on the proportions consumed, has the following:—"We have collected with some little trouble approximate results, which we think may be accepted by merchants as a general guide as to the proportions in which they should buy different classes of Congou. We find that the quantity sold under 1s. 4d. per lb. amounts to about 60 per cent., while the qualities from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. per lb. form only 10 per cent. of the whole. Thus 70 per cent. of the consumption of Congou is under the selling price to the wholesale dealers of 1s. 6d. per lb., and it is evident from what we have said that the proportion of teas from 1s. to 1s. 4d. per lb. must form by far the largest portion of this amount; from 1s. 6d. to 2s. the proportion consumed is only 17 per cent., and above 2s. only 13 per cent. It is thus evident that in proportion to their saleability Congous from 1s. to 1s. 4d. come first; next those from 1s. 6d. to 2s.; thirdly, those from 2s. upwards; and lastly, those from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. We have given the apparently minute subdivision from 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. to show how small the consumption of tea is when it approaches the limits of one of the broad classes into which the public divide teas. Although the proportion of Congou sold above 2s. is 13 per cent., it should be borne in mind that hardly any sales over 2s. 3d. are made. With reference to the more practical consideration of the prices which are almost certain to prove remunerative, we should say that common Congou should not be laid down here to cost more than 10d. per lb., medium teas at not more than 1s. 3d. per lb., and fine teas, except for one or two of the so-called "crack chops," not above 1s. 10d. per lb. The price given for medium teas is, of course, intended to apply to these sold here at the present time up to 1s. 4d. per lb, as the tea market, with the gradual reduction in stocks that is inevitable, is likely to have a hardening tendency as the present season advances. The London rates of the day may therefore safely be accepted as the basis of calculation in China, with the exception of those at present current for common Congous, which are evidently too high."

SILK.—The market is steady, prices being well maintained, but has been quieter during the last few days. The quotation for best chops 3rd Tsatlees is 28s.; good 3½, 24s. to 25s.; fair to good 4 and 4½, 21s. 6d. to 23s. 6d.; and common 19s. 6d. to 21s. Good and fine silk is very scarce and much inquired for, but the hitherto neglected classes of Asiatic silk have to some little extent shared in the general inquiry, although the chief demand has been for Tsatlees and best Japans. Canton Silk has been interfered with by the low prices ruling for the common Tsatlees, buyers rather neglecting it, and buying only at easier rates; a few extra fine parcels of Tsatlee reel have sold at 20s. to 21s., but for the ordinary runs of Nos. 1 and 2, 18s. to 19s. has been the ruling quotation. The deliveries in February were comparatively good, the improvement in China being worthy remark; it may now be hoped that the consumption of Asiatic silk is on the turn. The deliveries in February were, 3,242 bales China, 419 Canton, and 615 Japan; and from 2nd to 4th inst., 406 China, 50 Canton, and 136 Japan.

COTTON.—In the London market the quiet tone noticed in our last report prevailed until the 3rd inst., when a great improvement was exhibited, and the quotations advanced ½d. to ⅝d. on sales "on the spot," and ¼d. to ⅜d. for transactions "to arrive." An extremely brisk demand continues to prevail at the advanced rates. The quotations are:—Sales on the spot, Tinnevelly, 8¼d. to 8½d.; Western, 7½d. to 8¼d.; Cocanada, 7¼d. to 7¾d.; Scinde, 7d. 5-16ths; Bengal, 6¾d. to 7¼d.; for arrival, Dhollerah, ship named, guaranteed fair, 7¾d. to 8d.; Tinnevelly, Oct. to Feb. sailing guaranteed good fair, 8d. to 8¼d.; Western Jan. to March sailing ship named guaranteed fair, 7½d., and Cocanada ship named, guaranteed fair, 7d. per lb. Great excitement has prevailed in the cotton market at Liverpool, and telegrams report the sale of 20,000 bales, at prices ranging from ½d. to ¾d. per lb. higher. Large orders have been received by the Atlantic cable from Mobile, New Orleans, and New York, to purchase cotton here, but owing to limits being fixed, in many instances they could not all be effected, and some animation may therefore be expected during the next few days. The quotations on the spot are:—American, 8¾d. to 10½d.; Egyptian, 10d. to 12d.; Surat, 7d. to 9⅛d.; Bengal, Scinde, &c., 7½d. to 8⅛d. For arrival the following are the quotations:—American, basis of middling, ship named, from New York, 9¼d.; Savannah, 9⅝d., 9¼d., 9 9-16d., and steamer 9 9-16d.; ship, low middling, 9¼d.; Mobile, 9⅜d., 9⅜d., 9¼d.; New Orleans, 9¾d.; February to March, 9¾d. Paraiba.—First, ship named, 10d. Broach.—Fair new merchants, shipment, February to March, 7¾d.; Oomrawuttee, fair new merchants, shipment January to February, 7¼d.; February to March, and March to April, 7¾d.; ship named, 8d.; Comptah, fair, ship named, 7¼d.; Dhollerah, fair, ship named, 7⅜d.; fair new, April, 7¾d.

COFFEE.—The colory descriptions of Plantation Ceylon command fair rates although the demand is far from active. For all other kinds there is scarcely any inquiry, and sales even at the reduced rates now current are effected with difficulty. The ruling quotations for Plantation are: Triage 37s. to 52s., ordinary and fine ordinary 61s. to 68s. 6d., fine ordinary and low middling 70s. 6d. to 73s., middling and good middling 78s. to 82s. 6d., peaberry 80s. to 89s. Of Native Ceylon, ordinary small descriptions have realised 43s. 6d. to 45s. 6d., and good ordinary 49s. to 50s., but the principal portion of the offers has been withdrawn.

COCOA-NUT OIL.—The quotations are £49 10s. for Ceylon and £55 for Cochin, with a continued dull and inactive market.

CAMPHOR.—Business in this import has been unimportant. The Dutch Trading Company's sale of Japan is announced for the 1st April, when 2,522 tubs will be offered.

MANILA HEMP.—The depression which has recently prevailed continues, and only moderate business has been done. At the auctions 400 bales were offered, of which the sound portion was bought in at £48 10s., and the damaged realised £44 to £47 for third to first class. Privately the sales have been limited to about 300 bales principally "Allay" at £48. The deliveries of Manila during the month of February amounted to 239 tons, against 404 tons in February, 1867; and the stock on hand on the 1st inst. was 834 tons, against 812 tons at the same date last year.

PEPPER.—Black: Moderate sales have been effected at firm rates, which are well maintained. At the recent auctions of 2,249 bags Singapore about half sold at 3⅞d. to 3½d. for fair grayish and 3¼d. for common; and of 2,749 bags Penang about 1,200 bags common East Coast partly damaged sold at 3⅜d. per lb. White: There is a good demand at advanced rates—viz., Penang 5½d., and Singapore 5⅝d. to 5½d. per lb.

RICE.—There has been little activity except in sales of floating cargoes, which have gone off with spirit. The following are reported:—A cargo of 1,000 tons Rangoon, arrived off the coast at 11s. 9d. for the Continent without guarantee; three cargoes, 900 tons, 400 tons, 1,100 tons Siam, for London, at 10s. 6d. ex ship, or 11s. landed, without guarantee; one of 500 tons, Saigon, January sailing, for London, at 11s. 6d. landed; one of 450 tons, Rangoon, February sailing, for Liverpool, at 11s. 9d. landed; one of 540 tons, Saigon, for the Continent, at 11s. 4½d.; and one of 400 tons, Saigon, from China, at 11s. 4½d., also for the Continent.

SPICES.—There is no change to report. Moderate sales have been effected at about the previous rates. Mace: 7 cases Penang sold, common and middling red 1s. 7d. to 1s. 10d., good 2s. 5d., palish 2s. 9d., and 3 casks common Batavia at 1s. 5d. Nutmegs: 57 cases mostly found buyers, good small to middling 1s. 3d. to 1s. 7d., good middling 1s. 9d. to 1s. 11d., good 2s. 1d. to 2s. 7d., fine at 3s. 10d., and 35 cases limed Batavia, low to middling at 1s. to 1s. 4d.

SUGAR.—The tone of the general market is still extremely quiet, but no further decline has to be reported. Manila has been in better inquiry at a slight advance. The sales of this description by private contract have been 7,000 bags muscovado at 27s. to 27s. 3d., and 25,500 bags clayed middling (duty 8s.) at 29s. 6d. to 29s. 9d., and good qualities (duty 9s. 7d.) at 30s. 6d. The business at auction has been unimportant. Of Penang, 13,240 bags fresh import were offered at the sales and were taken readily as follows:—Good middling brown (duty 8s.) at 30s. to 30s. 3d.; good brown and low yellow (duty 9s. 7d.) at 31s. to 33s. 9d.; middling and good yellow (duty 10s. 6d.), at 34s. to 36s. Private returns make the imports of Raw Sugar into the four chief ports of the United Kingdom, to the 22nd February, 52,530 tons, against 53,000 tons in 1867. The clearances for home consumption 65,810 tons, against 80,050 tons, and the stock at that date 111,230 tons, against 151,550 tons.

TIN.—The decline in Straits descriptions noticed in our last has been partially recovered, and moderate sales have been effected at £92 for arrival and £91 10s. on the spot. The Dutch Trading Company's half-yearly sale is announced for the 31st inst., when 51,100 slabs will be offered.

For Galle, £36. From Newport, Cardiff, or Swansea per ton.—For Yokohama: £2 10s. For Shanghai: £2 12s. 6d. For Chefoo, £2 15s. For Hong Kong, £2 2s. 6d. For Manila, £1 15s. For Saigon: £2 8s. For Singapore: £1 13s. For Batavia, £1 10s. For Galle, £1 4s. For Colombo, £1 8s. 6d.

The Admiralty have invited tenders for the conveyance of 10 tons, meast., drain pipes, 1 ton, meast., mineral tar, and 66 tons, weight, asphalte, from the Thames to Hong Kong.

CASUALTIES.

The Pegasus, Jackson, which sailed from London, Feb. 25, for Shanghai put back March 2 to Deal.

The Lobelia, Hulman, from Saigon which arrived at St. Helena, Jan. 28, and sailed 29 for Falmouth, had shifted her cargo during a cyclone which she encountered Dec. 5 and 6, in lat. 11 S., long. 99 E.; she had made a great deal of water, and was obliged to attach the steam engine to the pumps.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At ST. HELENA.—Jan. 28, Lobelia, Hulman, from Saigon, and sailed 29 for Falmouth; 29, Ann Adamson, Hutton, from Singapore, and sailed for London; Odulia, Gastanaga, from Manila; 30, Helena Donner, Hochreuter, from Bankok.

At TABLE BAY.—Dec. 25, Thomas Brown, Jackson, from Foochow, and sailed 27 for Boston.

At SIMON'S BAY.—Dec. 20, Favourite, Thorpe, sailed for Galle.

The steamer Kwang-tung, built by Messrs. Hall, Russell, and Co. Aberdeen, for Messrs. Douglas, Lapraik, and Co., Hong Kong, will be launched on the 10th inst.

On the 25th inst. there was launched from the yard of Mr. Richard Thompson, Deptford, Sunderland, a beautifully modelled barque, 750 tons, classed A 1 ten years, owned by Messrs. Porter, Rixon, and Co., of London. This vessel is intended for the China trade, and is named the Stanley Castle, to be commanded by Captain D. M'Dougle, late of the Sir Lancelot.

The Tay Shipbuilding Company on the 25th ult. launched from their yard at Dundee a barque named the Amoor, of 305 tons register. Her dimensions are—length over all, 120 feet; breadth, 23 2-10; depth, 15 4-10; is classed 10 years A 1 at Lloyd's, and is intended for the China trade. Captain Duncan, lately of the barque Niger, has been appointed commander. She is owned by W. O. Taylor, Esq., and others.

Messrs. Stephen have also launched the Omba, a composite sailing ship of 900 tons, and classed 16 years A 1 at Lloyd's. This very fine ship is owned by Messrs. Killick, Martin, and Co., of London, and is to be employed in the China and Japan trade.

PORT OF AMOY.
CHINA.

SHIPOWNERS, AGENTS, and COMMANDERS are informed that the Dock Company's Establishments at the above Port afford facility for REPAIRING and REFITTING STEAM and SAILING VESSELS.

Their large Granite Dock, 286 feet on the blocks, 307 feet over all, is in complete working order, and at average spring tides can take vessels drawing 16 to 17 feet. It is fitted with Caisson Gate and with a powerful Centrifugal Steam Pump, ensuring espatch in all states of the tide.

Their two smaller Granite Docks, one 223 feet, the other 160 feet on the blocks, can take vessels at average spring tides drawing 12 feet to 13 feet.

A stock kept on hand of Timber, Spars, Copper and Metal Sheathing, Paints for Iron Vessels, and other material required for Dockyard use.

The premises comprise Carpenters' Shops, Mast Sheds, Blacksmiths' Shops, superintended by experienced European Foremen; also an Engineer's Workshop, supplied with Lathes and other tools worked by Steam, in charge of a Resident European Engineer. Dry Godowns for the reception of stores of vessels requiring to discharge them

NOTICE TO SHIPOWNERS.
SINGAPORE DOCKS.

THE PATENT SLIP AND DOCK COMPANY execute, in the most efficient manner, SHIPS' REPAIRS of all descriptions, under the supervision of European Shipwrights and Engineers.

The DRY DOCK (opened in March, 1859) admits two Vessels at the same time, being over 400 feet in length with a depth of water ranging to 15½ feet.

Another Dry Dock of larger dimensions, adjoining the above, will shortly be completed, and available for the heaviest Steamers.

There is on the same premises extensive Wharf, with substantial Warehouse and other accommodation, comprising every convenience for coaling Steamers, discharging and storing Goods, together with ample Machinery and appliances for repairing Iron Steamers &c.

THE ADVERTISER (who is the wife of a professiona man wishing to receive TWO YOUNG LADIES to be EDUCATED with her own daughter. The best course of education will be combined with all the advantages of a comfortable home. The house and garden are large, and in the neighbourhood of the Crystal Palace. Terms, £100 per annum each.

Address "T," "London and China Telegraph" Office 2, Cowper's-court, Cornhill. Unexceptionable references given and required.

A LADY, well acquainted with the CHINESE LANGUAGE, is anxious to obtain one or two PUPILS.

Any gentleman intending to go out in the China Consular Service, or as a merchant, would find this a good opportunity for learning the language.

The lady resides in the country, one hour's rail from London, but lodgings could be obtained near her residence, and she is prepared to give four hours' tuition daily.

A course of three or six months would enable anyone to obtain a fair knowledge of Chinese.

For particulars apply to M. S., Mr. Thompson, stationer, Bedford.

CAUTION.

THE GROSS FRAUDS which continue to be practised by obscure manufacturers, more particularly in Germany, by imitating the Labels attached to JOHN GOSNELL and Co.'s PERFUMERY, render it imperative upon the Proprietors to Caution the public against such nefarious proceedings, and to request their friends and patrons to purchase only of respectable dealers, who import direct from JOHN GOSNELL and Co., and invite special attention to the address, RED BULL WHARF, 93, UPPER THAMES-STREET, late of 12, Three King-court, Lombard-street, London, E.C.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—SURE CURE.—Be the ailment internal or external, chronic or acute, inflammatory or otherwise, a certain remedy may be found in one or other, or both of Holloway's preparations. In the nursery and toilet they are equally in place. The use of them involves no danger, the employment of them will not cause the most timid any apprehension of doing mischief. They always relieve, and by their corrective, purifying, and healing powers, invariably prove beneficial in every disorder incident to the human frame. In wounds, sprains, glandular swellings, enlarged veins, and diseases of the skin, Holloway's medicines may be used with safety and certainty, without weakening the system or transferring the disease to other parts.

The next inward mail (the first under the new contract) is due on the 23rd inst. It will bring Hong Kong dates to Feb. 12. Telegrams from Hong Kong to 21st Feb. have been received via Calcutta, and will be found in another column.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE new mail contract now coming into operation necessitates a change in our days of publication. From this time the LONDON AND CHINA TELEGRAPH will be issued on delivery of the P. and O. mails every alternate week, as well as for the French mail arriving about the 6th of each month; a change which gives two additional numbers in the course of each year. Should the French mail service be made a fortnightly one, the TELEGRAPH will become a weekly paper.

Summary of News from the Far East.

BY the receipt of our despatches via Brindisi we are enabled to anticipate the mail via Marseilles, which will be delivered in London to-morrow morning.

JAPAN.

YOKOHAMA.

The present mail brings no later dates from Japan. The Japan Herald of the 18th January has the following remarks on the political situation:—

The most important item of this budget of news is the retirement of Stotsbashi to his castle at Osaka, where he arrived on the 7th instant, with his ministerial officials, adherents and forces. Satsuma was in power at Kioto at the head of his faction, and had assumed charge of the young Mikado, placing his troops on guard at the gates of the palace.

At Hiogo and Osaka everything was perfectly quiet, and nothing was perceptible to the casual observer indicative of the important events which have taken place, and are yet on the tapis at the neighbouring city of Kioto, with the exception of a more numerous assemblage of armed men at Osaka, who are, however, principally troops belonging to Stotsbashi, or followers of his friends, some of whom are to be seen in the ancient and fantastic Japanese war dress, which they wore when recently guarding the gates of the Mikado's palace.

A correspondent, who saw the entry of Stotsbashi into his castle on the 7th, writes, that his countenance and those of his followers bore signs of the deepest depression, but the late Shiogoen, who has hitherto shown the abilities and energy of an able statesman, will doubtless not entirely sink into obscurity and insignificance under the adverse events which have temporarily borne him down.

It is yet to be seen whether the present victory of Satsuma and his adherents will either hinder or prevent the assembly of Daimios, which was to have taken place to consider the government of the country, and the policy to be adopted towards foreigners; and further, whether his position and supremacy are to be viewed as representing the united voice and will of the nobility and power of the country, or as the successes of the leader of a faction, combined but for the present gaining of a point, and whose interests once clashing may need but little incentive to cause dissension and violence amongst themselves.

CHINA.

SHANGHAI.

We have no later advices from this port, but gather a few items of news that did not reach us by the French mail.

The following is translated from a native newspaper printed and published at Shanghai:—"The particulars respecting the appointments of Chi Kang and Tsun Kia Ku as Chinese Ambassadors we have not yet been able to learn, but a friend from the capital has supplied the following decrees:—'The 26th day of the 10th moon (T'ung Che, 6th year). We have received the memorial presented by the Office of Foreign Affairs praying that the (U. S.) Envoy Burlinghame, who in the transaction of business had shown himself genial, just, and thoroughly acquainted with foreign and Chinese matters, should be appointed to visit Foreign Treaty Powers in the capacity of Envoy, and upon due consideration, We approve of and give our Imperial assent to the prayer of the memorial. Respect this.'

"And on the 1st of the 11th moon.—'We have received the memorial of the Tsung-li-Yamen praying that officials might be appointed to visit Foreign Treaty Powers as Envoys from China, and we accordingly, assenting, appoint Chi Kang, holding the rank of Taotai and decorated with the peacock's feather, and Tsun Kia Ku, Prefect and Lang Chung of the Board of Rites, to proceed to foreign countries in the capacity above indicated. This being the first occasion on which such envoys have been deputed, it is expedient that some reward should be given to the officials thus deputed. Both Chi Kang and Tsun Kia Ku are now elevated to the dignity of second class Button, and are to visit Foreign Treaty Powers as envoys from China. Respect this.' A supplementary memorial has been presented by the Tsung-li-Yamen requesting that Cho-Peh-Hau (Brown) may be appointed first assistant, and Ye-Shan (de Champs) second, &c." The mission was to leave for San Francisco by the P. M. S. S. China, on the 25th February.

Several daring acts of piracy have been perpetrated off the Saddle Islands, near Shanghai; two cases are recorded at length in the local papers; there appears to be no available foreign naval force to suppress the pirates.

The appeal case in the matter of Mackellar and Co.'s bankruptcy, which should have been heard at the Supreme Court on the 15th January, was put off by mutual consent to the 25th January.

The rebels have committed great atrocities in Shantung, and the country people have destroyed a large number of them; 30,000 are estimated to have perished in this way and by cold and hunger. They have again appeared in force, however, opposite Chin Keang.

Another outrage has taken place at Kiukiang, a British subject having been seized by the Chinese authorities, who entered his house, bound, and carried him off. He was released upon the demand of the Consul, but no other satisfaction has as yet been obtained.

The Hankow Times says:—"The general commanding the Yang-chiang-tei, or Franco-Chinese Contingent, has duly warned the inhabitants on this side of the river to take severe measures against any of his troops found creating disturbances, or imposing upon [the people of Hangkow, who are to bind and bring over to him all such offenders. The latter operation may be conceived to be attended with some difficulty, judging from the stalwart appearance of some of these 'irregulars.' It is reported that Kwan-wen, the late Viceroy of Hoo-kwang, has been appointed to the same office in Pechili, the metropolitan province. The late Governor-General of Pechili has been degraded, from the disordered and disaffected condition of this important province. The walls of the native town have been for some time covered with both customary and unusual proclamations from the Prefect, Colonial-Commandant, and the Tautai. Wandering folks and disbanded braves are warned away from Hankow. The Prefect forbids the carrying of silver at night, and advises that it should always be carried in the covered barrels properly used for this purpose."

Under the head of "business at Shanghai," the Recorder has the following:—

On the "silver lining to every cloud" principle, in the midst of many disasters and misfortunes, some advantage has accrued to Shanghai from the recent course of commercial events. The hopes of spreading foreign trade by means of the newly-opened ports have proved in a great measure unfounded, the heavy expenditure necessary for keeping up such establishments being far more than the nature of the business could support. Gradually, therefore, more and more firms have been disposed to give up an unprofitable branch of their trading and to concentrate their energies more particularly to their original business at the larger ports.

Shanghai in particular has gone through a noticeable change in this respect; the business becoming gradually more localised, and the port and inland trades being more and more conducted by the Chinese, who can work them more effectually and far more cheaply than can be done by foreigners. The quarter in which this change is most noticeable is in the northern trade, the number of native merchants engaged in which have increased to an enormous extent during the last six months or a year. Within the last fortnight we are informed that some 70,000 pieces of shirtings have been bought by Chinese merchants for transhipment to the northern and other coast ports, while the average consumption of that article in Shanghai locally does not exceed something like 10,000 pieces during the same period.

The advantages of means of foreign transport, and the absence of barrier taxation, are strikingly illustrated by the above-named fact. Around Shanghai there are a vast number of interior depots, at which probably as many shirtings could be disposed of as at the coast ports, and it is strange that scarcely any demand for the interior of the country seems to exist in Shanghai.

It would appear at first sight a matter of some regret that the coast trade is gradually completely falling out of the hands of the foreigner into those of the native; but in reality we do not think this is the case. To those who have unfortunately laid out funds in property and other business arrangements at the new ports, it is of course to be regretted that a change has taken place whereby they must become losers of money; but this must not blind us to the fact that the ports with expensive establishments are not by any means so good a mode of disposing of our cargo as leaving it in the hands of the natives, and inducing them to take their supplies from Shanghai and other large trading depots.

An error of a not unnatural description was made with reference to treaty ports before the working of the Chinese fiscal system was fully known. It was thought that access to the interior was all that was necessary to enlarge the market for our manufactured goods, whereas the truth is that the amount of outlay required to keep up a branch establishment probably far exceeds the difference in price obtainable upon all cargo bought or sold.

What is required to improve the foreign import trade is not the possession of more ports but the diminution or total abolition of the barrier dues. Our policy, in fact, is not to spread ourselves (at least so long as we require to live in expensive European style) to all the places where our goods can be bought; but if possible to obtain security that the native trader in our wares will not be unduly taxed.

By degrees another advantage is being felt in Shanghai from the abolition of many of the business agencies at the outports. The firms who have adopted this course are becoming better supplied with means than they could possibly be under the old system, where their funds were dissipated in different directions. Capital is now becoming more concentrated, and will in all probability be invested more safely and more profitably in business of a local nature.

HONG KONG.

The second ordinary meeting of the Hong Kong Fire Insurance Company was held on Jan. 25, at the office of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., general agents. The Hon. W. Keswick occupied the chair. The chairman said that the shareholders had met for the purpose of adopting the report of the past year and approving of the accounts up to the 31st December last. Mr. Burrows congratulated the shareholders on the fact that they had escaped with so small an amount of loss from the late fire. The chairman observed that the total amount of the loss was $88,951.60; but they had reason to congratulate themselves even then. Mr. Bosman proposed that the report be now adopted and the accounts passed; which, being seconded by Mr. Deacon, was carried unanimously. Mr. Rowett then proposed, and Mr. Burrows seconded, that the committee for the year should be composed of the following members—Messrs. Duncanson, Heard, Kaye, Ryrie and Rangel, the two latter being re-elected; which motion was unanimously carried. Mr. Bosman remarked that as the company terminated on 11th May, 1869, it would be desirable to take some steps with regard to the acceptance of risks expiring after that date, as although such was not the practice with Marine Insurance Companies, he considered that it would be well for this company either to effect reinsurances of such risks or to provide that the new company to be formed at the expiration of the present one should take them over. The chairman stated that such a step might be taken even twelve months before 11th May, 1869; and it was a very important point for consideration. The former committee had already considered the matter, and in a few months' time he was sure something would be done. [The Report and Balance-sheet will be found in full elsewhere.]

Dates hence are to the 1st January—two days later. The memorial against the Military Contribution is to leave on the 12th February. Two-thirds of the signatures (exclusive of Chinese) are foreign.

The Hong Kong Chamber of Commerce some time since proposed to discontinue telegrams from Mr. Lane (London) and receive them through Messrs. Gibson, Thomson and Co., of Galle, but learns that no improvement on Mr. Lane's system can be guaranteed. The decision upon the lines to be used—Galle, Kiachta, and San Francisco—still awaits discussion.

Two cases were lately disposed of by Mr. May the sitting Magistrate, in which the Gambling Licence became a point of difficulty. The charge preferred against the prisoners in each case was that of gambling in a public unlicensed gambling-house; but the charge fell through from the fact that no proof was forthcoming to satisfy his Worship that the houses were frequented by others than friends. Recently eight Chinese were charged with a similar offence by Inspector Daly, who found them in a house, No. 52, Square-street, Taipingshan. With two Europeans and eight Chinese the inspector surprised this gambling haunt at seven P.M.; and the fourth prisoner he found seated on a stool, with a lantern, in the passage or entrance to the house. By this watchman the alarm was given, and a rush was immediately made for the back doors, by means of which about twenty escaped. Out of the number the eight prisoners were captured; and in the gambling room were found dice, cash, counters and the usual paraphernalia requisite for the fantan. One of the lokongs stated that the house was used only as a gambling house, and that no one lived in it. His Worship said that there was no doubt but that the fourth prisoner was a watchman for that gambling house; and for that offence he would fine him $200, and in default of payment to go to gaol for six months. It had been deemed necessary by the Government, in order to bring the vice of gambling under control, to license certain houses for that purpose. It appeared, however, that the prisoners were not satisfied with going to the devil in the recognised way, so they did so in an unlicensed manner. In addition to this, he learned that five or six of them were notorious thieves, and a fresh charge would be brought against them on that account. He would at present fine them $50, or in default imprison them for three months. His Worship then called upon Mr. Douglas, gaol superintendent, to identify the old offenders amongst the prisoners; when six of them were recognised. The magistrate, however, on second consideration, thought it would be better to defer the charge until they served their first sentence, to prevent any difficulty regarding the double sentence. Mr. Douglas said that such would be the most advisable course, the more especially as the prisoners were fit subjects for deportation. One of the prisoners had been twice in prison for attacking and knocking down people in the street, and had been flogged for that achievement. His Worship observed that Inspector Daly had done a great public service in bringing up such men before the Court.

A commission has been appointed by the Portuguese Government to inquire into coolie trade and other abuses at Macao. Interesting revelations are expected.

The loss of the Hong Kong Fire Insurance Company by the late fire (Nov. 1867) amounted to $88,951.60.

The salary of the Canton Chaplain is to be raised to £600 per annum during the current year.

Tenders have been invited for the completion of a sea wall at the western end of Victoria.

The rebuilding of the cathedral organ is being rapidly proceeded with, and the main portion of the fittings are already in place. It was anticipated that the instrument would be ready for use by the middle of February, when it was intended to open it with a full choral service. The additional stops now being fitted will add considerably to the power of the organ, which will be one of the finest this side of the Cape when completed.

His Excellency Sir Richard Mac Donnell has, with the approval of the Major-General Commanding, appointed Captain John T. Bolton Mayne, 73rd Regiment, to be aide-de-camp.

In our last issue we reported the application of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank to annul the bankruptcy of Messrs. Dent and Co. From the China Mail we take the following particulars of a similar application on the part of the Agra Bank.

(Before the Hon. the CHIEF JUSTICE.)—January 31st, 1868.

AGRA AND MASTERMAN'S BANK V. DENT AND COMPANY, BANKRUPTS—MOTION TO ANNUL BANKRUPTCY.

The Attorney-General, instructed by Mr. Caldwell, appeared for the bank; and Mr. Whyte, instructed by Mr. Francis (Mr. Gaskell's clerk), appeared on behalf of the bankrupts. In this case the Agra Bank appeared as a judgment creditor upon a judgment obtained against the estate, in the same manner as in the former case of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank against the same defendants.

On reference being made to the documents in the hands of the official assignee, some discussion took place between the Chief Justice and the Attorney-General as to who was Registrar of the Court in Bankruptcy. The Attorney-General said that, under the Ordinance, the Registrar of the Supreme Court was the Registrar of the said Court in Bankruptcy. This, however, the Chief Justice did not admit, but appeared to argue as if the Bankruptcy was a separate Court in itself. The Attorney-General argued somewhat warmly (but subsequently apologised for his warmth) that the Ordinance was clear on the point that the Registrar of the Bankruptcy Court was the Registrar of the Supreme Court, because the Bankruptcy Court was merely a branch of the Supreme Court.

The Attorney-General referred to, and cited cases in support of, principles precisely similar to those quoted in the case of the Hong Kong Bank, In addition to what he previously said, however, the learned counsel remarked that the act and the intent of bankruptcy must be concurrent and coeval, and it would be absurd to argue the possibility of the act of one man being concurrent with the intent of another who was thousands of miles away.

Mr. Whyte followed on behalf of the bankrupts, but said that he did not wish to recapitulate the arguments used on a previous occasion. As to the petition, he ought to have appeared for the official assignee; and as regards costs, this was a material point. He had no option now but to appear for the petitioning creditor.

Chief Justice: Do you not appear for the official assignee? I all along understood that you appeared for the official assignee.

Mr. Whyte, after some conversation, stated that he had since been retained by Mr. Huffam for the official assignee.

His Lordship remarked that the same alteration would require to be made in the previous case, so that the official assignees should be represented in both cases.

Mr. Whyte then proceeded to say that there was no such institution in existence as the Agra and Masterman's Bank, but that the attorney concerned in the judgment now sought to be put in force had signed as attorney for that institution. In fact, it was a matter of notoriety.

The Chief Justice remarked that he could not deal with matters of notoriety. He had not a common mind here, but a judicial mind; he had no common sense here, only judicial sense.

Mr. Whyte further remarked that Mr. Caldwell, who signed the petition, had no authority to do so, and that therefore the petition was not duly attested and signed. The learned counsel alluded to a few other minor objections, and concluded by expressing the unreasonableness of setting aside a solemn adjudication simply because all the partners were not on the spot. His learned friend based his case upon old cases which occurred before the law of bankruptcy was so qualified. Partners, he (Mr. Whyte) maintained, had power to act for each other in bankruptcy. Besides, all the other partners had ratified the acts of bankruptcy committed by their partner here, insomuch as they had come in and submitted to the Court. But, in addition to all this, he at least claimed that the adjudication in bankruptcy against John Dent was irrevocable; and this point he noted because of what he had seen of the papers. As to the transfer of the money to Macao, the learned counsel argued that the transfer was fraudulent and clearly a good act of bankruptcy; and he concluded by stating that the petitioners in this case only sought their own interests to the detriment of the other creditors.

The Attorney General replied. He said that, as to the non-existence of the Agra and Masterman's Bank, he went on the judgment now in Court. In co-partnership, acts in bankruptcy were very different from acts of bankruptcy.

The Chief Justice said that these were very difficult cases for him to determine, as they were between the banks and the creditors. It was not for the Court to aid the banks much, as against the other creditors; and he would consider the cases in a strictly legal manner. He had very grave questions to consider in the former case—as to the conduct of directors of the Hong Kong Bank, in that they lent money to directors, who were looked upon as bona fide directors who ruled that company, but who were in reality creditors instead of partners of that very company. These persons allowed Mr. Dent to appear to the world as the chairman of the bank and a large holder of shares, upon which people trusted him; but when the bankruptcy arrived, the bank at once hurried to get the execution for their debt before those who by their means had trusted him. His lordship remarked that he was sorry that he was driven by the Hong Kong Bank to consider subjects so grave; but he would never shrink from giving judgment upon any matter which came before him—at the same time, others would have to take the responsibility. He had not as yet come to a conclusion; but it was unfair (he would not say dishonest) in the bank to draw back as they had done, and then rush at priority. He wished to know what moral right the bank had to lend Mr. Dent a single cash under the deed of incorporation. He would, however, defer judgment.

The following, on a proposal that the United States should acquire a "concession" at Woosing, is from the China Mail:—

When adverting in a late issue to American interests in China, we noted the confirmation which had been given to believers in American desire for annexation by some recent official acts. We had not then noticed a communication, signed by General James L. Kiernan, and addressed to the Editor of the San Francisco Bulletin, and the manner in which our own suppositions are verified by this document is somewhat curious. We reproduce the letter in full below, as it bears upon a matter of considerable importance to British interests in China. The Consul advocates the acquisition of Woosung in a manner which would totally change foreign relations with China if carried out. According to the policy at present pursued there has been a tacit understanding between all the Treaty Powers, that, no matter what steps are taken as to establishing "settlements," no territorial acquisition shall be made by any one of them. That France has long desired to free herself from this well understood, if unwritten, agreement is no secret; it remains to be seen whether the United States will also pronounce against the present line of policy, which has hitherto, as regards France at all events, been maintained solely by the uncompromising attitude assumed by Great Britain. During Mr. Wade's tenure of office as Charge d'Affaires, he more than once positively instructed Consular officers, that the word "concession" as applied to the ground occupied by British residents, was not to be used. French officials still use the words "Concession Francaise," and have thus maintained a silent protest against the views of Great Britain, although it has been hitherto understood that the French Government has acceded to our expressed desire to avoid the assumption of direct Imperial authority over the land occupied by its subjects. If, however, the United States Government should decide upon "acquiring" Woosung the thin end of the wedge will have been inserted, and, as we can do no more than protest, the matter really rests with the American Government, which certainly has the means, both monetary and political, of attaining any such end. One thing is certain, that if the "acquisition" of Woosung by the United States becomes an accomplished fact, France will immediately follow suit, and Great Britian must then, in self-defence, assume a responsibility from which she now shrinks. We cannot say that we regret the prospect thus opened up, as we see in a British "protectorate" of various points upon the coast the best means of eventually benefiting the empire. But we cannot but urge upon the British Government the desirability of coming to some clear understanding upon the matter with other Treaty Powers, or it will find itself ignominiously "left out in the cold" as regards any negotiations which may take place, and the time has passed when a "protest" from Great Britain carried the weight of something more than a mere expression of opinion.

The following is the letter to which we refer. The italics are our own. It is headed—

AMERICAN FOOTHOLD IN CHINA—CARD FROM GEN. KIERNAN.

EDITOR BULLETIN.—In your issue of the 11th instant I notice an editorial headed "American Foothold in China," in which you advocate the acquisition of Woosung by the United States as a colony in the same manner in which the British hold Hong Kong. From my experience as Consul in China, I earnestly endorse your advocacy, and believe that Woosung, from its topographical position, is the place which for our mercantile and other interests should be acquired. It is the tongue of land at the junction of the Yangtz-te and Whangpoo rivers, fourteen miles nearer the sea than Shanghai. The heaviest freighted vessels can at any time come and anchor there, which they cannot do at Shanghai, on account of the "bar" between Woosung and that place. Being at the junction of the Great River and the Whang-poo, it would anticipate Shanghai in the way of trade, while all such advantages which Shanghai now possesses could be transferred thence by a railroad long talked of, and which, by land, would be only seven miles long.

The objections that we want no territory outside the United States is practically refuted in our purchase of Alaska and our attempted purchase of the Bay of Samana, &c. Therefore, why not acquire Woosung, which, for our future commerce, is infinitely of more importance than either? Its acquisition will be really our first foothold in the East—the first effort for commercial preponderance there, and a simple duty which the United States owes to the metropolis of the Pacific.

In my "Notes on China," published in your paper, I advocated the acquisition of Woosung several months ago. I am pleased to see that in your desire for the welfare of the country, and appreciating the future greatness of San Francisco, you second my views, and now, through you, I call on the merchants of this city to take immediate action, and by their influence on Congress, shortly to reassemble, to secure this most important "foothold" in China.

We have a representative there now, the Hon. Anson Burlinghame, who, I know from my own experience, can effect more with the Chinese Government than any other foreign representative, and who would most ably and effectually carry out the wishes and interests of the country as conveyed to him.—Yours respectfully,

James L. Kiernan, United States Consul.

We must take the liberty of doubting General Kiernan's assertion as to Mr. Burlinghame's power with the Chinese Government. On the contrary, we can positively state that individually the American Minister was able to effect less without the aid of his colleagues than the ministers of either England, France, or Russia. That he accomplished what he did was chiefly that his sincere cordiality as regarded British interests assured him of the British representative's support in most questions, and that in those which did not concern us he was at liberty to act as he saw fit, having no opposition to dread on the part of his colleagues, who were not ill pleased at his taking the onus of inducing fresh concessions. It was far different from the other treaty powers, whose arms hitherto have been so dependent upon their mutual interests that the act of one affected all. That the British minister is the chief, if not only, supporter of the new mission is significant, and we may add that we are confidently assured that the matter was under discussion at the British Legation before Mr. Burlingame even received the offer he has accepted.

SIAM.

We have been favoured by Sir John Bowring with a copy of the following congratulatory letter, or New Year's address, sent by his Majesty the King of Siam to his foreign friends in Siam and elsewhere:—

S. P. P. M. MONGKUT, called in Siamese "Phra-Chomklau chao-yuhua," in Magadhi, or language of Pali, "Siamikanam Maha Rajah," in Latin "Rex Siamensium," in French "Le Roi de Siam," in English "The King of Siam," and in Malayan "Rajah Maha Pasah," &c., begs to present his respectful and regardful compliments and congratulations in happy lives during immediately last year, and wishes the continuing thereof during the commencing New Year, and ensuing and succeeding many years, to his foreign friends, both now in Siam, namely, the functionary and acting Consuls and consular officers of various distinguished nations in treaty power with Siam, and certain foreign persons under our salary, in service in any manner here, and several gentlemen and ladies who are resident in Siam in various stations, namely, the priests preachers of religion, masters and mistresses of schools, workmen and merchants, &c., and now abroad in various foreign countries and ports, who are our noble and common friends, acquainted either by ever having had correspondences mutually with us some time, or ever had friendly personal interview with us some time, at anywhere and remaining in our friendly remembrance or mutual remembrance, and whosoever are in service to us as our consuls, vice-consuls and consular assistants, in various foreign ports. Let them know our remembrance and good wishes toward them all. Whereas this very day is known generally in Europe as the first day of the month of January, in Anno Christi 1868, the first day of the New Year, which is known by us in our native astronomical system as the day of Sdasiti sonkrant or Daxin Basu sonkrant—the day in which the sun crosses that part of Ecliptic in which part the sun's diameter was largest for the sun being lowest or nearest to the earth on that very day in the year; so that this very day was remarked by us in like manner of the 1st January of Europeans, always corresponding to the day of the Sdasiti sonkrant or Daxin Basu sonkrant to us. Though we are not Christians the forenamed king was glad to arrive this day in his valued life, as being the 23,085th day of his age, during which he was aged 63 years and three months, and being the 6,067th day of his reign, during which he reigned upon his kingdom 16 years and 8 months up to the current month. In like manner he was very glad to see and know and hope for all his Royal family, kindred and friends of both native and foreign, living near and far to him had arrived to this very remarkable anniversary of the commencement of solar year in Anno Christi 1868, which is, in Syamese astronomical system, the year 4,969th of the Kaliyug, which will be added on, being elapsed of 48 days hereafter, and being of the Chinindial civil era 1229, which will be added to be 1230 on being elapsed of 103 days hereafter. In their all being healthy and well-living like himself, he begs to express his royal congratulations and respect and graceful regards to all his kindred and friends both native and foreign, and hopes to receive such the congratulation and expression of good wishes toward him and members of his family in very like manner; as he trusts that the amity and grace to one another of every one of human beings who are innocent is a great merit, and is righteous and praiseworthy in religious system of all civil religion, and best civilised laws and morality, &c.

Given at the Royal Audience Hall, "Anant Samagome," Grand Palace, Bangkok, on the Wednesday, the seventh night of waxing moon; age of the Lunar month of Prissia, the second of the cold season in the year of Hare or Rabbit, ninth decade of the local Era 1229; corresponding to the Solar date of 1st of January, Anno Christi 1868, which may be called 18th year, or, in fact, the 6,076th day, of reign of the fourth Sovereignty in the present royal dynasty upon the Siamese kingdom.

FIRE AT FOOCHOW.

Telegrams received via Calcutta, dated Hong Kong 21st Feb., report an extensive fire at Foochow, in which it is said that the premises of Messrs. Gilman and Co., Holliday, Wise and Co., and Russell and Co., are said to have been partially destroyed. The total loss is stated at £40,000, of which £10,000 falls on the Imperial Assurance Company, £10,000 on the London, and $70,000 on the China Fire Insurance Company. The reports are somewhat obscure; one telegram, received by Messrs. Gilman and Co.'s agent in London, is in these terms:—

Hong Kong, Feb. 21.

Our office only (at Foochow) burnt. Books saved. Imports at Hong Kong in a wretched state.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA AND SHANGHAI.—Our advices from these ports are of no later dates than those received by the French mail.

CANTON.—Hardly any business had been done in consequence of China New Year, but operations were likely to be resumed after the holidays. Some 900 piculs of common lead have been sold at $7.40 to 7.45, leaving on stock 2,100 piculs. Quicksilver, 40 flasks at $72 to 73.50; stock, 40 flasks.

HONG KONG.—The China New Year having intervened since last mail, a small business had been done, at prices which show some decline on previous quotations. Now that the holidays were nearly over, a brisk trade was looked for, although heavy arrivals by the Ajax, Channel Queen, Albert Victor, and Sophie, may prevent any advance on current rates. Cotton Yarn remained very quiet, the large quantities on the spot, and expected, had completely paralysed the market; and until some of the heavy stock was worked off, the downward tendency must prevail. Woollens: There was little or nothing doing, any inquiry that did exist having completely subsided. Raw Cotton: Some few sales of Bengal staple were reported, at somewhat better prices, and should the imports from India continue on a moderate scale, there ought to be a further advance, as stocks were far from excessive. The quotations were:—Cotton Yarn, per picul, No. 16 to 24, $125 to 132.50; No. 28 to 32, $150 to 155; No. 38 to 42, $160 to 165. Shirtings, Grey, 7 lbs. piece, $2.40 to 2.45; 8.4 lbs., $2.87 to 3; 9.10 to 9.12 lbs., $3.90 to 4.25. Shirtings, White, 52 to 56 reed, $2.40 to 2.45; 64 to 66 reed, $2.90 to 3.20; 68 to 72 reed, $3.20 to 3.75. T-Cloths, 6 to 6.12 lbs., 32 in., $1.90 to 1.95; 7 lbs., $2.35 to 2.40; 8 lbs., 36 in., 3.10. Shirtings, White Spotted, $3.20 to 3.25. Shirtings, Dyed, $4.10 to 4.20. Turkey Red Shirtings, 3 lbs., $2.80 to 3.

TEA.

FOOCHOW.—Congou: Settlements had been continued on a more limited scale in consequence of the short supply. The Teas generally being of very inferior quality, the decrease in value obtained was greater than can be expressed by the quotations annexed, which show only a slight advance in price. About 1,000 chests had come forward, and it is probable that there are not above 1,000 to 1,500 chests to arrive from the interior. Souchong: Several small chops of very inferior quality had changed hands. Oolongs: About 7,000 half-chests had been taken, principally for shipment to America. 3,000 half-chests had been added to the stock, and about 1,000 packages are reported to be close at hand. Scented Teas: There had been no transactions. The sales had amounted to 5,210 chests Congous, 518 chests common Souchong, and 7,041 half-chests Oolongs. The quotations (in short taels) were:—Dust and broken leaf Congou, taels 6 to 13; ordinary common, taels 13 to 15; good common, taels 16 to 17; light flavoury, taels 18; Souchong, taels 14.5 to 17.5; common to good Oolong, taels 13 to 20.5.

CANTON.—Settlements of Country Congou had been 4 chops at rates ranging between Tls. 17 to Tls. 22½. Prices were looked upon as fully 1 to 2 Tls. higher than last home values for Teas of similar quality. It was reported that the bulk of the remaining chops were offered for, but resulted in no business—buyers were generally inclined to advance the rate 1 tael. Stock consisted of 11 chops, against same period last season 32 chops. Some inquiry had been made for District Congous at previous prices, owing to the high rates demanded for Country descriptions. Nothing desirable was to be had. A good demand was made early in the fortnight for Scented Teas and Canton-made Greens, at slightly easier prices, which may be accounted for by holders being anxious to realise previous to the holidays. Quotations are as follows:—Country Congous, Tls. 17 to 22.2.5; Canton District Congous, Tls. 17 to 20; Scented Orange Pekoe, Tls. 15.5 to 21; Scented Caper, Tls. 17 to 22; Canton Greens: Gunpowder, Tls. 11.5 to 17; do., Imperial, Tls. 21 to 23.

SILK.

CANTON.—Owing to the China New Year holidays very little business has been done. There was a fair stock of Short-reels on the market, with a good proportion of really fine silk. Long-reels, say Loonkongs and and Cumchuks, were firmly held at exorbitant prices notwithstanding the absence of inquiry on the part of foreigners. In Re-reeled but little had been done in medium kinds; fine to finest have been purchased at moderate prices. It was expected that silkmen would be easier in their asking prices as soon as business was resumed. The stock was estimated at 100 bales Loongkongs, 250 bales Tsatlee reels, 100 bales Kowkongs, 200 bales Cumchuks, Lucktows, &c. Quotations were as follows:—Tsatlee reel, best, $560; do., No. 1, $535; do., No. 2, $520; Loongkong, No. 1, $570; No. 2, $555; Cumchuk and Lucknow, No. 1, $490; Re-reeled do., No. 1, $540; Kowkong, No. 1, $480; Mahang, No. 1, $490; Seulam, No. 1, $480; Hang Tang, No. 1, $380; Punjum, No. 1, $145; Waste Silk, No. 1, $58; Pierced Cocoons, No. 1, $70.

The following is from Messrs. Sharp's Bullion Circular:—

EXCHANGE.—A slight improvement has taken place during the past fortnight in sterling exchange. At the commencement of business for the outgoing mail, credits at six months' sight were sold at 4s. 3¾d. This continued to be the quotation for some days, and most of the paper offered on the market obtained that rate, while some bills were even sold at 4s. 3¾d. At present, however, sales cannot be effected at these rates, and business has been done at 4s. 4d. It is to be feared that this improvement, slight as it is, is only of a temporary character, and caused by the unusually small demand for sterling remittance during the past few days. The estimated amount of business by the present opportunity includes about £370,000 sterling, say £110,000 bank paper, and £260,000 private bills, and four lahks rupees.

Bullion.—Since the departure of last mail no Bar Silver has been received, and no transactions of any moment have taken place, the quotation may still be given as 11¼ per cent. premium. A parcel of Canton Sycee has been placed at 9½ per cent. premium, but there is now none in the market. A small business has been done.

Shares.—There has been only a limited amount of business doing in Shares during the past fortnight. Old Bank are eagerly sought after, and the price has advanced to 10 per cent. prem., at which there are large buyers but no sellers; they close very firm at this rate. A good many large lots of New Bank have been fixed at 1 per cent. prem., and some sales have been made at ½ per cent. prem., but there are now buyers at the latter rate. About 80 Hotel Shares have changed hands at 57 per cent. discount, but there are no more sellers at this rate. There are sellers of both old and new Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock at 25 and 15 per cent. prem. respectively, and of Union Dock at 20 per cent. discount. Steamboat may be had at 18 per cent. discount, and a few are on offer at 17. China Traders is quoted 100 dols. prem.

PARLIAMENT.

THE TREATY OF TIENTSIN.

(6th.) Mr. OSBORNE asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he would lay before the House copies of memorials addressed to Her Majesty's representative in China on the Treaty of Tientsin by English Chambers of Commerce and mercantile firms in China and despatches of Her Majesty's envoy and chief superintendent consuls in China on the treaty and its revision.

Lord STANLEY: With regard to copies of the memorials there is no objection to produce them. They have been already promised, and will be ready in a few days. But the despatches are communications from the consuls, which, being still under consideration, cannot be produced at present.

THE MALTA MAILS.

(9th.) Sir G. BOWYER asked whether the Government would consider the delay which would be caused by the new mode of transmitting the mails to Malta.

Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH said the Government had already taken into consideration the delay occasioned in the transmission of the mails to Malta in consequence of the new arrangements with the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Packet Company. The Postmaster-General had arranged that, in addition to the Saturday's mail from Southampton, a mail should be despatched on Tuesday, which would reach Malta in seven days. He was not aware what arrangement could be more convenient.

THE CHINESE EMBASSY.

(9th.) Mr. OSBORNE asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if the appointment by the Chinese Government of Mr. John M'Leavy Brown (described in the Foreign-office List as Assistant Chinese Secretary of the English Embassy in China) to the post of assistant colleague of Mr. Burlinghame, the new Chinese Ambassador, had been made with the concurrence of the English Envoy and Chief Superintendent in China; and if such appointment had received the sanction of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and if Her Majesty's Government intend to enter into negotiations with Mr. Burlinghame, as chief representative of the Chinese Embassy so appointed, respecting the Treaty of Tientsin.

Lord STANLEY said the appointment in question was made with the concurrence of the British Minister in China. It was made in the first instance on Mr. Burlinghame's own responsibility, but upon the matter being reported to him he had no hesitation, under all the circumstances of the case, in approving the steps taken. With regard to the latter part of the question, he could only say he was not aware at present what his instructions were; but if he arrived, as he presumed he would, duly accredited as the representative of China, he should be prepared to enter into negotiations and discussions with him on all matters affecting the Chinese Empire.

CHINESE SLAVERY IN CUBA.—There are 40,000 Chinese slaves in Cuba' says the New York Times, and the new importations are constantly and rapidly augmenting their numbers. We call them slaves. They are really such. Their bondage only lasts for eight years, and in this respect differs from the modern slavery of the African race, but in other respects their slavery is as rigorous as it well could be. The nature of their treatment and labour, their absolute subjection to their masters, and the other conditions of their servitude, are such as to make it impossible to regard them as free labourers, or as anything else than slaves. Cuba has been compelled to resort to this system of slavery because of the stoppage of the African slave trade, which until a late day has supplied the island with labour. So enormous are the demands of Cuba for labourers,—so great are the profits of the planters from the employment of enforced labour in the raising of sugar, coffee and tobacco, and in preparing them for the markets of the world, that, when it ceased to be possible to obtain slaves from Africa, they were compelled to find them elsewhere. China opened just as Africa closed, and the work of importing the new stock was at once actively begun. The supply was unlimited, and many of the old African traders at once changed the field of their operations, and went into the new Chinese business. Instead of the demand being as yet satisfied, however, it is now greater than ever, and 1,000,000 of Chinamen would find eager masters on the moment of their arrival in the island. How they are induced to leave their native country, how they are dealt with after they get to Cuba, how they are worked till death relieves them, and, finally, how they are thrown into trenches and wrought up into compost, would form a dark piece of history. The Chinese slaves in Cuba are found to be far inferior to the African slaves on the heavy work of the plantations, but greatly superior as labourers in the great manufactories and in all employments requiring a certain amount of nimbleness, skill and perseverance. Hence, large numbers of them are employed in the great establishments in the city of Havana. No one who has seen these places but will admit the workers are a wretched-looking lot, while their remarkable efficiency is well understood by their employers. It would not be surprising if in twenty years the Chinese slaves of Cuba outnumbered all the other inhabitants of the island. They certainly would do so if women were included among the importations, and if a considerable number of the men did not return to their native land at the close of their terms of bondage. But it is only males who are brought over, and there is little mixture between the Chinese and other races on the island. As it is, however, they are rapidly increasing, and their condition and career must be a problem for the future to solve.

ABORIGINES OF FORMOSA.—Mr. Whyte, Commissioner of Customs at Takow, Formosa, sends in his report of 1867 some account of the savages of that island. This aboriginal race is now of two classes, the subdued and the unsubdued. The latter having intermarried with the Chinese and adopted their habits and customs, but preserving their own former language, are made the medium of communication with the unsubdued inhabitants of the hill country, about forty-five miles north-east of Takow. Once every eight days these savages and the Chinese, accompanied by some of the half-castes as interpreters, resort to a stated place on the border, where the Chinese barter iron and salt against dye, rice (superior to any other grown on the island), hemp, tobacco, and sweet potatoes. No Chinese ever ventures alone into the interior, and no savage crosses the border; in both cases death would follow detection. Foreigners, however, are received in the interior with friendliness and hospitality. The unsubdued savages are described as well-knit, agile men, with dark complexions, delicate features, and black hair and eyes, the latter (unlike those of the Chinese) being large and round. Every household is well supplied with bows, arrows, and muskets, and the face of the country is so bold and precipitous that they need no walls or fortifications as a defence against invasion. Of the origin of this people the Commissioner says nothing certain can be ascertained; they are unlike the Chinese in every respect, and more resemble the Malays in appearance than the natives of any other country. Their country is well supplied with game. They are gradually being absorbed among the Chinese, into whose hands it is hoped this richest part of Formosa will ultimately fall, leading to the development of mineral and other resources of vast extent.

THE AUSTRIAN EXPEDITION TO THE FAR EAST. — The Vienna correspondent of the Standard says, An instance of the inveterate dislike of the Hungarians to anything like community of action with Austria was shown in the sitting of the delegations held there on the 3rd inst. In discussing the naval budget the question was put whether Hungary would take part in the projected scientific mercantile expedition to eastern Asia. "Poor Hungary," such was the answer, "has no money for such things, and, moreover, has no interest in voting money in order that the Austrian flag may wave on foreign seas." It is in these last words lies the real motive for non-participation, and not want of funds. If Austria had offered to hoist the Hungarian flag at the maintop of the vessel going out to China and Japan, to furnish it with German scholars and men of science, whose Teutonic surnames she had first translated into Hungarian, as the Hungarians themselves are so fond of doing when a bit of glory is to be got by it, and, paying all the expenses, left Hungary to reimburse her ally when it should be convenient—which would be at the Greek Calends—then Hungary would have been delighted, and we should not have heard a syllable about her being so "poor." The Hungarians, however, have since found reason to doubt the profundity of the wisdom of the speaker on the Asiatic expedition above quoted. M. Overbeck, the Austrian Consul in Canton, is at present in Vienna, and from him it has been learned that for some time both the Chinese and Japanese employ corn flour in considerable quantities as an article of food, not confining themselves any longer, as was formerly the case, to the use of rice and rice flour only. This information has modified very considerably the resolution the Hungarians had come to of not participating in any way in the Austrian expedition to Eastern Asia, and as a fair prospect of finding a new market for their grain thus opens before them, they have given up their original intention of holding back. "Poor Hungary" will now share in the undertaking, and even though it be the flag of Austria, which by this means will wave on foreign seas.

COLONIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Daily News complains of the colonial appointments of the present Government. First of all, Mr. Pope Hennessy was entrusted with the Government of Labuan after his failure to regain a seat in Parliament. Next, the Earl of Belmore was made Governor of New South Wales; and now Sir James Elphinstone, defeated at the last general election in his attempt again to represent Portsmouth, is announced as Governor of Tasmania, all three being partisans of the present Tory Government; while there are several ex-governors who, after spending years in the prime of life as representatives of their sovereign in distant colonies at salaries which barely satisfied the cost of living in their Governments, are now reduced to inactivity, without being entitled, under the present state of the law, to retiring pensions, and who are anxious to be re-employed. In answer to their applications for further employment these gentlemen are, it is understood, told that their cases and pretensions are not forgotten; but that opportunities for re-appointment are scarce; that the Colonial Office is endeavouring when possible to consolidate Colonial Governments, and that in due time their reasonable hopes may be gratified. Meanwhile, however, they are condemned to see new men foisted at once into the greater rewards of the Colonial Office; their past services disregarded, and a slight thereby cast on their characters. The consequences of this conduct are, that profound dissatisfaction is creeping into the Colonial service, that the spring and motive for exertion are being weakened, and that no one knows on what principle the appointments of the Colonial department will henceforth be governed. The right use of patronage and appointment never was a strong point in Tory Government, and all that has been gained of late years under Liberal rule is now, it is clear, in danger. Only lately in the Court of Chancery a barrister of very ordinary capacity was raised to the appellate bench over persons of the highest eminence. Sons of two Cabinet Ministers have been made inspectors of fisheries and of factories. A few weeks ago an artillery officer was converted into an inspector of the poor law. The new Finance Minister for India is entirely without experience in finance. In the course of the present, or early next, year the Vice-Royalty of India will become vacant, and for it two members of the Cabinet are publicly said, in Tory journals, to be raising pretensions.

EXPLORATIONS IN RUSSIAN-AMERICA.—Mr. Frederick Whymper, an artist long connected with the late Russo-American Telegraph Expedition, has recently returned to London, and is, we believe, shortly to lay before the Geographical Society some notes of travel in Russian-America. That territory, so recently acquired by the United States Government, and re-christened by them "Alaska" (sometimes "Aliaska," and occasionally "Walrus-sia"!) is virtually an unknown country, and any contribution to our better knowledge of it should be welcome. In 1866-7 Mr. Whymper made a sledge journey—mainly by a land route—from Norton Sound, Bering Sea, to the Youkon River, wintering on its banks at Nulato, the most interior Russian post. In the spring he proceeded in a "baidarre," or skin-boat, up the Youkon, 600 miles, to a Hudson's Bay Company's Fort, at the confluence of the Porcupine or Rat River, and then descended its course to the sea, a distance of 1,200 miles. The Youkon (known by the Russians as the "Kwichpak") was found to be an immense stream, often opening out into shallow lagoons, and almost anywhere on its lower portion a mile to a mile and a-half wide. From explorations made by other members of the same expedition, we learn that it is navigable for 1,800 miles, and passes mainly through a wooded country. It is frozen up for seven and a-half to eight months of the year, and has in summer a very rapid current. Its most northern point is in about latitude 66 deg. N., and it need hardly be said that an Arctic climate exists. A temperature of 58 deg. Fah., or 90 deg. below freezing, was the lowest cold experienced. The summer, as in Greenland, was intensely warm. Dwelling on its banks were found some eight or nine native tribes, varying from a people near the coast, resembling Esquimaux, to representatives of the buckskin-clothed, much bedaubed, and highly-ornamented Indians of the interior. On the Youkon few of the natives have ever tasted "fire-water," and they only see traders once a year. They are in consequence a decidedly original and unsophisticated people.

THE MANCHESTER MARKETS.—Messrs. Alexr. Collie and Co., in their Monthly Price Current, dated 13th March, state:—"We have to report an active state of business in cotton and goods during the past month. With short periods of excitement and depression alternating, the tendency of prices has upon the whole been upwards, and at the moment of writing for the mail, quotations for our chief staples are at the highest point they have yet touched. There has undoubtedly been a large amount of buying in anticipation of future wants, and prices have to some extent been influenced by these operations. There have also been some purely speculative purchases, which have further strengthened the market, but the activity has arisen mainly from a healthy and legitimate demand. The accounts from most of the Eastern markets are exceedingly good. With the single exception of Batavia, the stocks in first and second hands are in no case excessive, and in the great leading markets, such as Calcutta and Bombay, the supplies on hand are remarkably small,—smaller even than at any period, during the cotton famine from 1862 to 1866. This fact has encouraged buyers for the East to anticipate the growing demand in these markets by operating very freely during the past three or four months. The home trade, too, has been exceedingly brisk, and we estimate that it is taking off at the present moment a moiety of the total production of our looms. In the business of the month Shirtings have figured for the largest share, all widths and weights being equally in favour in proportion to their usual scale of production. Long Cloths have attracted little attention. T-Cloths have been freely dealt in. Madapollams are in very great request, and are well engaged for future delivery. Grey Printers share in the demand and are scarce. Jacconets and Mulls have been largely inquired for, and the latter have advanced in value a greater per centage than any other other article in the market. In Yarns a very large advance has taken place, particularly in the lower numbers, and a fair business has been done in them at a shade under the quotations."

THE CHINA MISSION.

IN our record of Parliamentary proceedings there is one paragraph that will excite both astonishment and disgust in the minds of our readers. We refer to the announcement made by Lord STANLEY in the House of Commons that he had approved the appointment of Mr. JOHN MCLEAVY BROWN as member of Mr. BURLINGHAME'S Embassy, and that he was prepared to enter into negotiations or discussions with Mr. BURLINGHAME (should his credentials prove authentic) on "all matters affecting the "Chinese Empire." In ur opinion a more fatal error could hardly have been committed. By this hastily-given pledge—which it will be impossible hereafter to withdraw—Lord STANLEY has virtually bound himself to accept just such a settlement of the Treaty revision question as Mr. BURLINGHAME may have authority to offer. The process of revision is removed from the spot where alone it could be effectually carried out, and the responsibility that should rightfully devolve on our Minister at Peking, is removed from his shoulders. Whatever concessions Lord STANLEY may make to the "Chinese Empire," as represented by Mr. BURLINGHAME, must of course be faithfully carried out; on the other hand, whatever undertaking Mr. BURLINGHAME may enter into on behalf of his slippery clients, will inevitably be treated by them as waste paper whenever they find, or fancy, that their interests will be served by such a course. This BURLINGHAME mission, too, comes to us as a second-hand affair. The Ambassador visits the United States first, so that whatever arrangements the American Government may see fit to make with the citizen they are receiving in the guise of a foreign envoy, will serve as a precedent for his proposals to our own Government; and as all questions to be discussed must necessarily be regarded by Mr. BURLINGHAME from an American point of view, any negotiations into which we enter with him cannot fail to be influenced accordingly. It will be observed, too, that Lord STANLEY, when asked to produce copies of the memorials and despatches regarding the revision of the Treaty, refused the latter, on the ground that they were "still under "consideration." This strengthens the supposition that the subject is being "considered" here instead of at Peking—to what purpose we cannot understand. Had Lord STANLEY, in his reply to Mr. OSBORNE, said that "Her MAJESTY'S Government "would welcome the coming mission as an evidence of the good "feeling of China towards this country, and would negotiate "with Mr. BURLINGHAME on all matters excepting the revision "of the Treaty, which must take place at Peking," all would have been well. But as it is, the Foreign Secretary stands committed to a course of action that can, we fear, end in nothing but discomfiture. He has evidently been persuaded, by representations from Peking, to accede to propositions that he would, if left to his own unbiassed judgment, have rejected with contempt.

A PARLIAMENTARY paper just issued contains the "Agreement "under which Play-rooms are now held in Heligoland," and a copy of the Hong Kong Ordinance No. 9 of 1867, generally known as the "Gambling Ordinance." The bare text only of the document is given, without any correspondence, comments, or information regarding its working.

GUNBOATS FOR CHINA.

IT will be remembered that in the Navy Estimates of last year a certain sum was appropriated for the construction of twin screw composite gunboats for service in the China Sea. Some wise economists—notably Mr. CHILDERS, Mr. STANSFIELD, and Colonel SYKES—opposed the item as an extravagant one; this elicited a Ministerial explanation to the fact that piracy was on the increase in China waters, owing to the slowness and inefficiency of our gunboats there, and that the ten new, fast, and powerful vessels were necessary to replace them, and thus secure adequate protection for our commerce. To a certain extent the views of the reformers found favour in the eyes of the House, and the number was ultimately cut down to eight; these eight however, were promptly commenced, and we have from time to time recorded, with much satisfaction, the progress made with "the new gunboats for service in "China." Some have already been launched, and have made satisfactory trial trips; others are said to be nearly ready, and an Admiralty order was lately issued to the effect that some six or eight of them were to be ready for commission by the 1st of April. It is with no little disappointment that we state that at present there is little chance that any of these will find their way to their legitimate destination. That they have been specially built for the China station there can be no doubt; but on making inquiries regarding their despatch, we are informed that none of the gun-vessels lately launched, or now building, are intended specially for China; that they will be commissioned as they are ready, for any station where they may be required; and that there is no present intention to despatch any of them to China! This seems almost incredible; it appears nevertheless to be a fact, and we must add, one that is most unaccountable on the part of the Admiralty.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

THE accounts respecting the progress of the work of dredging out the great canal are very contradictory; on the one hand, we are told that the soil has been found to be full of stones which break the buckets and render the work slow and troublesome, while on the other it is stated that 30 dredging machines are in full work, that since the beginning of the present year the excavations have amounted to at least two millions of tons, and that the ship canal may be expected to be opened about the end of 1869. In the meantime, official accounts have appeared of the amount of traffic on the small canal during the present year, the receipts being given as follows:—

	Francs. Cts.
First quarter	255,149.67
Second ditto	262,754.27
Third ditto	300,321.56
October	231,996.41
Total	1,050,221.91

It is calculated that the receipts of the last two months will have carried the amount to 1,500,000f. (£60,000). These results have obtained from a tariff reduced 33 per cent. as compared with the charges made in 1866. It is stated that the English Government sent no less than 19,000 cases of stores to the Suez Hospital for the use of the Abyssinian expedition by this route, and that the Messageries Imperiales and the Peninsular and Oriental Company avail themselves of it for the transport of coal to Suez.

THE DEATH OF MRS. JARDINE.

IT is with the deepest regret that we have to record the death of Mrs. JARDINE, wife of ROBERT JARDINE, Esq., M.P., and head of the firm of Messrs. JARDINE, MATHESON, and Co., China. This melancholy event took place on the 7th inst., in the twenty-first year of her age, about six weeks after the birth of a son and heir. The deceased, MARGARET SETON, was daughter of JOHN BUCHANAN HAMILTON, Esq., of Lerry. The marriage rejoicings, our readers will remember, attracted considerable attention, for the bride was much beloved and esteemed in her native home. Her loss to the neighbourhood was considered of much importance, especially among the poorer classes, who occupied much of her attention. Hard indeed is it to bow to the will of Providence in removing her from this world; for a more happy and useful marriage seemed impossible. Both husband and wife possessed all those virtues calculated to produce happiness in themselves and all around them. Nothing was wanting; they possessed ample means and hearts that could feel for the wants of their fellow creatures.

It may truly be recorded as one of the most painful and melancholy bereavements ever inflicted. One consolation does remain—and not a light one—that her Christian life in this world has doubtless secured for her a place in heaven. In the words of the poet Lyte, we may say :—

"Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away.

The remains of the deceased lady have been removed to the home of her childhood in Dumfriesshire, and the burial will take place to-morrow (the 14th inst.) In our next issue we shall give an account of the funeral.

WESTERN CHINA.

An Indian correspondent of The Times gives an interesting account of the steps now being taken to open up the trade with Western China. He states that the Bhamo expedition, through the Shan Khakyea country to Talifoo, capital of the Panthays, in South-Western China, left Mandalay on the 13th of January. The King lent Captain Sladen and the members one of his steamers, but the Irrawaddy is so low at this season that they would probably have to take to boats. At Bhamo, mules were ready for them. After spending the large sum of 32,800r., the route advocated by Messrs. Sprye, and surveyed to our frontier, has been most properly abandoned. The survey was forced on the Government of India, in opposition to its better judgment, by Lord Cranborne, who himself yielded to pressure which Sir C. Wood long intelligently resisted. Whatever be the result of the expedition, they are on the old caravan route by which the trade of South-Western China has found its way to Pegu and the Bay of Bengal for centuries. Nothing more has been heard of the French expedition up the Cambodia, which left Saigon nineteen months ago; but correspondents in Upper Burmah believe that it has gone to the highest possible point up the Cambodia, and thence crossed by the caravan route to the Yang-tse-kiang, down which it will sail to Shanghai. Meanwhile, the authorities of British Burmah have made a most important proposal—to construct a railway from Rangoon up the left bank of the Manaddy, 180 miles, to the large city of Prome. A trunk road is being made, at any rate, and the work might be utilised. This is the highway to the frontier at Thyetmyo, to Mandalay, Bhamo, and China. For local purposes the line is required; and it would pass through the most fertile and populous part of Pegu. But it would prove the first section of the true line, for tapping the trade of Sechuen would be to the Manadely and China what the East India line is to the Ganges and the North-West. Now that the Government of India has committed itself to a noble project of guaranteed railway extension, British Burmah should have its share, and this line would be made in a district where timber is inexhaustible, and only one big bridge, the Hlyne, is required.

LAUNCH OF A STEAMER FOR CHINA.

ON Tuesday, the 10th inst., there was launched from Messrs. HALL, RUSSELL, and Co.'s building yard a screw steamer for the trade on the coast of China of the following dimensions :—Length between perpendiculars, 220 feet; breadth of beam, 31 feet 6 inches; depth of hold, 22 feet 9 inches; builder's measurement, 1,440 tons. She is fitted with a pair of direct acting condensing engines of 170-horse power nominal, capable of working up to 600, having extra large boilers with all the modern appliances for saving fuel. She is constructed of iron, with decks and fittings of teak wood, and has a spar deck fore and aft. Her saloon and 'tween deck accommodation will be fitted with due regard to efficient ventilation, which is so necessary to the climate and trade in which she is to be employed, and will accommodate 20 first, 40 second, and 250 third-class passengers; leaving the entire of the lower hold for cargo, for the loading and discharging of which there are two steam winches fitted on the spar deck. She will be brig-rigged, and fitted with the latest improvements for striking yards and masts, and reflects the greatest credit on her builders.

She is owned by DOUGLAS, LAPRAIK and Co., and is intended as a consort to the screw steamer Douglas, which was built in the same yard some time ago, and proves very successful. She is to be commanded by Captain SHEPPERD. The launch was accomplished very successfully, and as she glided into the water Miss STRACHAN gracefully christened her the Quang Tung.*

* Kwang Tung would have been better. It is a pity that the use of the Q — long since abandoned by universal consent in spelling Chinese names—should thus be perpetuated.

A NEW JAPANESE DICTIONARY.

Dictionnaire Japonais-Francais, traduit du Dictionnaire Japonais-Portugais. Publié par Léon Pagés. Paris: Firmin Didot Frères, Fils et Cie.—We have to note the completion of this work, which has been in the press six years. It has been issued in parts, the fourth of which is now in our hands. The editor still promises a valuable addition in a translation of the famous grammar of Rodriguez, and a geographical vocabulary, compiled by Mr. F. V. Dickins, author of Translations of Japanese Odes. These latter portions are to be speedily forthcoming, and will form a separate volume. The dictionary is now completed, and makes a large volume in imperial octavo. It is remarkably well printed. The Japanese words are given in a bold black type, with the same in Katakana also.

The original work is a curiosity of literature, having been published first in Japan, in Portuguese and Latin, and afterwards in Manila, in Spanish, in the former case by the missionaries of the Society of Jesus, and in the latter by a Dominican monk. Copies of these works are now very rarely found in Europe or Japan. The Bodleian Library in Oxford possesses the dictionaries in Portuguese and Latin, as well as Rodriguez's grammar, and the Marsden Library of King's College contains one dictionary, Latin-Portuguese Japanese. These we believe to be the only copies in England. The learning and industry of the Jesuits is well known; no difficulties ever prevented them from accomplishing any work necessary to gain over the people of heathen lands to their own faith, and in these erudite works they have left enduring monuments of their zeal and ability.

We lately announced the publication of Dr. Hepburn's Japanese Dictionary, which is a work of sterling merit in lexicography, and we can with equal confidence recommend M. Léon Pagés' dictionary as being alike a necessity for the student of Japanese. They are supplementary to each other. The dictionary of the Jesuits is especially necessary for the readers of Japanese literature, and Dr. Hepburn's work is adapted for the student of the colloquial language more particularly, although it also contains numerous expressions peculiar to the classical and the Buddhistic literature of Japan.

WE understand that all vessels passing Anjer bound to Java are now reported to Batavia by telegraph, at the expense of the Chamber of Commerce, and vessels bound for other ports are reported by post. Should the captains or owners of the latter wish a telegraphic report, the cost of the message must be sent to Mr. SCHUIT, the harbour-master at Anjer, who will forward the telegram.

LETTER FROM MR. BURLINGHAME.

The State Department at Washington has received the following letter from Mr Burlinghame, dated Shanghai, Dec. 11, 1867 :—

SIR,—You will have learned from my telegram from Peking of my appointment by the Chinese Government as envoy to the Treaty Powers, and of my acceptance of the same. The facts in relation to the appointment are as follows: I was on the Percipy, proceeding to the treaty ports of China to ascertain what changes our citizens desired to have made in the treaties, provided a revision should be determined upon, after which it was my intention to resign and go home. The knowledge of this coming to the Chinese, Prince Kung gave a farewell dinner, at which great regret was expressed at my resolution to leave China, and urgent requests made that I would, like Sir Frederick Bruce, state China's difficulties, and inform the Treaty Powers of their sincere desire to be friendly and progressive. This I cheerfully promised to do. During the conversation Wensiung, a leading man of the empire, said—"Why will you not represent us officially?" I repulsed the suggestion playfully, and the conversation passed to other topics. Subsequently I was informed that the Chinese were most desirous, and a request was made through Mr. Brown, Chinese Secretary of the British Legation, that I should delay my departure for a few days, until a proposition could be submitted to me. I had no further conversation with them until the proposition was made in form, requesting me to act for them as ambassador to all the Treaty Powers. I had in the interim thought anxiously upon the subject, and after consultation with my friends, determined, in the interests of our country and civilisation, to accept. The moment the position was formally tendered, I informed my colleagues of all the facts, and am happy to say that they approved of the action of the Chinese, and did all they could to forward the interests of the mission. J. M'Leary Brown, late Chinese Secretary of the British Legation, was persuaded in the common interest to act as first secretary to the mission, and Mr. Dechamps, a French gentleman, who had accompanied Ping on a visit to Europe, was selected as second secretary. Two Chinese gentlemen of the highest rank were selected from the Foreign-office to conduct the Chinese correspondence and as couriers. My suite will number about 30 persons. I shall leave for the United States by the return steamer for California. I limit myself in this note to the above brief history of the mission, reserving my reason for accepting it to a personal interview at Washington. I may be permitted to add, that when the oldest nation in the world, containing one-third of the human race, seeks for the first time to come into relations with the West, and requests the youngest nation through its representative to act as a medium of such charge, the mission is one not to be solicited or rejected. Dr. L. Wells Williams, for the sixth time, has been left in charge of the United States Legation in China, and is in every respect competent to conduct its affairs. Permit me to request the Government most earnestly not to name my successor until I can give it information, which may be useful in making a selection.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant. ANSON BURLINGHAME.

Hon. Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State.

LETTERS ON THE CHINA MISSION.

A letter on the subject of the Burlinghame Mission, which was sent to the editor of the North China Daily News for publication, but was refused insertion by the Editor on the grounds that there were expressions in it "which might offend Mr. Burlinghame personally," has been printed for private circulation. The writer states that "he has taken the question up on purely public grounds, and has merely expressed in plain, unvarnished English a very wide-spread feeling of dissatisfaction at Mr. Burlinghame's present appointment."

SIR,—I have been looking anxiously during the past week for an expression of opinion in the Shanghai press on Mr. Burlinghame's appointment as Chinese Ambassador to Europe, but up to the present both the press and the public have been silent. Is it possible that the news has been so unexpected, so very unlooked for, that we have not yet had time to weigh its import and estimate its value? It may be perhaps that the intelligence has been of such a startling nature that the foreign community has for the most part hesitated in attaching credit to it, and even those of them who did believe it looked upon the affair as one of those curious Oriental mysteries, the solution of which would require considerable time and information. A mystery it certainly is—an Aladdin's wonder in this land of wonders—a mystification and a puzzle, the clue to which it is not easy to obtain.

The question suggests itself at the outset—what can be the origin and what the object of this movement on the part of the Chinese? Has it been the spontaneous offspring of their own thought—having its birth in the mind of some enlightened native official, some statesman who is in advance of his age and is prepared to adopt Western ideas of progress and reform?—or is it the scheme of some subtle European brain who sees in it a means of furthering his own interests and, it may be, of conferring a tithe of good on the empire at large? We are told in the published explanation of the affair that the scheme was suddenly and unexpectedly proposed to Mr. Burlinghame by Wen Ta-Jên at a banquet given him by the Chinese Minister shortly before his departure from Peking. And from reading his apparently semi-official communication in the North China Daily News of the 11th inst., it would seem as if the foreign world at Peking were taken by surprise at the project.

I could as well believe, however, that the scheme was the spontaneous conception of a Chinaman, as that a Chinaman would of his own accord suggest the establishment of a Foreign-office at Peking under the entire control and management of foreigners. To an impartial, unprejudiced mind there is very little spontaneity in the affair. A Chinese official would be about the last man in the universe to whom such an idea would suggest itself. Embassies in our sense of the word are very rare indeed in the history of this country—owing to the fact that the Government admits of no equal amongst foreign States, and it is therefore quite incredible to any one who has the least acquaintance with the people, that a foreign embassy, entirely under foreign control and management, should be the spontaneous suggestion of a Chinaman.

To my mind there is but one source from which this attractive looking project of a mission to Europe could have its origin, and that is from the fertile brain of the Inspector General of Maritime Customs. Since Mr. Hart has taken up his permanent residence at Peking he has been gradually working his way into influence both amongst foreign and native officials. His progress has been quiet and stealthy, but not the less steady and certain. Without the assumption of any importance he has gradually gained a hold over the native mind, and his position is now so secure amongst the governing boards that he has positively become a power in the capital. Very little of importance in connection with foreign affairs is now transacted at Peking in which Mr. Hart has not got a potential voice. Of course he never appears in such matters; is never put forward as the ostensible adviser or originator. Possibly he finds it safer to move the wires and wield the power from behind the scenes than to run the risk of being connected with measures which might prove to be a failure, and would probably entail considerable odium. That he has managed, however, to obtain very considerable influence, and mix himself up with State politics, is undeniable. The foreign representatives must feel that he is now a power amongst them, and a power the more dangerous from the fact that he never openly appears in connection with the affairs of the Government, and is irresponsible for their failure. The Russian is the only European Power that has hitherto kept aloof from his schemes. He worked hard for a foreign Customs establishment in Mongolia, but M. Vlangali quietly set his face against it, and the project fell through.

I am afraid that Mr. Hart is too much for our Ministers at Peking. He is apparently master of the situation in the north at present, and in no instance so completely as in the appointment of Mr. Burlinghame. It is a fine thing to be Inspector-General of Maritime Customs and draw an enormous salary of £20,000 to £30,000 a year, but it would be much more gratifying if there were something else to fall back upon after a few years—some such post for example as that of permanent Ambassador to Europe. This would be a post worth working for; a position to which it would be pleasant for an Inspector-General to retire when he shall have made his fortune in China. Should the present mission turn out a failure, and the European Courts refuse to receive Mr. Burlinghame—there the matter ends and no harm is done as far as Mr. Hart is concerned. He has never appeared and cannot of course be made responsible. Under such circumstances Mr. Burlinghame will become the scapegoat, and he will have to bear the brunt of disaster. If, on the contrary, the mission should prove to be a success and be well received in Europe, then the thin end of the wedge has been inserted. Mr. Burlinghame returns to China; he is feted and thanked and rewarded. He has played his part, however; done what was required of him, and he must now make way for other actors. Within a few years of Mr. Burlinghame's retirement another mission to Europe will be projected, and Mr. Hart will retire as permanent Chinese Ambassador on a salary of £10,000 a year!

This is not a very noble role for the United States Minister to play, but I fear it is the one that Mr. Burlinghame is just now performing.

Here the question naturally suggests itself—whether or not it is advisable for the foreign Ministers to permit of Mr. Hart's permanent residence at Peking, and to encourage the growth of that influence which he is acquiring over the Chinese mind. When the Treaty of Tientsin stipulated that British subjects were to be at liberty to assist the Chinese in the collection of Maritime Customs, was it in the contemplation of either of the contracting parties that such collectors of Customs were to become the political advisers of the Chinese? Lord Elgin scarcely contemplated, I should fancy, such an unusual metamorphosis as the transmutation of a revenue collector into a political power at Peking—a power the more dangerous for being intangible and irresponsible, and one that may at any time nullify the action of the Ministers themselves. If Mr. Hart be a collector of customs—let him be so; but then, where is the necessity for the permanent residence at the capital? If he unites the character of politician with his other duties, let such be clearly understood, and let his position be recognised and defined by the foreign Powers and the Chinese Government. Until some such arrangement is made he may at any time prove an impediment and an obstacle at a critical moment of our international relations.

But to return to Mr. Burlinghame. Admitting for a moment that his mission is a purely Chinese idea, we are at once led to inquire as to what its object may be. If it has reference solely to the revision of the Treaty, then it must mean either of two things—viz., that the Chinese are prepared to adopt progressive measures, or are on the contrary inclined to retrograde or stand still. If progress be the import of the mission, there is no need for Mr. Burlinghame; the Chinese authorities here will find the representatives of the foreign Powers only too happy to welcome any steps in advance. There is no necessity for an intermediate in a case such as this; a concession will come with better grace from their own lips, and will be the more readily accepted as genuine and sincere. If, however, as is highly probable, the mission implies a retrograde movement, an effort on the part of the Chinese to stay the action of the Treaty Powers, as the Japanese did with regard to the opening of Osaka some three years ago, then we must look upon Mr. Burlinghame merely as a special pleader—a mercenary (I use the word in no derogatory sense) paid for his services, and employed by a feeble and impotent Government to try and extort from the European Powers that which they themselves despair of obtaining from the indulgence of the foreign representatives in China. Whether Mr. Burlinghame and his mission will be received in Europe under such circumstances is questionable in the extreme. What have the home Governments to do with interlopers or special pleaders of this description? Great Britain and France and Prussia ought to be able to conduct their own affairs direct with the Chinese Government without the intevention of go-betweens. Cannot our Minister (British) manage the affairs of Her Majesty's Government in China without reference to Mr. Hart or Mr. Burlinghame? What have they to do with our international relations? Is the policy of England to be at the mercy of every adventurer in the country, whether he be an Inspector of Customs or a retiring American politician for whom notoriety is capital? Can the representative of the Queen suggest no nobler role for the nation than that of pandering to the vanity or ambition of political schemers? I fear that we have fallen upon evil times; the reins of Government are in weak hands; a Minister of the Crown now finds it more profitable to sit quietly and accept events for peace and comfort, than to influence them as has been the wont of our countrymen in other times.

It is to be hoped, however, that the home Government will see Mr. Burlinghame's mission from the true point of view, and refuse to recognise it. It will be a lesson to political schemers in China when the head of the present mission is told that Great Britain will have nothing to do with him; that he had better confine himself to his own affairs; and that when we have to revise a treaty or transact other business with the Chinese Government we can do so without the intervention of any foreign meddlers.

14th December, 1867. CIVIS BRITANNICUS.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

The Calcutta correspondent of The Times has the following remarks on the cultivation and export of opium to China:—

The state of the case is this. China will have opium, just as England will have gin, and Scotland whisky. All facts go to show that the abuse of opium in China, while great, is by no means equal to that of alcohol in Europe. The moral question is not whether China may be supplied with opium, but whether England, as a nation, as the ruling Power of India, ought, in its official and national character, to grow, manufacture, and export the drug, the use of which, after two or three wars, has been legalised in China. Yet this is the position of England at this moment in relation to three-fourths of the opium exported from India. I have taken the trouble of testing the arguments of the Bombay school—who say they are free from all such objections—and of the Bengal school—who are obstinate Conservatives—by studying the working of both systems on the spot. England ought rather, it is said, at once to cut all connexion with the monopoly system, by leaving the growth and manufacture of opium to the ordinary laws of supply and demand, and assume the only true position for a moral and Christian Government of putting on opium the very highest duty it will bear, so as to reduce the abuse attending its consumption to a minimum. Now, in Bengal it is as responsible for the trade as any English distiller, or rather as Mr. Disraeli would be if he drew the revenue from a State monopoly of the growth of malt and manufacture of alcohol. In Bombay, on the other hand, England holds the unassailable position of the man who says, "Opium is a natural gift, liable to abuse; China will have it and India will grow it. I tax every chest of 112 lb. exported £60, to check the export and restrain the abuse." It is obvious that under the Bombay system of Excise the moral responsibility of the whole nation is not only removed, but the precarious character of the revenue ceases. Poppy-growing and opium manufacture become a trade with China as cotton is with England, and the only question for the Indian Government is, "how heavy a tax will the opium bear?" The change in Bengal doubtless could not be effected all at once; and even if carried out gradually the revenue for a year or two would be reduced. But this, at the worst, is the price which must be paid to get rid, not only of an intolerable and unusual responsibility of a national character—such as Russia even lately shook off, but to secure permanence and even healthy increase in a branch of revenue which would be as steady as the Excise or Customs duties. Mr. Gladstone himself could not calculate on his ways and means if he had to depend on opium, under the present Bengal system, for a sixth of his revenue. Much less can persons like Mr. Massey, who, with no Indian experience, have to depend on the fiscal policy of the very Government and Board of Revenue whose notions of political economy sacrificed Orissa, and who are bound up in the present system, with its vast establishments, which afford highly paid sinecures to the senior civilians pronounced incompetent for a judgeship.

What are the facts? As to Bengal, I have gone through the poppy-fields of Shahalad and have witnessed every detail of the manufacture in the enormous godowns of Patna. Under a severe contract law, twice as penal as any that have ever been proposed for ordinary agricultural produce and scouted by England, advances of money are annually made to the peasants of Behar, Benares, and elsewhere. The State lies out of these advances for a year. Its establishments of highly paid officials, and oppressive or colluding native subordinates, supervise every detail—the preparation of the fields, the sowing, the weeding, the scraping of the capsules, the collection of the crude juice, its transit to the State factory, and its sale in Calcutta. Yet, in spite of its expensive establishments, smuggling is the rule. A large portion is left in the hands of the growers in an average year, and this is sold to men in the Calcutta Bazaar, whose agents bring it down in boats covered by onions, at once to conceal the drug and its smell, or in small bundles by railway. Last year a special detective agency was employed, and made alarming discoveries of this character. In the fields of Malwa, even under the gross misgovernment of native States, the cultivation and trade thrive, because they are on a healthy system of free trade, checked only by excise duties. The peasant ploughs, pounds, and manures his fields the moment the rainy season closes. He, or his money-lender, manufactures a very pure opium after a very simple fashion, takes it to our Political Agency at Indore, pays his £60 a chest of 112 lb. gross, and receives his pass to Bombay, whence the chest is exported on the Political Agent's passport. There is no reason why more than £60 a chest should not be taken high as that seems. If the growth and manufacture were similarly free in Bengal, away from the abuses of native States, and with facilities of transit unknown in Central India, a better opium than at present would be produced by competition. Nor need the cultivation and manufacture be any more free and widespread than is the case with spirits here. A licence might be exacted on the cultivation within certain areas; the produce might be manufactured in a licensed factory, and the whole be worked as under the existing central distillery arrangement. The study of both the monopoly and excise syatems on the spot convinces me that the former will not bear the light of day, and that the latter needs only a fair trial to prove a financial success, both in the amount and permanence of the revenue, as well as its freedom from all moral and economical objections. The Secretary of State should call for Sir Charles Trevelyan's minute, and the other papers extending from Sir R. Hamilton's and Sir W. Muir's proposals in 1856 to the present day.

NAVAL AND MILITARY.

Some interesting practice took place at Shoeburyness last week in presence of General Taylor, the Inspector-General of Artillery, who has been engaged for the last few days in carrying out his usual half-yearly inspection of that station. The 9-inch muzzle-loading rifled gun was fired with its 250 lb. projectile at the Shoeburyness "running deer," which consists of a wooden target five feet square, mounted on a light carriage, which is dragged at a rapid pace over the sands by means of a team of horses and a long rope. On this occasion the target was at 1,000 yards, and on a given signal started across the sands at a trot, the gunners at the same time opening fire on it with the 9-inch gun. Ten rounds were fired in a little under 8½ minutes, the practice being admirable. All the shots fell close to the target, two of them passing right through it. When it is considered that at this distance the 9-inch rifle gun is capable of sending a Palliser shell through any foreign ironclad at present afloat, and that a considerable number of these formidable weapons are available at this moment for our land and sea defences, such a proof of the accuracy and ease of working of the gun is extremely satisfactory.

We understand that a Royal Commission is about to be appointed to inquire into the whole system of courts-martial. With, possibly, the exception of the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts, there is no branch of our jurisprudence so complicated and unsatisfactory in its operation as our military law. Most of the prominent courts-martial of the last few years threw such discredit on the institution that our wonder is no previous Minister of War took the step which Sir John Pakington has now taken.

Her Majesty's composite gunboat Dwarf, intended for service in China, was on the 29th ult. removed from the fitting basin at Woolwich and was placed in No. 2 dock, for the purpose of being fitted with a false keel and bilge chocks, which, from experience in vessels of similar draught of water, are necessary to check the rolling of the ship.

The following new twin-screw composite gun-boats are ordered to be ready for commission by the 1st of April:—Avon, Beacon, Bullfinch, Cracker, Elk and Ringdove.

Accounts from Portsmouth are not favourable as to the health of Admiral Sir H. D. Chads, G.C.B. Sir Henry is 80 years of age, and is labouring under extreme weakness, yet he forms one of the twenty active Admirals of the British fleet.

Captain Thomas Symonds, R.N., has received the sum of five hundred pounds from the Admiralty for his services in connection with the improvement of shipbuilding.

Officers belonging to the China Command will not be allowed consolidated allowances while on passage between China and Japan.

The double screw gunvessel Seagull, 3, was launched at Devonport dockyard last week. She measures 663 tons, is 170 feet long, 29 feet broad, and has a depth of hold of 12 feet 5 inches. Her engines will be 160-horse power nominal. The Seagull, like her sister gunboat, the Lapwing, in the same yard, is built of wood with iron stringer plates on the beams, for the purpose of obtaining increased strength. Immediately after being launched the Seagull was removed into the basin, ready for being placed in dock, where her launching cleats will be taken off, and she will be coppered.

Monetary and Commercial.

—o—

The rise in the Indian exchanges consequent on the firm state of the cotton market has within the last day or two induced a demand for silver for the East. About £250,000 has been taken at 5s. 0⅜d. to 5s. 1⅛d. for shipment to Bombay and Calcutta.

It is noticed that there is less inclination amongst the foreign houses to take six months' India and China bank bills, unless at a sensible increase upon the terms lately current, and from this it is inferred that a further advance in the rates is regarded by them as probable.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company have made a reduction in their rate of freight for silver of ½ per cent. to India, and ¼ per cent. to China and Japan. We think this an unwise step on the part of the company, as the difference will in all probability go from the pockets of the shareholders into those of the importers of bullion.

Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank shares have risen £3 10s., in consequence of the receipt of telegrams that a dividend of 12 per cent. would be declared, after placing a large sum to the reserve fund.

The sale of the Labuan Coal-mines, with the plant, &c., has been concluded for the sum of £7,500.

The question of a regular mail communication with Penang is still agitated, and it has been suggested that advantage could be taken of the opium steamers now running between Calcutta, the Straits, and China, as a means of conveying English mails, not only to the Straits, but to China, as all correspondence for Calcutta is now sent via Bombay, and the Straits by this route could be reached quicker than by Galle. This would of course necessitate the fixing of the opium sales about a day or two before the due date of the mail from England. We hope the Indian Government will give attention to this question, as, independent of the service rendered to the Straits and China, it seems but rational that the opium sales and steamers should correspond with the arrival of mails from England. The matter should be taken up by the Straits Settlements Association.

A large meeting of the creditors of Messrs. W. H. Smith, Barry, and Co., who suspended on the 25th ult., has been held at the offices of Messrs. C. F. Kemp, Cannan, Ford, and Co., when a resolution was unanimously passed to place the estate under inspection, and three of the principal creditors were appointed inspectors. The debts are about £60,000, and the estate shows assets to nearly the same amount, but as these are chiefly in India some time must elapse before the inspectors will be able to report the probable result to the creditors.

The report of the National Bank of India (Limited), to be presented on the 16th inst., shows an available balance of £23,792, and recommends a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, with a bonus of 1 per cent., and the appropriation of £2,200 to reserve, which will then amount to £32,200, leaving £3,064 to be carried forward The paid-up capital is £463,200, and the deposits held are £709,568.

Mr. Henry Rutter, encouraged by the success of his "Bullion and Exchange Tables," has published a set of "Silk and Tea Tables" for the use of merchants in the China trade These possess a great advantage over those in which the charges are calculated at one maximum rate throughout, as Mr. Rutter gives tables based on various rates of charges, ranging from the highest to the lowest that are possible, so that his tables can never become obsolete from changes that may occur in the trade. The volume has been very neatly got up by Mr. Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange.

A private meeting of shareholders in Overend, Gurney, and Co. (Limited) has been held to appoint a committee to carry on proceedings at common law to try the question as to the liability of the directors, and four of the shareholders were accordingly nominated.

BOARD OF TRADE RETURNS.

The Board of Trade returns for January show a falling off of £534,154, or about 4 per cent., in the declared value of our exportations compared with those of the corresponding month of last year, and of about 14 per cent. compared with January, 1866. Much of this reduction is due to the fall in cotton, which has caused the actual business carried on to figure for a diminished amount, while in the quantity of goods manufactured and shipped there has actually been an increase. Thus, although the Manchester goods exported were 13 per cent. less in value than in the same month of last year, their quantity was 14 per cent. larger. In cotton yarns the transactions have been considerable, and they show an increase of 25 per cent. in value and 55 per cent. in quantity. Among the other leading branches of industry iron and silk manufactures are alone on the favourable side. There has been an increase of 17 per cent. in the former and 39 per cent. in the latter. A decrease is shown of 18 per cent. in haberdashery, 5 per cent. in hardware, 16 per cent. in linen manufactures, 8 per cent. in woollen yarns, and 16 per cent. in woollen goods. As regards the principal importations of the month, it appears that the cotton landed was 193,174 cwt., against 147,032 in January, 1867; and that the arrivals of wheat were 2,724,152 cwt., against 2,280,431 in January, 1867, more than half being from Russia and the United States, which figure respectively for nearly equal amounts.

The following is a summary of those figures which relate to our Import and Export trade with China and other countries in the Far East:—

THE HONG KONG FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

DIRECTORS' REPORT.

The annexed statements show a balance in favour of the Company, exclusive of capital, of 93,210.43 dollars, from which will have to be deducted the following sums, viz.:—Balance of claims at the fire of the 28th November last, not yet paid, 19,793.44 dollars; Commissions to General Managers and Agents not yet paid, 5,317.84 dollars; one year's office rent to 31st December, 1867, not yet paid, 1,200 dollars, equal to 26,311.28 dollars, leaving the sum of 66,899.15 dollars to the credit of the company after payment of all losses and charges, and exclusive of capital.

The total nett loss sustained by the Company at the fire of the 28th November last in Hong Kong was 88,951.60 dollars.

A sum of 63,000 dols. is now deposited with the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, bearing interest at the rate of (6 per cent.) six per cent. per annum. Eighteen shares have been allotted during the past year, and the capital account with the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank now stands at 81,000 dols.

Although the position of the Company, as shown by the accounts, is highly satisfactory and would admit of the declaration of a dividend, the Committee are of opinion that in the permanent interests of the Shareholders it would be unwise to make a division of profits at present, and they therefore recommend that the whole amount be carried forward to new account.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR 1868.

The Proprietor has made arrangements to run six couriers per month in May and June, in the event of delay in the transmission of telegrams by the Russian Telegraph Service. It may not be generally known that the delays during the last season were occasioned by the overflowing of the Rivers Irtisch, Obi, and Yenessei; upwards of 800 versts of Telegraph Line were swept away from time to time. As such inundations occur only once or twice in a century, the Proprietor hopes that the precaution he has taken will prove unnecessary. During the latter two months of last season the line worked very well, and Telegrams were delivered to and from Europe in 18 days; the average time being as follows:—

London and Kiachta by Telegraph	2 days.
Kiachta and Tientsin by Courier	12 „
Tientsin and Shanghai by Steamer	4 „
Total ...	18 days.

A courier having been killed by a fall from his horse last year, the telegram bag was lost, and has not yet been recovered. In order to prevent a recurrence of the inconvenience, it is the intention of the Proprietor to open all telegrams addressed to his care, and forward duplicates by the subsequent courier to their respective addresses, unless he be specially notified to the contrary. The number of stations in Mongolia will be doubled this year. Contracts have been made to deliver telegrams between Kiachta and Tientsin in twelve days; the non-fulfilment of the contracts as to time entails a penalty upon the contractors of from 1 to 3 taels per hour (6s. to 18s.), thus giving a guarantee that delay will not occur.

After the first two months of the season, which are the most severe as regards the climate, the contractors will reduce their contract time to ten days.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—SURE CURE.—Be the ailment internal or external, chronic or acute, inflammatory or otherwise, a certain remedy may be found in one or other, or both of Holloway's preparations. In the nursery and toilet they are equally in place. The use of them involves no danger, the employment of them will not cause the most timid any apprehension of doing mischief. They always relieve, and by their corrective, purifying, and healing powers, invariably prove beneficial in every disorder incident to the human frame. In wounds, sprains, glandular swellings, enlarged veins, and diseases of the skin, Holloway's medicines may be used with safety and certainty, without weakening the system or transferring the disease to other parts.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

YOKOHAMA.

Dates from this port extend to the 29th January. The English mail of Nov. 26, conveying also London telegrams to Dec. 8, arrived out on the 20th January. The Japan Times gives the following summary of the events of the fortnight :—

Our latest dates from Hiogo are, at the moment of writing, to the 22nd inst. only, by the Costa Rica, but the American Minister is hourly expected in one of the United States men-of-war. The aspect of affairs at Hiogo is altogether unsatisfactory. There appears only a remote chance of a trade at some future time, and almost a certainty of a fight immediately. There is very much reason to fear that the pleasing anticipation in which we indulged last mail, of "the remarkable spectacle of a bloodless revolution in Japan," will not be realised. Both sides are too evidently concentrating their forces for the coming struggle. The person of the young Mikado has been seized by Satsuma, Chosiu, Geyshiu and Tosa, and Stotsbashi, the late Shiogoon, has fled from Kioto, the capital, and shut himself up in his castle of Osaka, under the protection of the fleets of his allies. There he is collecting all his forces and, in steamers and by the Tokaido, every man that can be spared from Yedo and quantities of munitions of war are daily pouring down to him. But foreign assistance he will not receive. The Foreign Ministers have visited him in a body, and given him a distinct and solemn assurance that they will in no manner interfere. Of course, our representatives are right in refusing any assistance : it is much to be regretted that any of them should have ever allowed Stotsbashi to believe that their policy would be different in this critical moment.

The confederated Daimios have as yet made no sign. They have proposed nothing to the foreign Ministers, and are unlikely to do so until after the assembly of the nobility of the Empire in Council. Meanwhile the country is without a recognised head, so far as foreigners are concerned, although, as will be seen from a manifesto recently published by the Mikado, the new Cabinet has been appointed for the internal government of the country. The fact that no attempt has yet been made to open negotiations with the representatives of the Western Powers can be easily accounted for. The men who have struck this coup d'etat are not strong enough to carry out a foreign policy of their own, and have, besides, to consider that their pretext for ousting the late Shiogoon from power was that he had acted, with regard to foreigners, only for his own interests, entirely neglectful of his fellow Daimios. They cannot commit the fault which they condemn so pointedly in him. Necessity and policy alike compel them to wait for the assembly of a general conference of the nobility. Meanwhile Stotsbashi reaps all the benefit of the delay. There are always, in a confederation, separate and often conflicting interests to be adjusted, and in their arrangement quarrels are apt to arise. His family is the richest and most powerful, by far, in all Japan, and if its relatives and friends could be depended on, would be well able to hold its own against even such a combination of chiefs as is at present opposed to it. What we have most to fear is that these latter will sulkily retire altogether from any attempt to conciliate foreigners, content themselves with preserving the independence they have secured, and leave the Tokugawa family to carry on the foreign trade alone, and if this policy be carried out, we need not look for any extension of business with Japan, for we have the guage of it already. But we must all, journalists and ministers alike, wait and watch. The issue of the present struggle is beyond our speculation, or their control.

A most serious affair has taken place in Yedo. We were able to announce in the latest intelligence of our last issue that part of the Shiogoon's palace had been destroyed by fire. This was the Nino Maru—inside of the main enclosure of the castle and it appears that this building was a Gymœceum. The relicts of all Shiogoons live in the Nino Maru, and it is said that the palace was destroyed by a band of Satsuma's people, who came up to rescue, in that manner, a sister of their prince, who had been the wife of a former Shiogoon. It has not been ascertained that this was really the case, but two days afterwards Satsuma's chief palace in Yedo was attacked and burnt by Shiogoon's troops, as well as three smaller houses of his. The palaces had for some time been dismantled, and the Government declare that they had no quarrel with Satsuma, but merely went to dislodge a number of condottieri, who had established themselves in the empty yashikis. There was a severe fight at the principal house, and the official report is that a hundred and forty of the robbers were killed, and a hundred and sixty wounded —the Government loss being fifty or sixty killed and wounded. Whether Satsuma's men or not, the survivors cut their way down to the beach and got on board a small steamer belonging to him, with which they steamed out of the harbour. The Kaitenmaru, formerly the Eagle, a heavily armed man-of-war, belonging to the Shiogoon, followed her, and a sea-fight took place. which was distinctly visible from the Settlement. The Kaitenmaru got the worst of it, and the Satsuma steamer escaped. The incident is by no means likely to facilitate the restoration of friendly relations between Stotsbashi and Satsuma. The pecuniary loss to the latter has been almost nothing, as the very masonry of his yashikis was sold two months ago, and it cannot be denied that the honours of victory remain with him; for his people cut their way out of Yedo and deliberately engaged and disabled a Shiogoon's steamer three times the size of their own. The sight of a naval duel is one not often seen and, of course, as men watched it through their glasses from the verandah of the Club, the fight between the Kearsage and the Alabama was more than once recalled to mind.

The following is another account of the fight between the ships of Satsuma and the Shiogoon referred to above. A reporter of this journal went off immediately the firing began in a row-boat, and got so near the scene of action as to be able to see much of it pretty distinctly. The ships engaged were a large two-funnelled steamer flying the rising sun flag, and now known to be the Kaitenmaru, and a much smaller one; both steamers were barque rigged. They came out of Yedo harbour firing at long ranges, the larger steamer appearing to be in chase of the smaller. At 3 P.M, when about nine miles from Yokohama, the latter stopped and allowed his enemy to come to close quarters, when they engaged each other desperately for nearly an hour, the big one steaming round the other several times and firing three shots to the other's one. The firing was very wild on both sides. About 4 P.M. they separated again, and the smoke clearing away, our reporter was able to see that the Kaitenmaru was either crippled or unwilling to pursue further, for the other steamed away unmolested and disappeared past Uraga. Part of her bulwarks were shot away, and her foreyard hung as if injured. The Kaitenmaru seemed damaged in her machinery, for she was evidently in difficulties on her way back. Another steamer, since known to be the Dumbarton, and towing a barque, appeared to be following the others out, but took no part in the action.

It is with the deepest regret that we have to announce the deaths which have signalised the opening of the new ports. Admiral Bell, of the U.S. Navy, was drowned on the 11th inst., while attempting to cross the bar at the mouth of the Osaka River, and on the 21st Mr. F. G. Myburgh, British Consul at the new ports, died after three or four days' illness of inflammation of the bowels, produced probably by the inferior provisions attainable.

The Japan Herald says, "Death has again been busy amongst us, but, this time, it has taken from us one who was well known to all, and who was but recently hale and strong with us here. Our late consul, Mr. Myburgh, who left Yokohama but a short month ago to fill the same post at the New Ports, died on the 21st inst., after a short and unexpected illness at the port of Hiogo. We received the mournful intelligence per Costa Rica, which arrived on the 24th without any further details than that the cause of the death was a severe attack of inflammation; the interment took place on the 22nd, when the remains of the late consul were conveyed to the cemetery, amidst a clump of trees to the right of the settlement, where the newly turned mounds too sadly indicate the last resting places of those "good men and true" who have in so short a space of time followed each other to the grave. The courtesy, amiability and generous disposition of the late Mr. Myburgh will cause his death to be deeply lamented by all those who knew him, and who had the pleasure of his acquaintance."

The Japan Gazette says:—"The language of adulation is natural when we lose friends. We do not think of the dark side of their character more than we can help; but Mr. Myburgh was a man who may be scanned fully; and his character will be all the more bright as it is looked into. He was singularly kind and considerate—and perhaps the term that is most frequently on everyone's lips as they speak of him, in its fullest sense, is the most applicable to him. He was a thorough gentleman. In this is summed up most comprehensively his true character; and if in some of his Consular acts public opinion was averse to the course he took—all will now admit that the British Consular service has lost an open, honest man, on whose tomb might be placed the words of another recently deceased worthy, 'I tried to do my duty!'"

With Admiral Bell were drowned Lieut. Commander Reid and ten sea men of the Hartford, the flagship. The accident is thus described by an eye witness:—

"The mouth of the Osaka river is closed by a frightful bar, which is in most states of the weather dangerous to cross. I was detained two days waiting for a chance to get to the ship last week. A very sad occurrence has taken place in connection with this bar. On the morning of the 11th, Admiral Bell, of the U.S. Navy, accompanied by his flag-lieutenant Reid and thirteen men, started from the Hartford (which was lying at the mouth of the river), in a ship's boat to go up to Osaka. He had been waiting for two or three days for a chance to get across, and became impatient and said he would go; although it was blowing hard. As he was going over the side, an old whaler asked permission to go and steer him with a steer oar. He refused, saying he would take the ordinary coxswain; so they started with a rudder only. As they were crossing the bar, the boat dipped into the sea, and as her rudder was out of the water, a sea struck her on the stern and capsized her. The accident was seen from the Hartford, who lowered a boat to the rescue. The relief arrived within a few yards of the capsized boat, and saw the Admiral hanging on, when the poor old man got benumbed, and losing his hold, went down. His body was washed ashore a short time afterwards. Three of the sailors were saved, the remainder, twelve persons in all, were drowned. All the bodies were recovered, and they were buried here yesterday. It was a melancholy sight in so small a community. So, after all, the port has cost human life to open it, although no blood has been shed."

Just before the sailing of the Ganges from Yokohama the Feiloong came in, bringing the news of fighting in every quarter around Osaka. Several naval engagements had taken place, and general disorder reigned, in which those opposed to the Government appears to have had the worst of it. Destruction of life and property is said to be very great. Business was at a complete standstill in Hiogo, and much property stored in Satsuma's godowns, belonging to foreigners, has been burned by the Shiogoon's soldiers.

NAGASAKI.

Nagasaki advices are to the 3rd February. This is the first occasion on which this port has been placed in direct mail communication with England. The outward mails of 17th and 26th November had been received.

A large fire broke out in the native town of Nagasaki on the 2nd Feb., and was still burning when the Ganges left on the evening of the 3rd. Upwards of 400 houses are said to have been consumed, and about $1,000,000 worth of property.

The Japan Herald's correspondent at this port says:—"The most amusing thing in our little settlement now is the talk about Count de Montblanc's influence, his intentions, and great importance. He certainly is trying hard to give himself notoriety, and commenced with a pamphlet upon the 'Kingdom of Satsuma,' which no one took the trouble to pull to pieces, because it was so very flimsy and visionary. A few hard facts would have cast ridicule upon all his inventions and fancies, and scattered them like air bubbles. The Count gives out that he has a passport from the Emperor of France direct to the kingdom of Satsuma, and that none can stop him. Opinion runs that the Emperor knows as much about him as he himself does about Satsuma. The Japanese authorities ought just to treat him as they would any other man who breaks the treaties, and goes where he has no business to. They should lay hold of him and take him before his Consul, and then it would quickly be shown who he was—and how far he is an impostor. It is very unfortunate that Japanese Princes may be so easily led away and deceived by such men, who if history speaks truly, as, in spite of Walpole's assertion, she sometimes does, have before now led weak states into great troubles, to their own impoverishment, and the sole benefit of the wily, brazen and unscrupulous adventurer."

As is usually the case at this season of the year, business has been exceedingly dull; and though the ports of Hiogo and Osaka were duly opened on the 1st current, we have not yet begun to feel any consequent improvement in the general tone of business here; and the native settling days, which always attend their New Year, have as usual brought stagnation upon the trade in general.

Imports—Have been neglected, a few pieces, comparatively, of Grey Shirtings have found buyers at the undermentioned low quotations, goods of light make being scarce, whilst 8¼ lbs. are in good supply. White Shirtings are rather lower, and the demand is fully met by the quantity imported. White Spot and Dyed Spot Shirtings are not asked for, and of the latter large stocks are held in first hands. Fancy Prints are only saleable at low figures in consequence of the supplies being very heavy. T. R. Cambrics, though in abundant supply, have been taken readily at the prices given below. Taffachellas are likewise in good demand and plentiful. Camlets continue difficult of sale even at the low quotations given. Long Ells have only been quitted a few pieces at a time. Spanish Stripes and Velvets are almost entirely neglected. Lustre Orleans attract a fair amount of attention, but are held in large quantities. Metals: In Spelter nothing is doing, nor have Tin or Tin Plates met with any inquiry; but Lead might be quitted in small quantities at quotations, and for Iron of all kinds there is some demand. English and Welsh Coal are not to be met with in the place.

Exports.—Our produce markets generally have been quiet during the past month. Wax has been in good demand, and supplies being large sales have been made to a fair extent. Gall-nuts have met with fair inquiry. Tobacco has come forward plentifully, but few operations are reported. There is little Sulphur left in the market, the demand being quite equal to the supply. Tea has been offered at reduced rates, but operations have not been very extensive, the stocks being for the greater part composed of medium and lower class qualities.

Exchange.—We quote private paper at six months' sight on London, 4s. 5d. to 4s. 5½d. per dollar. On Shanghai drafts are at par. For drafts on Hong Kong there are no buyers in the market. Bous have improved in value during the past month, and have fluctuated between 304 to 310 per dollar, to-day's rate being 305 to 307.

Freights.—There is no tonnage offering for either London or New York. To Shanghai, $2.50 to $4 per ton of 40 cubic feet. To Hong Kong, $3 to $6 per ton.

PEKING.

We have Peking dates to 24th January. A correspondent writes :—"I have no news whatever to communicate by this opportunity. For the last six weeks the house-tops have been covered with snow, and so has the ground. The Chinese predict therefore a very abundant harvest. The cold however has not been severely felt, and the thermometer stood at 8 deg. at six A.M. this morning. The anonymous letter relative to the new Chinese Embassy and Mr. Burlinghame, which the North China Daily News refused to admit to its columns, has been very freely circulated here, and caused much controversy in social and diplomatic circles as to its authorship."

KIUKIANG,

Kiukiang has been rather notorious lately for turbulent outbreaks against foreigners, both by the native officials and inhabitants. Some six months ago a country house was burned down, and a very unsatisfactory amende obtained. Not long afterwards H.B.M. Consul was insulted in the street, with a grossness which his official communique to our columns ill-sufficed to palliate. And now, the house of a British subject has been broken into and looted, under the Taotai's own auspices. For the first outrage there does not seem to have been the faintest excuse, beyond the dislike of some retired mandarin to the proximity of his foreign neighbours. For the second, the execution of a dog, which was probably attacking some foreigner at the time, was a pretext. Our informant declares that, when Mr. Hughes was passing the house of its owner, he was hustled by a crowd, one member of which actually assaulted him. Mr. Hughes himself reduces the crowd to a minimum, and denies the actual assault described. But the insolence of the case is only thus diminished in degree; and calls none the less for prompt punishment. It is not a case of assault on a layman. The facts show that the men knew perfectly well Mr. Hughes was a Consul, and intended their demonstration as a forcible remonstrance to the national representative of the man who had angered them. It is only necessary to consider what would be the fate of men guilty of the same violence towards a Taotai, to realise the extent of the indignity offered. The last case fitly culminates the series, the Taotai being, it is alleged, this time present, and officially sanctioning the outrage. For some unexplained and quite immaterial reason, a gang of Chinese constables claimed admission, during the night, into the house of a British subject—we presume, from the expressions used by our contemporary's correspondent, an East Indian—and, on being refused, broke down the door in the Taotai's presence, carried off one of the occupants to gaol, and looted the premises.

A correspondent of the Shanghai Recorder, writing at a later date, says :—"The late arrest of a British subject by the Taotai at Kiukiang has been settled after the usual fashion, the Taotai having paid $100 as compensation to the men, and apologised to the British Consul for his action. He has endeavoured to shelter himself, according to Chinese custom, under a falsehood, by stating that he was not aware that the house was occupied by a British subject, whereas he must have well known this, particularly as the man told him at the time that such was the case. Our correspondent at Kiukiang, who gives us the information, justly remarks that it is to be hoped some notice of the affair will be taken at Peking, as the Taotai at that port is the most obnoxious Chinese official that we have ever had to deal with. The suggestion is one which should scarcely be necessary, as properly it ought to be a matter of course that the high officials at the capital should be equally prompt to punish Chinese infringement of our dues, as we are to publish notifications upon the subject of rowdies in the interior, and indeed to adopt all measures reasonable and unreasonable which seem in the least called for for securing the rights and interests of Chinese. We cannot, however, hope that such will be the case, as the influence of our officials upon the Chinese at Peking never appears to be sufficient to secure the punishment of such actions. If the Taotai at Kiukiang received his dues he would be degraded, or at least removed by the next mail from the north. We fancy if Sir Rutherford Alcock was guilty of a similar infringement of Chinese rights he would not long hold his post as British Minister."

SHANGHAI.

From this port we have dates to Feb. 6. The outward mail of Dec. 10, with telegrams to Dec. 30, arrived on Jan. 28, and the French mail of Dec. 17 was two days overdue. We take the following items from the North China Herald :—

A rumour has been afloat that Mr. Giquel is to be associated with Mr. Hart in the Inspectorate of Customs. We can neither vouch for nor deny its accuracy, but give it as it has reached us, and as not being altogether improbable. There is not the slightest use in the appointment, so far as the governance of the Customs is concerned. Mr. Hart has proved himself quite equal to this task, though he has incurred some personal unpopularity among its officers. But it is well known that our allies are anxious to be prominently represented, in a service of gradually increasing importance; and it is not impossible that they may have influenced the Chinese to concede this point. It is only this knowledge which induces us to take any notice of the rumour; for no official report of it was, so far as we can learn, received by the last overland mail from Peking; and it would seem that an appointment deriving so immediately from the Central Government would become known there sooner than in Shanghai.

Mr. Burlinghame has returned in the Ashuelot from his visit to Tsen-kwo-fan, by whom we learn he was cordially received. This magnate—who, besides his rank as Viceroy, rejoices in the titles of Grand Minister, Acting Superintendent of Trade, Guardian of the Heir Apparent, and Marquis of the First Grade—has been reputed rather inimical to foreigners, so his prompt courtesy on the occasion of Mr. Burlinghame's visit must be considered especially satisfactory.

Mr. J. McLeavy Brown and the suite of the Chinese Legation have arrived. The native members are lodged in the New Mixed Court at the top of the Maloo. We hear that the country through which they passed is in a very bad state.

Mr. Adkins is appointed to succeed Mr. Brown as Acting Chinese Secretary at Peking, and Mr. G. Jamieson goes from Shanghai to Taiwan as Acting Consul. Mr. Davenport, who will shortly return from England, will probably be appointed to that post on his arrival, and Mr. Jamieson will remain there as assistant.

The Rev. W. Muirhead has preached his farewell sermon at the Union Chapel to an unusually large congregation. During his discourse he announced his intention of returning to China to carry out a long cherished scheme of establishing missions in the interior of the country. It has been repeatedly pointed out in our columns that the interior of China is the place for missionaries to locate themselves, rather than linger in the treaty ports or their immediate vicinity; and we therefore trust that Mr. Muirhead's plans will meet with all the consideration they deserve. The London Missionary Society sent out the first Protestant missionary to China, and we may now look forward to see another of its representatives establishing the first Protestant Mission station in the hitherto neglected far interior of the country. From Dr. Morrison, who arrived in China in the year 1807, down to the present time, the agents of this society have been, as a rule, vigorous and able men. It is through the instrumentality of such veteran missionary sinologues as Morrison, Medhurst, Legge, Stronach, Muirhead, Wylie, Edkins and others that the London Missionary Society has maintained the high position it holds in China.

A cross action for damages by collision had been tried between the Alcyone and Lady Love. The Court declared both equally to blame.

A house and land in Kiangse-road have been sold at 9,900 taels, some old dock shares at 150 taels each, and some Shanghai gas shares at 60 taels each.

Admiral Keppel arrived on the 1st Feb. from Japan, via the Chusan group, in H.M.S. Adventure, and will leave shortly for Hong Kong in the Salamis.

We are glad to learn that a monument to the memory of the late Bishop Boone, for which funds were subscribed in Shanghai, has been constructed in New York and shipped for this port.

The following anecdote, related by a Shanghai contemporary, is "sensational" enough for a Miss Braddon:—A sad incident has been brought to our notice in the recent death of an educated English lady, who was induced by a Chinaman who visited England to marry him and come out to his country. The sufferings of the unfortunate lady have been beyond all conception. Soon after arrival she learned that her husband had already three other wives, and she found herself the worst treated of them all. About a week ago she came down from the country in an open boat and was taken in by a European friend here. She was suffering from dropsy; and complaining of fatigue lay down upon a sofa, just as she had arrived; and was found there dead on the return of the master of the house. The next day her husband, who had meantime come to Shanghai, was expressing to a foreign missionary the trouble his wife was to him and his wish that he were free from her. A hearse passed by at the moment. "There," said the gentleman, "go the remains of your poor wife to the grave, you need trouble yourself no more."

The accounts which will be laid before the Church meeting will be more satisfactory than could have been hoped six months ago. No less than taels 11,773 have been raised by subscriptions during 1867, and about taels 2,000 more had been subscribed, but not collected, on the 31st December; so that more than half of the taels 26,000 needed last autumn to complete the edifice has been made up. Thus, apart from the badness of the bargain made, the lease of so large a portion of the church compound as was sanctioned at the last meeting was clearly unnecessary. The only object of the lease was to create security on which to borrow the sum wanted to complete the church. We pointed out two months ago that if taels 13,000 could be raised before the end of 1868 the lease of the Honan-road frontage at a rental of Tls. 1,000 a year would be quite sufficient to pay interest on the loan needed. This sum has been raised, and there is every reason to hope that before the expiry of the lease enough further subscriptions would have been realised to pay off the principal. Unfortunately, however, the lease then sanctioned has been concluded, and two frontages of the compound will be unnecessarily choked with Chinese houses, for the next fifteen years, in consequence of this hasty action on a hasty vote. However, there is no use in vainly regretting an accomplished blunder. It only remains to congratulate ourselves on the certainty that the church will soon be finished. The ease with which the financial deadlock, apparent six months ago, has been overcome has surprised the most hopeful. A liberal response has been made to the call for subscriptions, and a loan has been only too easily raised to meet the remaining deficit.

Mr. Stephen Massett, a gentleman who has acquired some celebrity in England and America, gave a lectural entertainment on the 30th ultimo, at the Shanghai Club, and was very generally appreciated. Mr. Massett's powers of elocution are of a high order, and he is also a fair musician. The room was well filled, and the performance went off very successfully.

A strange incident has been the subject of some little notice in the settlement during the past week. The captain of the Aunt Lizzie, which has arrived in this port, picked up nine natives who were in distress in the Pacific Ocean, not far from New Guinea, to which they are supposed to belong. They were quite naked when found, and though they were unable to speak any language that could be understood, they conveyed to the captain by signs that they had been seven days without food or water. They have been brought on to this port, and endeavours will be made to send them back to their native place, though there is some difficulty in knowing how to do so. The men constantly repeat the word "Papua," from which fact the conclusion they are natives of New Guinea has been deduced.

The rebels are said to have approached within fifteen miles of Chingkiang during the past week, and to have taken a walled city; but the reports are indefinite.

Kiukiang has again been distinguished by one of those insults to foreigners for which it has become rather notorious. A stronger hand seems to be required at the helm of our affairs there.

A Tientsin correspondent notes the singular fact that the Pehio was open again on the 8th Dec. The winter seems to have been singularly mild all over China.

HONG KONG.

By this mail we have Hong Kong advices to Feb. 12. The French mail of Dec. 18 and the English mail of Dec. 26 arrived out on the 2nd and 6th Feb., respectively. The latter conveyed also London telegrams to Jan. 13. A "mysterious telegram" is said to have reached the Hong Kong Post-office, which, although unintelligible, was thought to refer to an impending change in the new mail service, and the possibility of its being fixed for an earlier day in the week than at present (Wednesday) was regarded with some alarm, owing to the dreaded necessity of working on Sunday. We take the following items from the Overland China Mail:—

By this mail the petition to the House of Commons against the military contribution is forwarded. It is said to be signed by almost every foreign firm in the colony, by forty Chinese hongs, and a large number of private individuals, making a total of over 400 signatures.

The P. & O. steamer Niphon struck on a reef off House Hill, near Amoy, at 8.30 P.M. on the 23rd ultimo, and broke in two about the middle of next day (24th.) Everything was lost, save one bag of mails. Two Europeans—viz., Wm. Truscott, boilermaker, and Chas. Parker, gunner—five Chinese crew and six Chinese passengers were drowned. Much sympathy is felt for Captain Peake, the officer in command.

The Annual Report of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation is published, and will be presented to shareholders at the annual meeting to be held on the 14th instant. It declares a dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on both old and new shares; and gives the nett profit for the last six months ending Dec. 31, 1867, as $378,470.40; amounts written off are stated to be $30,382.61; and assets sum up nearly twenty-one million dollars.

The annual general meeting of the Hong Kong Marine Insurance Company was held on the 8th, when statements of accounts in offices Nos. 3 and 4 were submitted and approved of. $200 per share were agreed to be paid on No. 3; and upon each share in No. 4 it was agreed to pay $1,500, $1,000 this year and $500 next year.

A general meeting of the Union Insurance Society of Canton was held on the 8th, when the report and accounts were approved. Balance in favour of society, $418,248.22; $225,000 of which was set apart for a dividend, $1,000 per share to be paid at once, and the remainder after the returns were received from the agencies.

There is a report current—we cannot say whether well founded or not—that Sir Rutherford Alcock will, in all probability, return to England at the close of this year. If it be true, the mercantile community in China will have cause for congratulation in the fact of his departure, although it is just possible that a successor more inactive and less careful of British interests might be appointed.

The question raised by Government, whether the marine lot-holders were liable for the expense necessary to maintain the praya and sea-wall in proper repair in front of their marine lots, was definitely settled by a special jury, after a lengthened hearing in the Supreme Court, on the 7th inst. The Crown proceeded against the holder of a lease for lot No. 15, dated 1844 (Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., being agents for the original lessee), for cost of certain repairs, when a unanimous verdict was given for defendants. The Praya and sea-wall must therefore be maintained at the expense of the public. The Mail says :—

The verdict in the case of the Queen v. Webster's trustees, may, we imagine, be taken as setting at rest the much vexed question as to the liability of the marine lot-holders to maintain the Praya. It is, of course, open to his Excellency the Governor to institute a suit in equity and, if possible, obtain a verdict which shall reverse that given at common law. But the question being settled at common law we very much doubt whether Sir Richard MacDonnell will carry the suit any further. As the matter now stands, even after this decision, it is to a certain extent unsatisfactory. The case stands thus: A lease was selected, the form of which was supposed to be more clearly in favour of the interpretation officially put upon the liabilities of marine lot-holders than that of any other—there being eight or nine, differing in their precised rowing. The verdict recorded is, however, in favour of the lot-holders, and if no further attempt be made to enforce the Government interpretation, the matter will rest where it now lies. It can scarcely be supposed that additional actions will be brought upon all of the other differing leases, the provisions of each of which are admitted to be less favourable to the claims set up by the Government than that in the case just concluded. So far, therefore, as common law is concerned, the issue may be held to be fairly decided and set at rest. The only question which remains for consideration is the advisability of carrying it into equity, and here lie the "unsatisfactory" conditions we allude to. Presuming that the case were retried in equity, and a verdict obtained in favour of the Government, the very circumstance of the lease discussed being most in favour of the official view would render it least binding upon other lot-holders, who would in turn dispute their liability individually in equity. To obtain a reversal of the present verdict would, therefore, be almost useless, the sum in dispute being too trifling to make it worth while to have the case reheard on its own merits, and a verdict against the defendants affording no presumption against each lot-holder separately disputing his liability on another lease. We cannot, of course, foretell the view which may be taken by the responsible legal adviser of the Colonial Government, but we anticipate that he will scarcely propose a reopening of this case or the endeavour to enforce liability for Praya repairs upon other lot-holders similarly situated to the defendants.

In the hearing of the case the Chief Justice displayed an earnest desire to touch upon every point in the slightest degree bearing upon it. This has been freely commented upon in some quarters, and certainly in some particulars bordered upon irrelevance. Considering, however, the frank admission of documentary evidence by Mr. Whyte, the unavoidably complicated nature of some of the evidence, and the vague wording of the lease itself, we can hardly regard his lordship's action as other than that dictated by a laudable anxiety to do the fullest justice to the case which, though it might not in strictness legally, will, we hope practically, end the matter. And even, although in his direction to the jury the Chief Justice was certainly betrayed into a wandering from the actual points at issue, that does not affect the value of his comments on the material matters of the case; and, making allowances for much difficulty, we are rather disposed to compliment his patience and general care than to carp at defects.

A meeting of the creditors of Lyall, Still, and Co., was convened "in the Supreme Court in Bankruptcy" before the Registrar, Mr. Alexander, for the following purpose, as described in the advertisement in the Government Gazette :—

At the said meeting the official assignee will, in pursuance of the 151st section of the said ordinance, submit a statement of the separate estate of the said George Francis Maclean, recovered and outstanding, and of all receipts and all payments made or to be made thereout; and the creditors at the said meeting will, in pursuance of the said section, declare whether any and what part of the nett produce of the separate estate of the said George Francis Maclean, after making a reasonable deduction for future contingencies, shall be divided amongst the creditors. Proofs of debts will be received, and creditors who have not proved, or who shall not then prove, will be excluded from the benefit of the dividend, and all claims not proved will be disallowed.

In accordance with custom, a reporter from the China Mail attended to report proceedings, which were to be conducted in the office of Mr. Alexander. That gentleman, noticing the presence of our representative, and having ascertained that he attended for the purpose of giving authentic publicity to whatever occurred, said to him, "We never have reporters in such cases in the registrar's office." The reporter thereupon retired, and the members of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and the public generally, will remain in ignorance of what occurred. Mr. Alexander has made a mistake. It was a meeting convened in the Supreme Court that our reporter attended, not a private gathering in a subordinate official's chamber; and in desiring to give publicity to what might transpire at the meeting, we only observed the practice allowed in the Home Courts. Mr. Alexander's refusal to permit the presence of reporters at the meeting is a very injudicious stretch of prerogative, is somewhat irreconcilable with a tenderness of conscience he has already evinced in connection with the bankrupts' estate, and will not inspire the Manchester creditors with any feeling of confidence in the dealings of the Hong Kong Supreme Court with Lyall, Still and Co.

The notification closing the British Consulate at Macao is deserving of passing notice. Whether it be that the Foreign Office has been suddenly seized with a fit of retrenchment, and by way of commencement has decided upon stopping the exorbitant salary heretofore drawn by the representative of British interests (amounting to £150 or about $700 per annum), or whether it is at length convinced that no thoroughly competent person can be obtained for so wretched a salary we know not. We can but express our hope that a determination has been arrived at to place Macao upon a footing equal to that of other ports, and before long to appoint a properly salaried Vice-Consul, British in nationality and feeling. It is quite a mistake to suppose that because the official holding such a position may not make any very great show of activity, and contrives to put H.M.'s Government to but small expense in the way of sealing-wax and foolscap, he is necessarily useless. There are few ports in China where a more vigilant watch over passing events is required than that of Macao, as there are none where actions so damnatory of foreign character and influence are constantly committed. More than this, a large number of vessels, either British owned and manned, or chartered by British subjects, annually resort to Macao, and though we absolve the captains of these and of other vessels, in many cases, from knowing complicity with the disgraceful episodes of the inland kidnapping business, there arise frequently cases in which the watchful presence of a British representative would act as an important check upon wrong-doing. One of the causes which has doubtless contributed to the (we hope temporary) suspension of the British Consulate is the anomalous position occupied by the Portuguese Government in Macao. Were a new official appointed, we are bound by our present relations with China to accredit him to the Chinese Government, while it is useless to deny that the Portuguese are de facto masters of the coolie-catching peninsula. To accredit a British subject to the Macao Government would therefore be equivalent to turning our backs upon our avowed policy in China—that of recognising no territorial acquisition within the boundaries of the empire proper. Here we subjoin the official notification :—

British Consulate, Canton,
8th February, 1868.

The undersigned has to notify that by instructions from his Excellency Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., H.M.'s Minister Plenipotentiary, &c., &c., in China, the British Consular Agency at Macao was closed on the 31st January, and will not for the present be re-opened. The masters of British vessels will be required henceforward to deposit their ships' papers with the Captain of the Port at Macao.

D. B. ROBERTSON, H.B.M.'s Consul.

The eighteenth number of the China Punch completes the third quarter of that journal's existence. Contrary to the expectations of many who wished for such a publication in Hong Kong, it has gradually acquired such strength that it may reasonably look forward to a permanent existence. That such a gratifying result has been attained is due to the generous recognition and assistance which Punch has received from those who really desired that it should become an institution. There is in Hong Kong plenty of genial wit and humour without lack of ability to use the pen and pencil in "shooting folly as it flies" in any of its numerous shapes, or in promoting mirth without malice, or in giving point to a joke without offence; and it was with the view of affording an opportunity for the development of these qualities that Punch was founded. That its training hitherto has given satisfaction, and pleasantly disappointed the gloomy prognostications which attended the outset of its career, are facts in which its friends find matter for congratulation and encouragement for the future—a future which will henceforth be governed under other auspices than those which prevailed at its origin. The old proprietorship will be changed for a new one with the next number; and while registering Punch's thanks for the reception he has hitherto received, we shall refer his friends to what he may have to say for himself in No. 19.

On the subject of Sir R. Alcock's expected retirement the China Mail has the following further remarks :—

There is a popular misconception as to the causes which seem invariably to cramp the energies and narrow the minds of men who hold important diplomatic or consular appointments. It constantly happens that some one whose junior career has evinced much promise, who, upon some important occasion, has displayed judgment and energy, and who is believed to be exactly the right sort of man to deal with a people like the Chinese, becomes, by the combined influence of merit and good luck, promoted to just the sort of post his admirers would wish to see him occupy. Everybody is tolerably satisfied. Even his detractors say, "Well, with all his faults, he's a man of action; and anything is better than oblivious laziness," and for the first few months, perhaps years, nothing occurs to disappoint the hopes of those who believe in him. By-and-by, however, some event takes place, which, in the eye of the public, appears to call for prompt action and a determined front at all risks. But alas! their hopes are doomed to disappointment, and the popular official sinks at once in public estimation, to the regret of his friends and the exultation of his enemies. The latter find it convenient to assert that a long residence in China or the East—or the study of the language—or ignorance of the language—or a pandering to the opinions of his brother-officials of other nationalities—is or are the causes of his failure. Persistently blind to facts patent to the most superficial observers, the same stupid cry is raised again and again, in each case failing to touch the real cause of the evil. We need scarcely look far for examples of what we say. Sir Rutherford Alcock is at this moment standing condemned in the public mind for what is termed his "shameful want of energy and pluck," and even Sir Harry Parkes, the idol of the muscular school of progress in the Far East, is beginning to suffer a like depreciation. We admit the facts, but deny the inferences of those who so loudly condemn our representatives. For convenience sake we confine our remarks to the latter, although much of what is alleged is quite as applicable to our consular service, differing only in degree.

The true secret of failure on the part of British Ministers in this part of the world to fully vindicate their position in the eyes of their countrymen, lies in the fact that the theory of free agency commonly held regard-their duties is totally wrong, While absolutely unfettered in details—less so than Government employés of any other class or grade—they are rigidly bound by instructions as to their general policy. In other words, it is not even conceived by the Foreign-office that they are appointed to represent "British interests" or even the British community in China. They are simply the representatives in China of the Foreign-office at home, and represent Great Britain only so far as the Foreign-office officials represent and interpret the opinions of the party in power. And here lies both the source of their personal weakness and of the constant disputes which arise between them and the community they are prerumed to represent. The case is quite different with France, Russia, and the United States. Their ministers represent not the calm controlling power at home, but the faults, passions, and desires of their countrymen, be they right or wrong, modified only by diplomatic experience. They are, in fact, the mouth-pieces, in the first cases, of their fellow-citizens, and only in a secondary degree of their respective governments. But their power over the policy of those governments is far greater, as their representations are not those of an uninterested arbiter between their own people and the Chinese, but of advocates fully prepared to represent the wishes of the former in the manner most advantageous to their fulfilment. Add to this that, while more fettered in detail, they are almost independent in general policy, that they possess a far higher authority over the available forces present in the East, and that they are even personally unfettered by those scruples to use violence when diplomacy fails, which are engendered by our system, and we have the radical differences between the representatives of Great Britain and those of other countries.

The moral of this is obvious enough, but it takes a long time to make British residents in China take such combined action as shall utilise it. There exists in effect an antagonism between the Foreign-office and the British community in China, of which the minister is the almost powerless exponent—often powerless, that is, to produce an accord between the conflicting views. We want therefore some reliable means of placing ourselves en rapport with the Home Government; a minister less fettered in his policy than at present; and a clear understanding as to how far the views of British subjects and the views of our Foreign-office accord and can be worked out. This can only be effected by the inauguration of a committee at home devoted to China matters, and comprising amongst it members of Parliament pledged to bring matters of interest to China residents before the public at home. There is nothing new in the proposition, but although its feasibility is obvious, nothing has been or we fear will be done. Until, however, some such step is taken, the misunderstandings which now exist between the community and the minister will increase and flourish.

We are indebted to the courtesy of the superintendent of the P. and O. Company at this port for permission to publish the following interesting account of the loss of the Niphon written by Captain Peake. Much sympathy will be felt for this popular officer in the disaster which has befallen the vessel under his command:—

Amoy, 30th Jan., 1868.

W. MACAULAY, Esq., Superintendent P. and O. S. N. Co., Hong Kong.

DEAR SIR,—It is my painful duty to report the loss of the Company's S.S. Niphon (on a reef off House Hill, distant from here about twenty-five miles in a southerly direction) under the following circumstances:—

On proceeding up the Inner passage (that usually taken by steamers in the N.E. monsoon), on Thursday, the 23rd instant, at 8.30 P.M., the wind blowing fresh from the north-east with a considerable sea on, I was much surprised to find the ship strike on a reef off or eastward of House Hill. Every endeavour was made to get her off, which unfortunately proved to be of no avail. About five minutes after the ship struck she was found to be rapidly filling with water and taking green seas over her, knocking everything to pieces about the decks, and breaking up the saloon, making it impossible for anything to be got out from thence. At that time two of the boats had already been washed away. Seeing that there was no possibility of saving the ship, I ordered the four remaining boats to be lowered as quickly as possible, to land the passengers and crew, giving them severally in charge of the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th officers, with Lieut. Anson, a passenger, who kindly volunteered his services. The life-boat in charge of the 2nd officer was stove in and filled with water, the gear having been washed out of her just after she was lowered. Passed the passengers into the other three boats; the cutter did not return, the crew of Malays having deserted her immediately she reached the shore. The gig and jolly-boat continued to ply between the ship and the shore, landing, as was supposed, first passengers and then crew. As the jolly-boat was about to shove off on her third trip a heavy sea washed over the ship, striking the boat, and causing her to take in a large quantity of water. The boat having very soon after shipped another sea over her stern, she filled and turned over, when the boiler-maker William Truscott, and the gunner, Charles Parker, with five of the Chinese crew and (as far as can be ascertained) four Chinese passengers—in all eleven persons—were unfortunately drowned, Lieut. Anson and the fourth officer, who were both in the jolly-boat when she filled, having been picked up by the gig in a very exhausted state. When all the passengers and crew were supposed to be out of the ship, excepting three Chinese passengers (who could not be induced to come down out of the main rigging), the chief officer, Chinese carpenter, and myself, hoping to be able to save the mails and some small valuables, I ordered the gig to remain near the ship, but she soon disappeared, and was unable to fetch the ship again at that time. At low water, about four A.M. on the 24th, as the seas were not breaking so heavily over the ship, with four of the crew (found forward) made a search for the mails amongst the wreck of saloon; succeeded in finding one bag, which was placed on the poop ready to be landed. Shortly after daylight the gig was observed making fruitless attempts to get off to the ship, being continually driven back by the surf. I then requested one of the crew, a good swimmer, to swim ashore with the end of log-line, as a hauling line for larger ropes, wherewith to save the remaining lives. The man reached the shore, but the log line slipped off him; in consequence of this failure spars were prepared with lanyards, as a last resource for saving life. As the tide rose the seas commenced to break very heavily over the ship again. A few more passengers (Chinese) were found forward early in the morning, who were got on the poop with the rest. At high water, about the middle of the day, the surf being less, the gig managed to come out, but could not come close to the ship, as the seas were breaking over her very heavily, causing her to be very uneasy, with strong indications of her breaking up. I requested all those who could swim to jump over and make for the gig; the chief officer and the remaining fourteen of the crew succeeded in reaching the gig. By persuasion the remaining Chinese passengers were got into the lifeboat (which had remained alongside from the first, stove, and full of water), excepting one man, who refused to go in spite of every endeavour to make him, having mounted the mizen rigging (this man afterwards disappeared with the fall of the mizen mast). The Chinese carpenter and myself accompanied the passengers into the water-logged lifeboat. I was obliged to cast her off immediately, as the working of the ship threatened every instant to break her to pieces alongside, and there was no alternative. Just as the boat left the ship broke in two; the boat drifted ashore, and with the assistance of the gig in charge of Lieut. Anson all were landed. When on shore I observed the ship breaking very rapidly, the cargo washing out of her in large quantities.

You will observe from the above report that it was utterly impossible to save either mails or cargo. Directly we landed the natives stole nearly all the clothes we had on, and broke up the boats. Shelter and food for all hands were procured at a village about two miles distant from the wreck. On mustering the passengers and crew there were found missing—William Truscott, boilermaker; Charles Parker, gunner; five Chinese crew, and six Chinese passengers—in all thirteen.

One of the stewards having been despatched overland to Amoy for assistance early on the morning of the 24th, returned in the American steamer Fung Shuey, which vessel had been despatched to our assistance. Soon after daylight on Saturday, the 25th, she came to anchor near the wreck, Captain Watson, of the Fung Shuey, and Mr. Paterson, one of the company's agents at Amoy, landed, and we immediately had a consultation, when it was decided that there was nothing to save of the ship or cargo. The after part of the ship was completely separated from the fore part and nearly under water; the fore part was on its broadside, the decks being to seaward and apparently everything was washed out of it. Under these circumstances they proceeded with the embarkation of passengers and crew to the Fung Shuey, which was accomplished during the forenoon after arduous boating through the surf, with Captain Watson and crew's valuable assistance. Whilst this was going on the body of William Truscott, boilermaker, (which was washed ashore) was interred. The five missing Chinese crew are the butcher, one boat boy, fireman's cook and two other cooks. On getting on board the Fung Shuey, having observed the Cadiz five or six miles off to seaward, I requested Captain Watson to endeavour to intercept her in order that she might convey the news, and also the passengers to Shanghai. The Fung Shuey not having either guns or a code of signals, could not manage to communicate with her, although everything was done that could be to attract her attention. The Fung Shuey arrived at Amoy on the evening of the 25th, when arrangements were at once made for housing and provisioning all hands. The officers of the ship behaved in a very praiseworthy manner throughout, and the Chinese carpenter was of great assistance to me in urging the unwilling passengers to get into the boats, having stuck to me to the last. I must also mention the valuable assistance that I received from Lieut. Anson, who behaved in a most praiseworthy manner, and very nearly lost his life in the execution of a dangerous duty.

By order of H.M. Consul at this port, a Naval Court will be held as soon as possible, to inquire into the circumstances connected with the loss of the Niphon.

Arrangements will be made for conveying the passengers, officers, and crew to Hong Kong by the first opportunity.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

ARTHUR PEAKE.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The French mail, which should have left this on the morning of the 25th January, only got away at noon on the 30th. The perpetual irregularity in the departure of the French steamers causes the most serious inconvenience to all here.

The intelligence from Japan, including as it does the news of the death by drowning of the poor old U.S. Admiral, who was on the point of retiring from the naval service, has a melancholy tinge which is not redeemed by the realisation, so far, of the sanguine expectations entertained by foreigners concerning the opening of Osaka and Hiogo. On the contrary, a general feeling of dissatisfaction pervades the correspondence that has come down by the last mail. The competition is in fact too severe, and in most cases too uncalculating, to enable persons of real business ability and capital to make the headway they are entitled to look for in the face of the reckless derangement of prices, &c., caused by the mushroom class of operators. A degree of uncertainty as to the spot that will hereafter become the most favoured centre of trade has also been developed through the proof afforded by the accident to Admiral Bell and his party that the Japanese were not wrong when they pointed out beforehand the geographical objections attaching to the port of Osaka.

Some Japanese from Yokohama have lately visited Hong Kong with a selection of lacquer ware, &c., got up for the Chinese market, but have not met with any encouragement from purchasers. This is the first instance of direct and independent trade between Japanese and the ports of China.

As has been confidently anticipated here, orders were received by the Governor from the Secretary of State for the Colonies forbidding the receipt of revenue from Sir Richard MacDonnell's gambling speculation, and his Excellency's pet scheme is virtually knocked on the head; as, failing the addition of so comfortable a sum as that originally looked for to the colonial revenues, there can obviously be no reason for continuing the licensing system in force. The Stamp Act continues to work quietly, and without giving more trouble to individuals than can very easily be put up with; and every penny of the revenue it can raise will be needed to meet the expenses entailed by the destruction of the Praya, as it is pretty well understood now that the Government has been legally advised that the entire burden must fall upon the colonial Treasury, and not upon the abuttors, as originally maintained by the Governor. The unfortunate Mint still continues idle, or comparatively so; a very handsome coin, of the value of one tael, was some time ago got up as a specimen, and submitted to the Chinese officials at Shanghai, but it does not appear that they were found capable of being influenced in favour of a sensible currency.

Mr. Swinhoe, H.B.M. Consul in Formosa, and a well known naturalist, has within the last few days left for Hainan on board H.M.'s gun vessel Algerine, commander Domvile, with instructions to examine the commercial capabilities of the island and more particularly of the port of Kiung-chowfoo. From the accounts brought back by persons who have visited the island heretofore there seems not the slightest reason for believing that it would ever "pay" except for the owners of one or two very small steamers carrying Chinese passengers and opium, to carry the opening of a port in that quarter into effect. What is much more probable is that the port of Wanchow, between Ningpo and Foochow, will be opened in exchange for Chinkiang, which the British Government has been advised to abandon altogether as a consular port. Wanchow has long been recommended as a port likely to become an important shipping port for teas, with many advantages over Foochow in that respect, and also as capable of largely developing the trade in imports.

The British Consular agency at Macao is abolished, which may be meant either simply as a small economy, or perhaps as a mark of disapproval of the atrocities of the coolie trade. The energetic manner in which the Government of this colony represented to the Home Government the wholesale kidnapping of Cochin-Chinese in the course of last summer appears to have shamed the Lisbon authorities into something like action, and it is reported that a "commission" is to be sent out to investigate the conduct of Governor Horta. So long, however, as Portugal is allowed to maintain her usurped supremacy over Macao, it will continue to be what it has been for twenty years past—a nest of piracy, kidnapping, and corruption of every kind. It is not only Hong Kong that is prejudiced by the iniquities of its Portuguese neighbour; the whole coast and large tracts in the interior are inoculated with the most lively hatred of foreigners, owing to the atrocities perpetrated unchecked by the Macaese.

The new hotel here is fast advancing towards completion, and it is hoped that it may be opened in time for the great gathering here for the races, the third week in February. Now that the scaffolding, which has occupied so large a portion of space in the very centre of the colony for two years past, has been taken down, the fine façade of the hotel adds greatly to the appearance of the Queen's-road. Opinions are most diverse on the subject of the speculation, and doubtless only experience will solve the question as to the scheme becoming a paying one for present shareholders. One point in its favour is the tendency on the part of several of the large firms to require their "junior messes" to establish themselves in future at the hotel. The two leading American firms have already resolved upon this step.

Advices from this port are to the 13th February. The only topic of interest is the Maggie Leslie case, which seems likely to become complicated, and perhaps to give rise to questions between the English and Dutch Governments. The following are the facts of the case as they stood up to the date of our present advices:—

The Maggie Leslie, of Newcastle, sailed from Foochow for London with a full lading of tea, and on the 5th October last was fallen in with about five miles south of Gaspar Island, by the English barque Fusi-Yama, the Maggie Leslie having all sails set but with apparently nobody on board. On examination it was found she had been abandoned by the crew, and the ship's papers and her boats were all gone, although there was, as far as could be seen, nothing the matter with her. The chief mate and four seamen of the Fusi-Yama were put on board with instructions to take the vessel to Batavia, which they reached on the 21st October. According to the instructions of Captain Thomson, of the Fusi-Yama, the vessel was placed in the hands of Messrs. Pitcairn, Syme and Co. (the agents for Lloyd's at Batavia). These gentlemen immediately applied to the Resident of Batavia, informing him of the circumstances connected with the salvage, and inquiring in whose custody the vessel must be placed according to law. The Controller of Import and Export Duties was pointed out as the person charged, according to existing regulations, with the management of such matters at Batavia.

The Maggie Leslie was then given up to this official, who immediately placed men on board for the protection of the ship and cargo, and hired warehouses into which to discharge the cargo, which was requisite to enable him to make up the inventory required by law.

On the 23rd Oct. the English Consul, Mr. Maclean, addressed a letter to Messrs. Pitcairn, Syme, and Co., requesting that the ship and cargo might be delivered to him in terms of Art. IX. of the Consular Treaty between Great Britain and Holland.

To this requisition Messrs. Pitcairn, Syme, and Co. on the same day replied that, acting upon legal advice, they had delivered the ship and cargo to the local authorities in terms of Article 550 of the Dutch Code of Commerce, and the last clause of the IX. article of the Consular treaty, by which the existing colonial laws were recognised, but they had no objection if the Consul could come to an understanding with the local authorities.

On the 24th Oct. the Consul applied to the Controller of Import and Export Duties and requested the immediate delivery to him of the ship and cargo in terms of Act IX. of the Consular treaty. The Controller on the same day replied that he could not comply with this request.

To this the Consul on the 25th Oct. replied by a protest, in which the arguments of the Controller were controverted, and the Consul protested against all damage to the ship and cargo that might ensue, and holding the Controller and the Government of Netherlands India, from whom he derived his authority, liable for all costs, damages, and interest. Annexed to this document was the copy of a letter from the Resident of Banka to the English Consul, in which it was stated that the crew of the English ship Maggie Leslie, of Newcastle, from China to London, with a cargo of 728 tons of tea, and which had been wrecked on the Alcester reef off Pulo Liat, had arrived at Mintoh in three boats, after having, as they stated, left their vessel in a sinking state.

As this protest had no result, the Consul on the 26th Oct. addressed a request to the Governor-General that the Controller should be ordered to give up the ship and her cargo to the Consul in terms of Art. IX. of the treaty; and on the 12th November the Consul was informed that instructions had been given to the Controller to deliver up to him the Maggie Leslie and her cargo.

In the meantime the Controller had proceeded to land the tea and to sell some of it as damaged, against which proceeding the Consul energetically protested.

On the 13th Nov., in compliance with the instructions of Government, the Controller delivered up the Maggie Leslie and her cargo to the Consul, at the same time claiming repayment of all expenses incurred by him and a commission of six per cent. on the gross value of the ship and cargo, due to him under the Code of Commerce. The Consul refusing to satisfy this claim, the Controller applied to the Government, requesting that he might be held harmless for what he had done in accordance with the orders of Government, or that he might be permitted to take legal proceedings against the Consul as representing the owners of the ship and cargo. The first of these requests was refused, but the Controller was authorised to take such steps as he might consider necessary. The Consul still refusing to reimburse the Controller, the latter applied to the High Court of Justice and obtained a warrant to arrest the ship and cargo, which was executed on the 13th January.

On the 14th January the Consul addressed a protest to the Government of Netherlands India against this proceeding, which he stated was a breach of the consular treaty between Great Britain and Holland.

The affair remains in this state at present, and there appears little chance of the owners of the ship or cargo getting possession of their property until after a tedious litigation in the Courts of Netherlands India.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

—o—

SINGAPORE.

The present homeward mail left Singapore on the 19th Feb The outward mail of Jan. 10 was delivered on the 13th Feb., conveying London telegrams down to the 25th Jan. The following summary of news is from the Straits Times:

His Excellency the Governor arrived from Penang by the Peiho on the 17th, and we may therefore anticipate some activity and life infused into our political affairs. The neighbouring States have been very quiet of late.

The efforts making by Hong Kong to free itself from the contribution of £20,000 for military, commands the strong sympathy of this colony, which is saddled with thrice the amount. Both colonies are exactly similarly circumstanced—military, at least to the extent at present paid for, are not wanted for local purposes, and the residents protest with justice and reason against being called upon to pay for imperial liabilities. In addition, this colony has the unanswerable argument, that if Hong Kong is assessed for only £20,000, the Straits Settlements should pay, if not less, at least certainly not more. This is a claim for only bare justice, any compact made with the Home Treasury to the contrary notwithstanding, and however flourishing our revenue may be.

The ominous silence about our Water-works for a long time back, and the apparent stoppage of all labour upon them, are attracting comment and attention. They should have been finished long ago, but there seems to be no hope or sign of this, and the only conclusion left is that they are a complete failure and sink for public money. Who is to blame, or who ought to be hung, as usual in similar fiascos, nobody knows.

An article in the last London and China Express (copied from the London and China Telegraph) of the 10th of January has caused a little sensation here by announcing that the Governor had imposed some restrictions on the press of these Settlements. This was news to the press, who had not been conscious of any deprivation of liberty to write whatever they pleased. However, some occasion was given to the Telegraph for the article in question by a resolution come to by the Legislative Council at their first meeting. This resolution has been misunderstood by the good people at home, as explained by the Telegraph's correspondent "R." The best proof of this is that the resolution in question attracted no attention at the time, either from the press or the public.

The petition of the Penang community to Parliament, for redress from the injustice done to them by the Postmaster General in giving way to the P. & O. Company, and depriving them of direct mail communication with home, meets the entire approval and endorsation of everybody in Singapore. The Penang merchants have done wisely in sending copies of their petition to the Chambers of Commerce of Glasgow, Manchester, and Liverpool. The merchants, manufacturers, and shippers of these cities are as much, if not more, interested in Penang's grievance as Penang itself, and are therefore bound to bestir themselves and use all their influence in backing up the petition under review.

The new arrangement as to the despatch of mails from this port has afforded a subject for some discussion. Great doubts are entertained as to the interpretation to be put upon the terms of Mr. Scudamore's letter—our only oracle hitherto to guide us how we are to be treated. Mr. Scudamore, or somebody else directing him, seems to have entirely ignored the frequent playfulness and contrariety of the China sea, and also the peculiarities of the navigation of New Harbour. We must any way await actual experience of how his very vague and indefinite instructions will work. We must note that the China on this occasion has remained the usual time.

We regret to have to chronicle a most untoward accident which happened on Sunday, the 16th, by the sinking of the Princess Royal, powder hulk, in the harbour, involving loss of property to the extent of over $100,000, and entailing, from all appearances, complicated litigation, which will end in no good to any body but the gentlemen of the long robe. How this deplorable catastrophe occurred remains still a mystery. The hulk was under Government surveillance, and naturally the greatest (and we might say the sole) attention was paid to the prevention of any accident from fire. It is not long since that the vessel was docked and thoroughly repaired in the Patent Slip Dock Company's dock. On coming out and being moored in her usual place she was pronounced and proved thoroughly water-tight. To prevent any chance of explosion the greatest care and precautions are always taken in descending into the hold, and the hatches are always carefully battened down. On the 15th February she took in about 12,000 kegs of powder from the other hulk, which required sundry repairs and was ordered into dock. This did not have more effect than to put her down in the water about an inch. Next day there was a considerable sea on and she rolled a good deal. In the afternoon the crew in charge discovered that she was deeper in the water than she ought to be, and after some hesitation they decided on examining the hold. On going down they found themselves up to the waist in water, and the alarm was given. The pumps were at once set a going and a boat despatched ashore. The captain of the other hulk, the Statesman, was also communicated with and proceeded on board. A number of Malays were immediately sent off by one of the owners and the master attendant despatched further assistance. All was too late however. The water had gained too much ground and the pumps were found unequal to make any way or even to keep the water down. It was therefore found necessary to abandon the vessel, which slowly settled down to about five feet under water, in which position she now remains. She was totally uninsured, as also was the whole of the powder stored, it not having been customary or even possible to do so here. The question now is, who is liable for the heavy loss, and this being likely to form a sort of cause celebre in the place, we refrain from making any further comments. We learn that she had in all about 7,000 piculs of powder on board.

The British steamer Telegraph has been bought by Wat Seng, in conjunction with one or two other spirited Chinese merchants, for $16,700. We hear that it is the intention of the new owners to keep her running between this port and Saigon, after she has made several trips between Singapore, Malacca, and Penang.

We believe that the British ship Amaranth has lately been sold privately for the sum of $7,000, and the Belgian barque Bourse d'Anvers for $5,000.

As a proof of the advantage of wharf accommodation in Singapore over the old system of discharging ships in the roads, we may mention that the entire cargo of the Harvest Home, a ship of 800 tons, with the exception of 120 tons of iron left in the ship for stiffening, was unloaded from that vessel at Tanjong Pagar, and delivered to the consignees in town, in exactly four working days—whereas it would have been considered good work in the roads to have finished in three weeks.

THE OVERLAND MAILS.—The following is from the Morning Herald of this day:—"The delivery of the combined Bombay, Calcutta, China, Japan, and Australian mail, which reached London last evening, and was distributed this morning—its due date—must be regarded as a very satisfactory operation, and a good augury of the successful working of the new mail arrangements for the East, of which it is the pioneer. Credit should also not be withheld from the contractors for their alacrity in changing the basis of the service from the calendar to the lunar month, which had to be effected at the shortest notice. The Nyanza, which reached Marseilles on Saturday morning at six o'clock, being due at nine, was the seventh of the series of vessels employed in conveying this mail throughout its route. The aggregate capacity of these steamers was about 13,000 tons, with 8000-horse power, and they traversed over 20,000 miles. The distance from the most remote point, Sydney, to London, is over 11,000 miles, and the journey was performed in 49 days, giving an average speed of about 226 miles per day, or 9½ miles per hour, including all transhipments and stoppages."

REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.

JAPAN AND CHINA.

(RECEIVED VIA GALLE, MARCH 20.)

HONG KONG, Feb. 26.

Intelligence from Japan announces that the Shiogoon has been totally defeated by the Daimios, and has fled to Yedo. The intestine war paralysed trade. The Mikado had addressed a note to the foreign ministers declaring that the treaties would be respected.

A great fire has occurred at Foochow. The loss is estimated at $200,000. [This has already been telegraphed via Calcutta.]

The following has also been published, but seems to be based only on a vague report which was circulated in Hong Kong :—

SUEZ, March 15.

Intelligence received here from Japan reports that all the foreigners at Hiogo and Osaca had embarked for safety, in consequence of the prevailing hostilities.

A French or American vessel of war had been fired into; it was not known whether by the rebels or by the troops of the Japanese Government.

COMMERCIAL.

The following, received via Galle to-day (March 23), is in advance of the French mail, which left Hong Kong a few days after the English mail of February 26, but the exact date is not known.

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—Business had absolutely ceased, and during the whole fortnight transactions had been of the most trifling description. Yarn had again fallen, and even at reduced quotations very little had been done: large auction sales of damaged parcels had by no means improved the position of this staple. Our quotations for Grey Shirtings and Velvets, and in Woollens, for Scarlet Camlets, remain unchanged, and in these manufactures only had business been done—all others were nominal and without demand. The quotations were :—Cotton Yarn, Nos. 16 to 24, $46 to 48; Nos. 28 to 32, $55 to 57; Nos. 38 to 42, $51 to 53 per picul; Grey Shirtings, 7 lbs., $2.75 to $2.90; 8.4 lbs., $3.30 to 3.40; 8.6 to 8.8 lbs., $3.30 to 3.40 per piece; White Shirtings, 56 to 60 reed, $3.30 to 3.50; 64 to 66 reed, $3.70 to 3.80; 68 to 72 reed, $3.90 to 4.20 per piece; T-cloths, 6 lbs. $2.25 to 2.50; 6.8 to 7 lbs., $2.70 to 2.90 per piece; Turkey Red Cloths, 24 yds. 32 in., $2.85 to 325 per piece; Iron, nail rod, $2.75 to 3.25; hoop, $4.25 to 4.50; bars $2.75 to 3.50; pig, $1.50 to 1.70; wire, $6.50 to 7; Lead, $6.50 to 7 per picul.

SHANGHAI.—Cottons: During the interval the natives had been occupied with the celebration of their new year festivities, and the market can hardly be said to have fairly reopened, although some small sales had been effected of Grey and White Shirtings and T-Cloths, at about the same figures as those current last mail. The stock had been largely augmented by the arrivals of the Taeping, Durham, Ajax, steamer Sir Jamsetjee Family, and Devana, from England, with large cargoes, and the market for Grey Shirtings had slightly weakened. A general resumption of business was likely to take place. Woollens: Spanish Stripes, Medium, Broad, and Habit Cloths, had been taken to a very trifling extent. For Camlets a rather better feeling had manifested itself, and rather better offers had been tendered. For Long Ells the market had continued depressed. Lastings had been quite neglected. Orleans, both Figured and Plain, had begun to attract some attention. Coals: The transactions in the coal market had been very small. Cardiff and English Coals were much neglected, but more inquiry after Australian kinds had raised their value to Tls. 10.2.5 per ton, at which figure there were purchasers "to arrive." The arrivals had been 2,250 tons from Great Britain, and 1,075 tons from Australia; total, 3,325 tons. The quotations were :—Grey shirtings: 7 lbs., 1.9.0 to 1.9.5 per picul; 8¼ to 8½ lbs., 2.2.0 to 2.2.5; 9 to 9¾ lbs., 2.5.0 to 2.8.0. White shirtings: 56 Reed, 2.0.0 to 2.1.0; 60 Reed, 2.2.5 to 2.3.0; 64 Reed, 2.3.5 to 2.4.0; 66 Reed, 2.4.5 to 2.7.0. Camlets, English: S, 56 yards, 12.7.5 to 13.2.5; S S, 12.5.0 to 13.0.0; S S S, 10.5.0 to 11.0.0. Iron: Nail rod, 3.0.0 to 3.1.0; hoop, 2.7.0; flat and round, 2.8.0 to 3.0.0. Lead: 5.3.0 to 5.4.0. Coals: English, 10.75 per ton; American Anthracite, 14.5.0; Sydney, 10.2.5.

HANKOW.—In the interval between the departure of last mail and the close of the Chinese year a trifling business in piece goods was transacted. The settling day among the natives had passed off very satisfactorily, and the banks had met their engagements without apparent difficulty. A general resumption of business was not looked for until about the middle of March.

CANTON.—A few trifling sales of metals are reported. Lead had advanced a little in value. Quicksilver remained as before. Quotations :—Lead, common, $7.45 to 7.55; quicksilver, $72.50 to 73.50.

HONG KONG.—Raw Cotton: During the early part of the interval there was more inquiry for this article, and prices advanced about 50 cents per picul, but have since weakened, and closed slightly under last mail's rates, the arrival of some moderate parcels by steamer having made buyers less desirous to purchase now that their actual wants have been satisfied. Should there be no heavy receipts, however, during the next two months prices must again advance, as stocks were far from excessive. Cotton Yarn: Transactions had been on a very moderate scale, but sellers refused to make any further concessions, and prices were unchanged. Piece Goods: Stocks of almost all descriptions of Manchester goods had been largely increased, four vessels having arrived from London, and importers had been willing sellers at a decline on our last quotations for almost all descriptions. Buyers were fully alive to the question of supplies, and being well aware of the general desire to realise were purchasing but moderately, hoping for still lower prices, and there was every indication that they will succeed in effecting a further decline. A small quantity of American Drills had been disposed of at about last quotations, but there was no enquiry for Jeans and Sheetings. Woollens: Prices generally were a little weaker, late receipts from London having been put upon the market. Metals: There was more doing in Iron at about former value. Lead had continued to find buyers amongst foreigners, and values were 15 to 20 cents per picul higher. Tin had further advanced. Tin Plates were only saleable on easier terms. Quicksilver was not in request. Coal: Six cargoes had arrived since our last report, but two of these were for Government, and two for steamer companies. One of the remaining two, a cargo of 293 tons Sydney, had been sold at $12 per ton, and the other, Welsh, was still on offer. A cargo of 700 tons Sydney had also been sold at $11.75 "to arrive." There was no inquiry for English or Welsh Coals, and quotations are quite nominal. The following were the quotations current at the departure of the mail :—Cotton Yarn, per picul, No. 16 to 24, $115 to 125; No. 28 to 32, $142.50 to 150; No. 38 to 42, $145 to 160. Shirtings grey, 7lbs. piece, $2.20 to 2.35; 8.4 lbs. $2.85 to 2.95; 9 to 9.12 lbs. $3 to 3.60. Shirtings white, 52 to 56 reed, $2.35 to 2.40; 64 to 66 reed, $2.90 to 3; 68 to 72 reed, $3.20 to 3.75. T-Cloths, 6 to 6.12 lbs., 32 in., $1.80 to 1.90; 7 lbs., $2.30 to 2.50; 8 lbs., 36 in., $3 to 3.10. Shirtings white spotted, $3.10 to 3.20; Shirtings, Dyed, $4 to 4.10. Turkey Red Shirtings, 8 lbs., $2.80 to 3. Woollens, Spanish stripes, Scarlet, per yard, $85 to 1; Assorted, $80 to 1; Medium, Ladies, and Habit Cloths, $1.10 to 2; Long Ells, Scarlet, per piece, $9 to 9.25; Assorted, $8.50 to 9.20; Camlets, S, $18 to 19; SS, $16.50 to 17; BBB, $21 to 22; Dutch, $24 to $26; Lastings, $15.50 to 16; Blankets, 7 to 12 lbs. per piece, $3.50 to 6; Metals, Iron Nail Rod, $3 to 3.10; Round, Square and Flat bar, per picul, $2.80 to 4.20; Hoop, $3.40 to $3.50; Wire, $6.50 to 7; Lead, per picul, $7 to 7.25; Tin, per picul, $18 to 25; Tin Plates, per box, $6.50 to 7; Steel, per tub, $4 to 5; Quicksilver, $64 to 65; Coals, English, $14 to 15; Welsh, $15.50 to 16; Australian, $12 to 12.75.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—The business had not been on a very large scale, and after the departure of the P.M.S.S. Co.'s steamer Great Republic no transactions had taken place. Prices show a slight alteration, and before the New-year holidays the market closed weaker, since when, no business having been done, no change has to be reported. Settlements principally for America amounted to about 1,300 piculs, the arrivals being estimated at 1,800 piculs. Stocks must therefore be computed to be about 4,000 piculs. Quotations were as follows :—Common, $17 per picul; good common, $18 to 22; medium, $22 to 25; good medium, $25 to 28; fine, $29 to 31; finest, $32 to 35; choice, $36 to 44.

SHANGHAI.—Black Tea: The last mail left on the first day of the Chinese new year. During the greater part of the short interval since elapsed the foreign banks had been closed, and the Chinese had not yet recommenced to trade, and, consequently, no business whatever had been transacted. Stocks had been increased by the arrival of two chops from the River, all common Oonams and Ningchows. The low value of this class of Tea at home should react on this market, and lead to less exorbitant prices than have been latterly yielded. Those teamen, however, who have held over the new year appeared firmer than ever in their demands. From Hankow little or nothing more was expected; but should the high prices hold, a small additional quantity of inferior leaf would certainly be made up before the new crop could arrive. To reach the total export of last season we require still four millions, while the Tea to go forward from all sources this year can hardly exceed one million pounds. Re-shipments, none. Stock 8,500 chests, against 14,000 at same date last year. Total settlements (as far as ascertained) 335,000 chests, against 312,000 chests last year, and 265,000 in 1866; an increase due solely to the falling off in the direct export from Hankow, estimated this year at only 28,000 chests, against 68,000 in 1866 and 88,000 chests in 1865, making estimated total settlements of Black Tea from the river, in chests, 363,000 this season, against 380,000 last season, and 353,000 the season before.—Green Teas: In these likewise no business has been transacted. Some 6,000 pkgs. had come to hand from Kiukiang and Ningpo, increasing the stock to 11,000 half-chests of all descriptions. Notwithstanding disastrous advices from the United States, buyers appeared anxious to re-open business, and Teamen seemed confident of being able at least to maintain former rates. Stock, excepting the four chops fine Moyune previously alluded to, consisted of common third-crop Tekhing, Pingsuey, and Shanghai-packed Teas, the class which recent sales appear to have chiefly benefited. From the interior 10,000 pkgs. more were expected to complete the regular season's supply, but there was reason to anticipate the arrival of a few thousand half-chests in addition later on, packed from inferior leaf, which Teamen had hitherto rejected. In this case the total probable export to all parts would not be less than twenty-four millions. Reshipments, none. Stock, 11,000 half-chests, against 40,000 at same date last year.

FOOCHOW.—Trifling settlements of Congou and Souchong comprised the business of the fortnight, amounting in all to less than 1,000 chests. The arrivals from the country had been but 600 chests, which, with some 400 Foochow-packed, had been placed on the market. The only vessel loading for London was filling up very slowly, and the Eleanor, expected from Amoy, to fill up, would probably have to wait some little time to complete her cargo, and be the last vessel of the season. No more Oolongs had come to hand from the interior, but the stock had been increased by 1000 half-chests of Foochow-packed tea. It was reported that the Lansdowne and Shakespeare could not take all the teas purchased for them.

AMOY.—About 3,300 packages Oolong—the pick of the Teas on offer—had been taken at $18½ to 21 for common to fair cargo, leaving about 1,600 packages in stock. The Eleanor took 5,953 packages Oolong, and 924 of Congou for London, and had sailed for Foochow to fill up. The Surprise, for New York, was full, and about 5,000 packages Oolong would remain to be shipped via Hong Kong.

CANTON.—Two small chops of Country Congous and a few parcels Canton-made Congous had found buyers, but there had been no transactions in Scented kinds or Greens. There had been no further arrivals of leaf, and stocks were low, and, as a rule, undesirable in quality. Holders of the few chops Country Congou on offer continued very firm in their demands for extreme prices. Settlements for the interval are reported as under:—Country Congou, 190 chests, at Tls. 20; 200 half-chests, at Tls. 21; Canton Congous, 1,524 half-chests, at Tls. 17½ to 19½.

SILK.

YOKOHAMA.—About one hundred bales were settled after the date of the last report, in time for the French steamer, and about 400 bales had been settled since. Transactions would doubtless have been on a larger scale but for the holidays and the paucity of stocks; however, the eagerness of a few buyers had forced prices up to a higher range than had been seen during the whole season. As arrivals had been very small, stocks were further reduced, and were estimated at about 800 bales. The quotations at 4s. 4¼d. exchange laid down in London all charges included were as follows:—Mybash, Sinchu, &c., 1 and 2, 34s. 2d. to 35s. 2d.; ditto, 1, 2, and 3, 31s. 5d. to 33s. 3d.; ditto, 2, 3, and 4, 28s. 7d. to 30s. 5d.; ditto inferior, 27s. 0d. to 28s. 1d.; Oshu best nominal, 32s. 2d; Oshu medium, 27s. 9d. to 29s. 11d.; Oshu inferior, 24s. 0d. to 25s. 10d.; Coshu 1 2, nominal, 29s. 7d.; Coshu medium, 25s. 10d. to 27s. 9d.; Coshu inferior, 23s. 1d. to 24s. 11d.; Sodai, 1, 2, 27s. 0d. to 29s. 7d.; Sodai inferior, 24s. 0d. to 25s. 10d.

SHANGHAI.—Mr. Holdsworth's Circular is as follows:—The latest dates received from Europe since my last Silk Circular of the 24th January are by letters to the 10th December, and by Telegrams, via Galle, to the 27th January. Consequent on the intervention of the Chinese New Year Holidays only a very limited business has been transacted, the settlements being estimated at barely 300 bales, the majority of which have been purchased at an advance of Tls. 10 to 25 per picul on the rates paid last mail. Prices must be considered nominal for the greater proportion of the classes of Silk quoted below, owing to the restricted nature of the purchases made. The unsold Stocks remain unchanged, estimated at about 1,200 bales. The quotations, all charges paid to England at exchange 6s. per tael, were:—Tsatlee, chop No. 3., 27s. 6d. to 29s.; Market, Nos. 3 and 3½, 25s. 6d. to 27s.; No. 4, 24s. 6d. to 25s. 6d.; No. 5 and common, 21s. to 23s. Karshing Taysaams: Chop No. 1, 25s.; chop No. 2, 23s. to 24s.; chop No. 3, 21s. to 22s.; Nos. 4, 5, and common, 18s. to 20s. 6d. Chin Cum Taysaam: No. 2, 21s. 6d. to 22s.; No. 3, 20s. to 21s. Yuenfa and Hainings: No. 1, 26s. to 26s. 6d.; No. 2, 24s. to 24s. 6d.; No. 3, 23s. to 23s. 6d.

CANTON.—There had been some inquiry for the Indian and American markets; but, aside from settlements made for these, nothing had been done. The high rates demanded for fine Silk precluded purchases. Native manufacturers were reported to have taken considerable quantities of really good silk, especially fine Loongkongs, which has had the effect of maintaining prices. Stocks of these kinds were quite small, while those of lower grade were large. Re-reeled Cumchook may be quoted $10 to 20 higher, and holders firm. The settlements reported had been made by one or two houses, other buyers not seeming inclined to operate at the ruling values. The following were the quotations:—Tsatlee, best, no sales, $550 to 560 per picul; Tsatlee, No. 1 and 2, no sales, $510 to 535 per picul; Tsatlee, No. 1, Re-reeled Cumchook, 300 boxes, $545 to 555 per picul; No. 1, Loongkong, 40 piculs, $530 to 540 per picul; No. 2, Loongkong, no sales, $510 to 520; Suelam, 20 piculs, $430 to 440 per picul; Punjum, 200 piculs, $125 to 140 per picul.

FREIGHTS AND CHARTERS.

At YOKOHAMA.—To London, Tea £3 10s., Silk £4 to £4 10s. per ton; nominal.

At SHANGHAI.—Rates to London and New York remain unaltered—viz., £8 per ton.; the Ajax (str.) has been circulated at £3 10s. per ton of 40 feet. In coasting charters little has been done, owing to a scarcity of suitable tonnage.

At FOOCHOW.—To London, £3 10s. per ton.

At HONG KONG and CANTON.—To London or New York no fresh charters have been made rates remain unaltered; to the rice port; the demand for tonnage has almost ceased; to the northern ports there is a fair enquiry at good rates. The circular of George Holmes estimates the number of disengaged vessels in port (exclusive of Siamese) at 20, representing 9,829 tons.

At MANILA.—The demand for tonnage continues good at £4 for dry sugar. The Olano has been taken up by Government to load tobacco for London at £5 per ton.

SHIPPING REPORTS.

HONG KONG.

The British barque Sultan, from Newcastle-on-Tyne 9th July, reports having had very bad weather after leaving port, but good winds to the line, which was crossed on the 1st September in 26 West, long., and from thence to the Cape fair weather. After passing this point experienced a bad gale of wind, which lasted for some time. For four hours during this gale the wind blew with the force of a hurricane, completely burying the ship in the sea. Passed Ombay passage on the 4th December, and Gillolo and Pitt's passage on the 25th December. Calms and variable winds until arrival.

The British ship Sir Lancelot reports having left London on the 26th October, and experienced very heavy weather in Channel, having had to anchor once off Dungeness and twice in the Downs. Finally took a departure from Cowes on November 2, and experienced light variable winds, generally from the westward, across the Bay of Biscay and to the Equator, which was crossed on November 27, in 27·36 W. Moderate S.E. trades were encountered, and the meridian of the Cape passed on December 19, in latitude 41·15 S. Experienced four days' very heavy westerly gales while running down the Easting. Entered Allas Straits on January 17, and cleared them next day. Passed through Clayer Straits on the 20th, and crossed the Equator again on the 25th, in longitude 130·50 E. Caught the monsoon on the 27th, which continued light and variable until the 30th, when a fresh gale was encountered for forty-eight hours, after which fell in with three days' calm to the eastward of the Bashees, and thence a fresh breeze until arrival, making ninety-four days from pilot to pilot.

The British ship Chaa-sze reports having left the Downs on the 19th August. Experienced fresh S.W. breezes down Channel and as far as Cape Finisterre. Moderate N.E. trades, and crossed the Equator on the 6th October, in long. 25 W. Met with fresh S.E. trades, and passed the Meridian of the Cape on the 9th November, in lat. 40 S. Moderate Westerly gales while running down the Easting, and sighted Sandalwood Island on the 15th December. Experienced light winds through the Gillolo passage, and strong N.E. gales in the North Pacific, during which a suit of sails were blown away. Passed Gibbey Island on the 25th December, and from thence met with light variable winds and calms as far as lat. 5 N., after which strong N.E. gales and heavy seas were encountered to the Bashees, where light variable winds and calms were again met with for some days, until a steady monsoon was caught, which continued fresh until arrival.

THE LATE MRS. JARDINE.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Jardine took place on the 14th instant, when her remains were interred, amid numerous tokens of profound and sincere regret, in the parish church of St. Mungo, near Castlemilk. The Dumfries Courier has the following well-merited tribute to her memory :—

The intelligence of the dangerous illness (supervening on her recent confinement) of the young and beautiful wife of Robert Jardine, Esq., M.P., created feelings of the deepest concern and sympathy among all on the estate of Castlemilk and neighbourhood, and profound and universal was the grief throughout the district, when on Sunday week the melancholy tidings were received that that illness had on the previous day terminated fatally. Mrs. Jardine had endeared herself to everyone at Castlemilk by her amiable and benevolent disposition, by her engaging and winning manner, and by the kindly interest she took in all connected with the estate. A long period of usefulness and of domestic happiness seemed to stretch before her, but a bright and hopeful career was cut short at the early age of twenty-one. The body of the deceased lady was brought from London to Castlemilk on Thursday night, and was interred in the family burying place in the old parish church of St. Mungo (about two miles distant) on Saturday, the 14th. There was a very large attendance of the resident gentry of the neighbourhood, the clergy, the farmers, and tradesmen on Castlemilk and adjoining estates, &c., and the line of carriages and other vehicles in the funeral procession extended to a great length. Previous to the removal of the body from the house the Rev. Dr. Menzies of Hoddam offered up an impressive prayer.

CASUALTIES.—Intelligence has been received from Batavia by Marine. Telegram via Galle, dated 11th March, that the Sandringham, from Manila to Queenstown, with sugar and hemp, was stranded in Gaspar Straits, 16th Feb., and had become a wreck; crew saved and cargo sold MISCELLANEOUS.—The Chalmers, from Sunderland to Galle which put back to Deal, March 16, sailed on the 18th for her destination.

A gunboat, one of eight building in private yards for the Admiralty, was launched from the iron shipbuilding yard of Messrs. Richardson and Duck, Stockton, on the 10th inst. She is named the Hornet, and has been built from the designs of Mr. E. J. Reed. Her dimensions are—length between perpendiculars, 155ft.; breadth, moulded, 25ft.; depth, 14ft. 2in.; burden, in tons, 463 88-94. She is a composite vessel, having iron frames, beams, &c., covered with two thicknesses of teak planking, the whole of the fastenings being of brass and copper. She is bark rigged. Her armament will consist of two guns, one 100-pounder and one 64-pounder. Her machinery consists of two pairs of horizontal trunk engines, with three boilers of the nominal power of 120 horses. She is on the twin-screw principle, one pair of engines driving each propeller, the latter being of gun-metal, and of the form known as Griffith's patent. The Hornet is said to be for the Indian service, and when fully equipped will only draw 7ft. water.

STEAM SHIPBUILDING ON THE CLYDE.—Messrs. Barclay, Curle, and Co. have launched an iron screw of 900 tons register. She will be fitted with a pair of direct-acting engines with surface condensers, 38-inch cylinders, and 120-horse power. Messrs. C. Connell and Co., of Overnewton, have launched a composite screw of 800 tons. The vessel, which has been named the Nymph, is being engined by Messrs. J. Howden and Co.; she is a duplicate of the Columbine, screw, launched about two months since by Messrs. Connell and Co. Both vessels are intended for the China trade.

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—It appears from advices from Annesley Bay of the 19th of February that the vessels of the British India Steam Navigation Company had done good service, not only in landing troops and stores without accident, but also from the fact that by their powerful condensing apparatus they were able to supply daily to the troops many thousand gallons of good fresh water, not otherwise to be obtained.

CEYLON APPOINTMENT.—The following are announced in the Civil Service Gazette:—Mr. R. C. Pole has been appointed to be commissioner of the Court of Requests and police magistrate of Galle, vice Mr. F. Dickson; Mr. G. W. Templer to be assisted at Jaffna to the Government agent for the Northern Province; Mr. A. Mainwaring to be landing and tide surveyor at Galle; Mr. P. W. Conolly to be commissioner of the Court of Requests and police magistrate of Haputale; Mr. R. Reid to be commissioner of the Court of Requests and police magistrate of Kalpitiya; Mr. J. B. Pilkington to be commissioner of the Court of Requests and police magistrate of Kayts; and Mr. C. E. D. Pennycuick to be commissioner of the Court of Requests and police magistrate of Panwila.

TREATY REVISION AND THE CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

IF the unexpected decision of Lord STANLEY is destined to be acted on, and negotiations for the revision of the Treaty of Tientsin are really to be entered upon with Mr. BURLINGHAME, those Chambers of Commerce in this country that are most deeply interested in the China trade should lose no time in forwarding to the Foreign Office an exposition of their views on the subject. It appears that the memorials of the various Chambers in China, with the Consular reports or communications annexed to them, are already "under consideration" here; and as the venue has been changed, the Manchester, Bradford, Leeds, Liverpool, and other important Chambers should take advantage of that circumstance (the only advantage, as far as we can see, that is likely to accrue from it) to second the efforts of the China merchants to procure a satisfactory settlement of the many important points that will come under discussion. As an incentive to energetic action, the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce has addressed a circular letter to the Chambers of Commerce in England, urgently requesting them to press the whole question on the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. The letter conveys in clear, concise terms the substance of the chief points in the Shanghai memorial, to which we have referred in detail in a former issue. The liberty to reside in the interior of the country (it says), and to open business premises there, after being accorded by the 12th article of the Treaty of Tientsin, has become of no avail from the very limited interpretation subsequently given to the clause conferring the benefit; while the chief object of the Treaty has been further frustrated by the virtual exclusion of foreign manufactures from the greater portion of the population. Denied the privilege of himself introducing the goods in which he deals among the people, or even of facilitating their introduction by improving the system of carriage, the British merchant finds his market limited to a narrow area around the open ports by the imposition on various pleas of prohibitive duties, and even that within the Foreign Settlements themselves heavy taxes prevent the legitimate development of his trade. The suggestions which the Chamber has made with reference to these subjects are:—Firstly, that liberty to reside in the interior under license from the Consul at the Treaty Port be clearly defined; secondly, that the establishment of better means of communication be permitted; thirdly, that no local taxes in excess of the tariff be levied without the express sanction of the Foreign Ministers; and fourthly, that transit dues should be collected by the local officials in the country, in lieu of at the Custom-houses of the open ports.

The letter goes on to state that past experience of the working of the Treaty points to the necessity for a watchful and firm policy in its application rather than for any radical change in its form, and there is much truth in the observation. It is admitted on all hands, that the Treaty, as treaties go, is not a bad one; it has worked badly, not from any inherent defect of its own, but from mismanagement and misinterpretation. How is this? The letter before us answers the question in a single forcible sentence:—"Removed from any contact with foreign merchants, "and the influence of public opinion, the Foreign Ministers be- "come in a measure advocates of Chinese exclusiveness rather "than of the extension of foreign trade, and the result of such "views can only be obviated by the urgent representations of "all the Chambers of Commerce in England." This explanation of the origin of the evil is the true one. Let us hope that the remedy suggested in the last sentence may prove efficacious.

THE PENANG MAIL SERVICE.

THE Penang Chamber of Commerce has taken prompt action in the matter of the alteration in the mail service, by addressing a letter of remonstrance to Sir HARRY ORD, Governor of the Straits Settlements. After deprecating "the hasty and secret "manner in which the arrangement has been carried out," the memorial goes on to state that the improvement effected of late years in the commerce of Penang is due in a great measure to the Settlements being in direct communication with Europe. In support of this assertion the case of Malacca is referred to, where the development of resources has been, according to the memorial, extremely slow, owing to the want of mail communication. In conclusion, the Chamber expresses an earnest hope that the GOVERNOR will use his influence with the British Government on behalf of the Settlements to procure a resumption of the P. and O. Company's service. From a return issued by the Chamber and appended to the memorial it appears that the number of vessels which cleared from Penang for Great Britain from 1859 to 1867 (inclusive) was 160, the total tonnage being 73,800 tons, averaging 8,200 tons per annum. The total value of the imports and exports from the year 1840 is thus returned:—From 1840 to 1845, £6,019,288, annual average, £1,203,857; from 1845 to 1850, £7,749,699, annual average, £1,549,939; from 1850 to 1855, £9,123,477, annual average, £1,824,469; from 1855 to 1860, £15,470,394, annual average, £3.094,078; from 1860 to 1865, £20,072,911, annual average, £4,012,582; from 1865 to 1866, £4,304,937.

As a further step towards the attainment of their object, the merchants and planters of Penang have drawn up a memorial to the House of Commons, in which the claims of that port to be included in the mail service are ably advocated. This document sets forth the injustice of making so important an alteration without giving the Penang residents an opportunity of making any representation regarding its effect on their trade. It then urges that the divergence from the direct course necessary to touch at Penang would only be seventy or eighty miles, occupying some nine hours, and that a stay of six hours would suffice; so that fifteen hours, or even somewhat less, would be the extent of the delay. Some trade statistics follow, showing the satisfactory development that has taken place under the beneficial influence of a regular mail communication, which the memorialists believe will be converted into a retrograde movement, should they be deprived of that convenience. And finally, they point out that the 12th article in the new contract empowers the POSTMASTER-GENERAL to extend the service to ports not specified in the contract, any alteration in the subsidy thereby rendered necessary to be mutually agreed on or settled by arbitration. Under this stipulation it is competent to the POSTMASTER-GENERAL to require the mail packets to continue to touch at Penang, should he now recognise the necessity of doing so. This memorial, which certainly makes out a very strong case for Penang, has been entrusted to Mr. THOMAS BARING, M.P., for presentation, and we understand that several other influential members of Parliament have promised their support to it.

It is clear that if a return to the old system cannot be obtained some sufficient substitute must be found, and one very pertinent suggestion has been made, to the effect that advantage might be taken of the opium steamers now running between Calcutta, the Straits, and China, as a means of conveying English mails, not only to the Straits, but to China, as all correspondence for Calcutta is now sent via Bombay, and the Straits by this route could be reached quicker than by Galle. This would of course necessitate the fixing of the opium sales about a day or two before the due date of the mail from England. We hope the Indian Government will give attention to this question, as, independent of the service rendered to the Straits and China, it seems but rational that the opium sales and steamers should correspond with the arrival of mails from England. The whole subject should be taken up by the Straits Settlements Association.

THE present Inward Mail is the first under the new contract, and is delivered on its due date according to the P. and O. Company's time-table. Its passage through the Straits of Messina, on the evening of Wednesday, the 18th, was promptly telegraphed to the Company, and made public by them. From this it may be inferred that we may always expect the mails to be delivered punctually on the Monday morning, when the steamer is telegraphed as having passed Messina on or before the previous Wednesday.

BANQUET TO GENERAL CAVENAGH.

THE late residents of the Straits Settlements now in London assembled at the Albion Tavern on the 14th inst., to present to General CAVENAGH, their late Governor, a testimonial in the shape of a full length portrait, very ably executed by Sydney Hodges, which is to be hung in the town-hall at Singapore, and in addition to the portrait a pair of silver candelabra and four dessert stands, which are designed to be en suite with the centre-piece (presented by Penang residents), and are ornamented with models of the native animals and foliage, including the curious pitcher plant. The testimonial from Penang consists of a large centre ornament in silver, with groups of native figures and beetle-nut palms of a very light and novel design. The whole of the silver is designed and executed by Mr. STEPHEN SMITH, King-street, Covent-garden. The assemblage was a very harmonious one, the dinner excellent, and the committee of management, consisting, we believe, of Messrs. GREENSHIELDS, READ, PATERSON, and LEVESON, deserve great credit for the satisfactory arrangements and general success of the banquet.

Mr. W. NAPIER, Chairman of the Straits Settlements Association, presided. After the preliminary toasts of the QUEEN, the Prince and Princess of WALES, the Army and Navy, which were responded to by Colonel COLLYER and Admiral KING, lately Commander-in-Chief on the China station, the Chairman proposed the toast of the evening, "The Health of General CAVENAGH." After considerable cheering, Mr. NAPIER entered on some description of the objects and intentions of that meeting. General CAVENAGH, he said, was well known to those present, and through good report and evil report he had conscientiously conducted the government of the Straits for a period of about eight years. During that time he had to contend with numerous difficulties, arising on the one hand through the Native States by which Singapore is surrounded, and the Government of India which he served. The various acts of General CAVENAGH have always been characterised by sound and judicious treatment. The conflict between the interests of those he governed was no mean task to reconcile. Although he had not the pleasure of being resident under the General, and indeed had not seen him until this evening, he had closely watched all his public acts, and with trifling exceptions had reason to be satisfied with his government. Mr. GREENSHIELDS then said:—

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen,—I rise with much diffidence to address this—the largest assembly of Straits residents that ever met in this great city; who by their numbers stamp the Cavenagh Testimonial Dinner a great success. I could have wished that among the familiar faces I see around me some one more able than myself had been selected to be the mouthpiece of Singapore on this occasion; at the same time I appreciate the honour you have done me, and shall do my best in the important matter on presenting the Singapore testimonial. Before proceeding to do this, however, I have a few words to say having personal reference to our honoured guest of this evening. Our worthy chairman has told us that he had left Singapore before General Cavenagh arrived to assume the government of the Straits, and that he had no personal knowledge of him. I, in common with many present, have had the pleasure of knowing General Cavenagh during his whole term of office. It is difficult, on an occasion such as this, to speak of personal qualities without using language that might seem like flattery; or, on the other hand, give a meagre sketch, less warm and broad than our feelings would prompt or the occasion demand. Fortunately in this case the language of plain truth—a plain unvarnished tale—is the best, and I have no hesitation in stating as the fact that General Cavenagh won, during his term of office, the goodwill of the entire community in Singapore; was looked upon as one who had the interest of the settlement at heart; and I say the Singapore testimonial is an expression of the estimation entertained by the entire community of the zeal and ability of the Governor, as well as the probity and urbanity of the man. And now, General Cavenagh, I have the honour, in the name of the community of Singapore, and as representing, also, subscribers and well-wishers in this country, to present this testimonial. First, your portrait, which all consider a successful one, highly creditable to the artist, Mr. Hodges—this portrait will shortly be sent to Singapore, to be hung in the Town-hall there, and be associated with former Singapore worthies, few in number, but deserving of honourable mention here: first, of the great and enlightened founder of the Settlements, Sir Stamford Raffles, in whose praise any word of mine would be superfluous; then the portrait of one who has taken a life-long interest in all connected with the Straits, and who, fortunately, still survives to aid us with his kindly counsel and ripe experience. He is among us to-night. I need not say I speak of our honoured and venerable guest, Mr. John Crawfurd. Then we come to the portrait of the late General Butterworth, of whom many present have a warm and friendly recollection, one who in his day and generation did good service. Your portrait, General Cavenagh, will be the last of the representatives of the old regime—that regime under which Singapore was founded a free port—and as such, may I not say, solely because it has been maintained a free port, has enjoyed nearly half a century of great prosperity. That regime has passed away. May we not on such an occasion pay it a passing tribute of almost affectionate regret? We all hope and believe that Singapore will continue to prosper, and has a bright future in store; but still we may say that the ship under the old rig sailed well, and was a good sea-boat. Let us hope that all these changes may be improvements, and that the good ship, with her new rig and propeller, may progress as before. And now, General Cavenagh, it remains for me to present to you this service of plate, with the earnest wish—a wish that will have a strong echo in Singapore—that you may long be spared to use it, and hand it down as an heirloom in your family, to which in days to come your descendants may point with honourable pride, as a proof of the estimation in which their ancestor was held."

Mr. PADDAY followed Mr. GREENSHIELDS on behalf of Penang, and after a few observations as to the high opinion in which the Penang residents held General CAVENAGH, proceeded to read a letter from Mr. BAIN, in which he very appropriately alluded to the various public and private acts of the GENERAL during his tenure of office. The toast was most enthusiastically drunk.

"I rise to address you with mingled feelings of pleasure and sorrow; pleasure at the thought of the high compliment you have paid me, sorrow at the recollection that the official connection which long existed between us has been now permanently severed. I offer you my sincere and heartfelt thanks, not only for the handsome testimonials which will be handed down with pride as heirlooms in my family, but also for the cordial welcome you have accorded me this evening, a welcome which, as an expression of esteem in the hearts of those with whom, in the discharge of an important duty, I was for so many years associated. The remembrance would long have been cherished, even if it had not been accompanied by your costly gifts.

"Whilst utterly disclaiming all pretensions to be deemed deserving the eulogiums that have been passed upon me by your chairman and the representatives of Singapore and Penang, I may honestly assert that throughout my career as a public servant I have ever endeavoured in an humble degree to follow as close as possible the bright example that has been set before me by so many of our country's illustrious sons in the profession to which I have the honour to belong, and in every position in which I have been placed have tried to the utmost of my poor ability to do my duty. This great honour is my sole merit, the sole claim that I can advance to entitle me to your respect and goodwill; many men are gifted with brilliant talents, and the most brilliant talents are sometimes misapplied: but every one may strive to perform his duty zealously, fearlessly, and impartially, and I am proud to believe that when sincerely influenced by this desire, however numerous his shortcomings, a British officer is sure to succeed in gaining not mere fleeting popularity, but that which is of far greater value, the lasting esteem of his fellow-countrymen, the noblest reward which a soldier can aspire to; it is the most enduring, casting a glow upon his name, when other riches, and honours, and even life itself, may have passed away. Gentlemen, that this is not from a mistaken feeling your presence here is a sufficient proof, for placed as I was at the head of a large and busy community, consisting of many nationalities, entertaining many conflicting views, it would have been impossible for me to have altogether avoided acting occasionally in antagonism to the wishes of some of its members, and even at times giving decisions prejudicial to personal interests. But I ever felt satisfied that so long as every question brought under my notice was treated with due consideration, and that those by whom it was submitted experienced at my hands that fairness and courtesy so essential to the satisfactory maintenance of official intercourse. Even although my decision might be adverse, I should never give real offence. Hence, in discussing public affairs I never disguised my real sentiments; if the opinions advanced were such as I could not honestly support, I never hesitated to express my dissent; and in justice to yourselves, gentlemen, I am bound to acknowledge that that dissent was always as frankly accepted as it was avowed, and that in no single instance was there the slightest attempt at factious opposition, and however opposed my proceedings might appear to preconceived notion, credit was always given me for being actuated by good intentions, and a sincere desire to promote the welfare of the settlement entrusted to my charge. Even as regards the introduction of the Stamp Act, a measure most repugnant at one time to the feelings of the whole community, when once the Act was really extended to the Straits, all opposition vanished, and, indeed, I was indebted to the advice contained in a representation I received from a deputation, of which some of the members are, I think, now present, in being enabled to remedy an omission on the part of the authorities in India, that might have added greatly to the difficulties of improving the provisions of the Act, and have rendered it simply unpopular. Gentlemen, apart from the cares which must always attend any post of importance and responsibility, cares for which I am more than recompensed by your present kindly recognition of my services, my task as Governor of the Straits Settlements was comparatively easy. If during my tenure of office, your beautiful islands flourished that happy result is to be attributed far more to the exertions of the able and zealous officers by whom I was so energetically seconded, and to the cordial support I received from all classes, than to my own labours for the position of the colony. So long as the government is administered on the principle of free trade, initiated by that great man Sir Stamford Raffles in Asia, long before the cry was heard in Europe, I have no fears; but let that principle be once departed from, and your trade will be given to other ports, and with the departure of trade there will be diminution of your revenue, for your capital. Singapore, is simply a great emporium, owing its importance to its admirable position, rendering it the great centre of the commerce of the Eastern Archipelago. However, this is a theme upon which I must not dilate, for so long as we have statesmen at the head of affairs in this country, I feel assured that no attempt to interfere with the freedom of your port will be attended with success; and that there is every reason to believe that the colony will truly retain its pristine vigour and union under the new Administration equally as under the old; and that many years may yet elapse ere it reaches the acme of its prosperity.

"Gentlemen, it is said that when the heart is full the tongue is often silent. I now feel the truth of this saying, and this must plead as an excuse for my brevity; but I cannot conclude without expressing a fervent wish for the continued welfare of a Settlement in which I spent many happy years and made many warm-hearted friends. I would therefore propose as a toast the "Prosperity of the colony of the Straits Settlements," with which toast I venture to couple the name of Mr. W. H. Read—a gentleman who has ever identified himself most thoroughly with the Straits, and whom I always found ready to sacrifice his own convenience if by so doing he could assist the Government or further the interests of his fellow citizens."

The health of Mr. JOHN CRAWFURD was next proposed by the Chairman. Mr. CRAWFURD took charge of the Government of the Straits in 1821, and did much to consolidate the advantages bestowed by Sir STAMFORD RAFFLES. It was chiefly owing to the vigilance of Mr. CRAWFURD that the valuable tin mines in Sarawak were opened up. Since his residence in this country he has always been ready to devote his attention to matters connected with the Straits, and he was a most valuable adviser. Mr. CRAWFURD, in acknowledging the toast, said he had much pleasure in meeting so large a number of gentlemen connected with the Straits; that he was now in his eighty-fourth year, and could hardly expect many more such meetings. He said that the prosperity of the Straits was, in a great measure, owing to the residents themselves.

Mr. LEVESON next rose to propose the "Colonial Service," coupled with the name of Colonel MACPHERSON, the present Colonial Secretary, who had just arrived from Singapore.

Colonel MACPHERSON had much pleasure in returning thanks, and was delighted to find his old friend and Governor so much honoured. The new Government of the Straits, he could assure them, was making satisfactory progress, and if the residents would but exercise patience they would find that trade generally would flourish more under the new than the old regime, and he could assure them that there was no intention to depart from the free trade principles originally laid for the Straits.

Mr. READ then proposed "The Guests," which was responded to by Mr. CRAWFURD.

Mr. GREENSHIELDS called attention to the desirability of a yearly dinner, which was received with great applause.

The CHAIRMAN in a neat speech proposed "the Press," with the name of Mr. ANGIER.

Mr. ANGIER, in reply, said that the press had a most important and at times unpleasant duty to discharge, but so far as he was personally concerned, he could assure the readers of the London and China Express and London and China Telegraph that they were conducted on thoroughly independent principles, and that the object of the proprietors was to be of service to the communities of the Far East, and not pull the strings of any particular section.

General CAVENAGH then proposed the health of the Chairman, and on behalf of the company thanked him for his able discharge of the duties.

A TELEGRAM from Calcutta, dated Feb. 22, and received on Saturday, states that a memorial in support of the ANGLO-INDIAN TELEGRAPH, signed by numerous merchants, has been presented to the Government. The reply was to the effect that the matter was receiving all possible attention, and that a despatch relative to it had been transmitted to the SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA.

A PARLIAMENTARY paper just issued contains the texts of the memorials on the revision of the Treaty addressed to the British Minister at Peking by the Chambers of Commerce at the following ports:—Shanghai, Foochow, Amoy, Hong Kong and Tientsin. It includes also Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co.'s separate memorial, and those of the missionaries at Foochow, Swatow, and Ningpo.

An order has been received at the Royal Engineer establishment, Chatham, directing a party of non-commissioned officers to proceed to Persia to join the detachment of sappers of the Royal Engineers engaged in laying down the telegraph overland to India, under the superintendence of Major Smith. The party will leave Chatham on the 28th inst.

The Gazette of the 17th contains the following notification:—"The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Henry Macleod Read, Forbes Scott Brown, Thomas Scott, and Robert Little, Esqs., to be members of the Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements."

In the House of Commons to-night Mr. BAINES will move for "copies of replies to memorials on direct commerce with the Shan States and West of China from the port of Rangoon."

A FEW SUGGESTIONS TO THE HONG KONG ASSOCIATION.

(To the Editor of the London and China Telegraph.)

SIR,—The inauguration of the Hong Kong Association in London will mark an epoch in the history of the colony, as the views of so influential a body of gentlemen cannot fail to have due weight with the Imperial Government. And there is the more hope of success as the temperate tone of the speakers gives us an assurance that the error into which the Hong Kong branch has fallen, of using too inflated language in their petition to Parliament, will not be repeated. That the Hong Kong Association has materially weakened its case by the use of that species of colonial English which Mr. White tells us cannot be tolerated in England, there cannot be a doubt; and it is to be hoped that any future documents addressed by it to the Home Government will be subject to revision by some one who is not an editor of a paper. But to return to our association. As I think that too much light cannot be thrown upon so vital a point as the action of the Hong Kong Legislative Council, I wish to state that the presence of the official members at that board is a complete farce, as they are not even allowed to differ in opinion from the views promulgated by the governor. Now surely this is a degrading position for any English gentleman to be placed in—to be obliged to vote against his own convictions. But such is literally the case. I was present at a meeting of the Legislative Council in which Mr. Sutherland moved an amendment to the estimates submitted by the then acting governor, Mr. Mercer, when two of the official members actually voted for the amendment. This desertion from the Government ranks reduced the majority for the estimates to one, and, no doubt, caused some serious cogitation in the mind of Mr. Mercer, for he appears to have represented the gravity of the situation to the home authorities. The answer which the Secretary of the Colonies forwarded (to speak more correctly—was understood to have forwarded) defined exactly the position of an official member of the Legislative Council of Hong Kong. The secretary wrote in substance as follows:—"I expect that any member of the Council who is in receipt of a salary from Government will, under all circumstances, support Government by his vote, and trust that in case he finds it impossible to reconcile such a line of conduct with his conscience or his honour, he will not hesitate in resigning his situation. Moreover, I should not be displeased to learn that in the event of any official member acting contrary to the spirit of these instructions, that the governer, for the time being, had suspended him forthwith from the exercise of his official functions pending further instructions from home." This is what is expected from these gentlemen, to whom is extended the prefix "honourable."

The two official members who voted against the Governor's estimates on the above-mentioned occasion were Mr. Whyte and Mr. Forth. Mr. Whyte resigned shortly afterwards, so that he was not again called on to provoke the wrath of the powers that make and unmake official members; but Mr. Forth was again tempted, on the Stamp-tax question, to vote against Government, but prudently asked, before committing himself, what the consequence of his so voting would be. Governor MacDonnell was kind enough to clear up all doubts in a moment, by explaining that every member of Council had, without doubt, the right to vote as he liked, but if any one of the official members should happen to vote against Government, he might be asked how he could reconcile such conduct with the fact of his being a paid servant of the Crown. You will not be surprised to hear, Mr. Editor, that Mr. Forth did not give the Governor the opportunity of asking the above significant question. Now, would it not be better to make this Council a purely deliberative one, without any power of voting at all, than to degrade our Crown officers to this degree of moral depravity? To promulgate an ukase embodying one's own ideas may be one of the greatest enjoyments of a Governor or of a Secretary of the Colonies; but to force a body of gentlemen to endorse, nolens volens, all such peculiar ideas is a something that looks very much akin to tyranny. If it were not so serious a matter, an eye-witness of the proceedings of the Legislative Council of Hong Kong might be excused some amount of hilarity at witnessing the swallowing capacity of the official members. No matter what the proposal of the Government may be, it is accepted with an avidity by these gentlemen that betokens long practice at bolting what, to men of tender conscience, would prove very hard chewing. It matters little what the object of the ordinance is—to levy a tax for building a lighthouse at Ceylon; to pay £20,000, £50,000, or £100,000 per annum military contribution to the Imperial Government; to turn shroffs and compradors into honest men; to legalise gambling and suppress vice in general throughout the island; to mint coin gratis; to flog Europeans in the market-place in order to increase the prestige of the race; to appropriate a card-load of dollars to erect public buildings with sand and water instead of mortar; to legalise prostitution, regulate immorality amongst the Chinese—it is read and passed with astonishing unanimity; the law officers of the Crown crossing the t's and dotting the i's, of course, to make the thing stand better in a court of law. The only difference observable in the swallowing capacity of this body of officers of the Crown is perhaps a somewhat readier and easier mode on the part of such as are heirs-at-law to high appointments—they possessing a slight advantage over actual incumbents. As far as the non-official members are concerned, it must be conceded that they are called upon, in no slight degree, to sacrifice upon the altar of patriotism; for, for a man to go up the hill to Government House on a hot summer's day and "assist" at one of these legislative farces, it is all that a European body and soul can endure in the climate of Hong Kong.

I feel pretty sure, Mr. Editor, that if our Hong Kong Association will turn their attention to the working of this legislative imposition in the colony, they will succeed in effecting some good. The question of how to reform the Constitution of the Council? is one that is, it is true, beset with difficulties; but still a certain measure of success is not hopeless. Another subject which I would urgently press upon the Association to take into consideration is the working of the Courts of Law, as I think an investigation into the ins and outs connected with those institutions would prove both instructive and profitable to the public at large.—I am, yours, &c.,

RUSSIA, GERMANY, &c.

HAMBURG, March 14.

The Russian-American Company are to receive four millions of roubles as compensation for the loss of their sphere of operations by the sale of Russian-America to the United States. At the late meeting of the shareholders held at St. Petersburg they were so agreeably taken by surprise at this announcement that they immediately passed a resolution to present Senator Wrangel, one of their directors—to whom they are mainly indebted for the successful result of the long-pending negotiations with the Government—with six per cent. on the amount, making the comfortable sum of 240,000 roubles.

Two speculative Chinese merchants have arrived with a large quantity of tea suited for Russian consumption at Irbit, where the annual fair is now being held. As such an occurrence had never happened before it has made a great sensation, and the enterprising Celestials will probably repeat their experiment next year, as by the latest accounts they are selling their tea very freely.

Russian papers announce that the Mayor of Irkutzk, who rejoices in the euphonious patronymic of Katyschewjew, has generously made a present of the needful instruments] required for the meteorological station about to be erected in that city.

A letter from Nicolayefsk reports the loss of the schooner Sachalin, the only vessel belonging to that port, and which had earned large sums by freight seeking in those waters. She was wrecked on an island in the sea of Ochotzk, but the officers and crew were saved, having been picked up by a passing vessel.

The Russian Invalide publishes some particulars about the five young Japanese that have been now for three years inmates of the boarding academy of M. Zelowsky, at St. Petersburg. They have all made considerable progress in their studies, and can express themselves fluently in the Russian language; and they all exhibit great predilection for scientific attainments, so that next year they will be removed to institutions where they can prosecute their studies in a higher sphere. One has decided for the School of Mines, two for medicine and surgery, and the others for engineering and architecture. Each pupil, adds the report, pays M. Zelowsky 1,500 roubles annually. The eldest of them is twenty-two years old, and married, but he has left his wife at home.

Seven smooth-bore 68-pounders found in the Hanoverian battery at Stade formerly used to enforce the payment of the Stade dues levied on ships and cargoes passing up the Elbe, and destined for Hamburg and Altona, were sold last week by the Prussian Government at public auction. There being no competition they were knocked down for a mere song to a speculative local publican, who sent them up here and resold them with a a profit of 200 per cent. The last purchaser is about to ship them for sale in China.

COMMERCIAL.

In the transactions of the past week coffee has suddenly assumed the first place of importance, the sales having amounted to nearly 50,000 bags at higher rates, and prices close firm. The rice market continues steady. Of cassia lignea, 1,600 chests have been taken on speculation at 12½ sch. banco, since which the market is firmer, notwithstanding the arrival of two vessels from China direct with 4,500 chests. None is to be had under 12¾ sch. banco. A fair amount of business has been done in pepper at prices decidedly in favour of importers. Spelter is higher, though the sales of the week have been neither extensive nor numerous, and only the following transactions are reported: 500 centners in loco at 13 mks. 10 sch. banco; 1,000 do. special marks at 13 13; 2,000 do. for spring delivery at 13 10; and yesterday, 2,000 do. at 13 12. Discount 2 per cent.

HOLLAND.

ROTTERDAM, March 14.

The Parliamentary debate respecting the interpellation that was brought forward by Mr. Thorbecke to show that the frequent dissolution of the Chamber was unconstitutional and not in the interest of the country has not yet given a definitive result, notwithstanding the discussion lasted seven days. After the Ministry had tried in vain to have the debate suspended till the discussions of the Budget of Foreign Affairs, Mr. de Bosch Kemper brought forward a motion to close the debate, but this was rejected by thirty-nine against thirty-two votes. Then Mr. Blusse proposed the following resolution:—The House having heard the statements of the Ministers is of opinion that the country's interests did not require the last dissolution of the Chamber. A passionate discussion followed after the Ministers of the Interior and Foreign Affairs having stated that they would consider the adoption of this motion as a vote of want of confidence. The result of these discussions was that Mr. Pynappel proposed a motion to postpone the vote on the proposal of Mr. Blusse, in order to allow the Government to lay diplomatic correspondence on the table to justify his conduct in the Luxembourg question. The Liberal party of course approved of this proposal, notwithstanding every one is convinced that nothing can be said that has not already been published by the English, French, and Austrian Governments. As the Minister promised that he would bring forward this correspondence as soon as possible, it is more than probable that without much delay the now suspended discussions will be resumed, and that finally the Cabinet will be struck by a vote of want of confidence. From what was said during the prolix debate, we may infer that the Cabinet will not retreat from such a vote, but that it will be maintained by the King, who, perhaps, will issue for the third time a decree to dissolve the Chamber. The explanation for such strange behaviour is, as is generally thought, that Earl van Zuylen has settled the Luxembourg question (with which our country had nothing to do), to please the King, and that the King now pleases his minister by maintaining the anti-national Cabinet.

Baron Bentinck, our Ambassador at the Court of St. James, where he was accredited for more than sixteen years, died at London some days ago, at the age of seventy. His corpse was transferred to Holland, in order that it might be buried at Wyhe. It is said that Mr. Roest van Limburg, our Ambassador at the Court of Washington, will be appointed to fill this vacant place. In a former letter I told you that our actual Minister of Foreign Affairs was assigned for this dignity, but the Arnhemsche Courant said that this plan was rejected, because the British Court should have declared that this gentleman was not agreeable to it. Notwithstanding the Minister of the Interior declared in the Chamber that this communication was false, it is generally believed that something like that occurred.

At the re-election at Haarlem the Liberals were defeated, Mr. Knoorders, the Conservative candidate and anti-revolutionist, being duly elected. It was certainly very strange that this candidate was also recommended by the editor in spe of the Java Bode, Mr. Ch. Busken Huetz, who, notwithstanding he will become the editor of this Liberal E. I. paper, placed his name under an advertisement, being a warm recommendation of a Conservative. This fact shows the political conviction of this author, by whose scribbling I do not think that the Javanese will profit much.

Two important Bills were laid before the Chamber, viz, that to abolish the tithes, and that to reorganise the academical instruction. By the last Bill it is proposed to transfer the propædentical instruction to the gymnasia. Every town of more than 20,000 inhabitants will be obliged to maintain such a gymnasium, whilst in smaller communities progymnasia will be established. The academies at Leyden, Utrecht and Groningen will be maintained, and also all the faculties except the theological one; instead thereof one or more seminaries for the instruction of reverends for the Reformed Church will be subsidised, as well as those institutions in behalf of the other communities. The study at the academies is quite free and no duration of the cursus is fixed, but a final examination is required; it is, however, not necessary that the students should have studied at one of the academies, it being permitted to establish private establishments for academical instruction. A sum of 3,000f. will be allowed every year, to give opportunities to poor students, to make voyages on behalf of their studies. The students will only have to pay a sum of 200f. a year to the State, whilst the professors will receive from 2 500f. to 4 000f. a year. The reorganised academical instruction will now cost about 400,000f. a year. Only at the academy at Leyden instruction will be given in the Eastern literature, whilst the so-named India Institution at Leyden will be abrogated.

In a former letter I announced that Multatuli's "May Havelaar" should be published in the English language. The translator, Mr. Alphonse Nahuys, now announces in the Spectator that he will translate the English text into Dutch, because the translation was done from the original manuscript. The greatest differences between the English and Dutch editions are, that the names of the places are published in full, and also those of the regents.

The French Government has ordered a large quantity of breech-loaders to be manufactured at Maastricht by Mr. Stevens.

In Berlin will be published a Indische Bibliothek, by the editor Ludwig Dehnicke. Two numbers have been already published, viz., Aus dem Indischen Leben, by Dr. W. R. van Hoevell, and Ostindische Damen und Herren, by Dr. J. ten Brink. The translator is Mr. Wilhelm Berg, a pseudonym.

Mr. J. F. Lylker, M.P., has died at Winschoten. Amongst the candidates to fill this vacant seat is named Mr. Cremers, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. L. E. W. Roorda van Eysinga has addressed himself for the sixth time to the Second Chamber, in order that he might be rehabilitated. It will be remembered that this gentleman was expelled from Java, because he had published in the Java-bode an article named "Solo en de residen Nieuwenhuyzen."

I regret to have to record the death of Professor Jan van der Hoeven, who died at Leyden at the age of 67 years.

The following members of the Second Chamber are elected as reporters on the India Budget for 1868: Messrs. Franssen van de Putte, van Bosse, Rocheissen, W. van Goltstein, and Fokker.

P.S. To day the Second Chamber will meet at 11 o'clock. The Minister of Foreign Affairs will then bring on the table the diplomatic correspondence about the Luxembourg question. A commission will be appointed to report thereon.

115 lots were bought in. At the same auction were sold 36/8 chests Uxim E.C. from 62c. to 68c.

TOBACCO.—Java Leaves: The market is very inactive. On the 31st an auction is announced, at which 1,154 bags Java Tempeh, 886 bags P. K. Blitar, 259 bags M.D., 695 bags Mohamet.

RATTANS.—The Trading Company announces its auction on the 25th March, at which 70,500 bags will be offered. The valuation is from 7f. to 12f. On the same day 29,600 bags, ex Sydney Eggers, will be offered by private contract.

INDIGO.—The market remains very firm; 150 chests were taken at former prices. Only small quantities are offered.

SILK.—The Trading Company will offer at auction on the 26th inst. 458 b. Japan and 87 b. China. The valuation is, 181 b. Maibash, 35f. to 44f.; 190 b. Oshio, 26f. to 39f.; 38 b. Sodai, 32f. to 36f.; 31 b. Ida, 35f. to 40f.; 18 b. Aechezan, 25f. to 30f.; 87 b. China, 28f. to 32f.

BANCA TIN.—The market is very firm; not only were the deliveries during last month very important, but at the spring auction of the Trading Company only 51,100 slabs will be offered. Before this fact was known 1,200 slabs Banca were sold at 52¼f., and 250 slabs at 52½f.; but since was paid for 1,200 slabs Banca 53½f.; 700 do., 54½f. The price now is 54f., but a bidding of 53¾f. might be accepted. For Tin, to deliver after the auction, is paid from 54f. to 54½f.; 400 slabs Billiton, floating, per Eddystone, were sold at 52f., and 400 do. loco, at 51¾f. Stock on warrants 133,459 slabs, unsold stock 50,498 slabs, floating 11,000 slabs.

HIDES.—1,050 Padang Rinder, ex Mary Goddard, were sold, besides 1,307 Sourabaya PL; 1,613 do. SP; 2,000 Samarang D; 5,410 do. CC; 590 do. D. The market is very firm, with a good demand for export, but there is want of stock.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Cocoa-nut Oil: Prime Cochin was paid with 37½f.; Ceylon with 33½f. Sapanwood: The stock is very unimportant. Manzanilla wood may be had at 8½f. to 9½f. Cochineal: A lot Teneriffe Zaccatille is offered at 280 cents. Japan Camphor: The Trading Company announce that 2,522 tubs will be offered by auction on April 1. The transactions were very important, but the prices remained unaltered. The actual quotation is for Japan and China 82 to 83 cents. Cassia Lignia, 71 to 72 cents. Cassia Vera, 45 cents. Japan Wax was much in demand, but without stock. Arrack: 50 casks Batavia, ex Annie Storey, were sold. Mother-o'pearl shells: 14,000 number were put up to auction, but only one lot was sold, at 98½ cents.

MONEY AND STOCK MARKET.—The markets for public securities do not show any fresh feature. There is hardly any movement in the quotations, and the tendency generally is to steadiness. There is, however, no great amount of business. There are only some purchases of a speculative character. No alteration has been made in the rate of discount at the Bank, but there is only a very moderate demand. Dutch Two-and-a Half per Cents., 54; Three per Cents., 63½; Four per Cents., 84¼; Trading Company, 135¾; E. I. Company of Adm., 94¾; Netherlands India Trading Bank, 71; Netherlands India Railway Company, 45 per cent.

'CHANGE.—London, 3 mo., f.11.83; 2 mo., f.11.84½; short, f.11.89; Paris, 3 mo., f.46.95; 2 mo., f.47.2½; short, f.47.30; Antwerp, 3 mo., f.46.90; short, f.47.15; Hambro', 3 mo., f.34.90; short, f.35.10.

The town of Genemuiden (Overyssel) was nearly totally destroyed by fire yesterday. More than 100 houses have been burnt.

For SCHIEDAM.—St. Jan, P. Lommerse.

THE PROPOSED DAILY MAIL TO INDIA.

(STANDARD.)

We have just seen the establishment of a weekly mail to India. How soon shall we have a daily one? To attain this object we must look to the "middle route," concerning which Mr. Hyde Clarke has been proluding before the Society of Arts. This route, as he observes, is not a rival to any existing line. It will not interfere with the Suez Canal, nor with the present land transit through Egypt. And it will do more than either in opening up countries now little frequented, and in giving an impulse to the commerce of the world. Moreover, it has this characteristic—that, above even the Suez Canal, it can claim to be a European undertaking. The lines of railway from London and the European capitals, constituting the great railway system, reach Basiash, on the Danube, near Belgrade, on the Turkish and Servian frontier. For the junctions with Constantinople a route of about five hundred miles, which will pass through Adrianople, has been granted by the Porte to a combination of English, Belgian, and Hungarian capitalists, represented by Messrs. Vander, Elst, and Co., and the works are to be begun at an early date at four different points. A bridge across the Bosphorus, between the Castles of Europe and Asia, has been projected by Mr. Maclean, late President of the Institution of Civil Engineers; and a plan for a similar work was also exhibited at the late Paris Exhibition by Herr Rappert, a distinguished Austrian engineer. The line from Constantinople and Scutari to Bagdad and Bussorah, a distance of fourteen or fifteen hundred miles, is granted by the Porte to a company represented by the Hon. Randolph Stewart, Mr. L. Greig, Messrs. Sharpe, Stewart, and Co., and Baron Winspeare. The route, which has to be decided on survey, has been roughly traced by Izmid, Kutahiah, Anoon Kara Hissah, Ak Serai, Yenishcher, Kaisarieh, Aleppo, the Euphrates Valley, Bagdad, and Bussorah, with a branch to Skanderoon, Seleucia, or Suedia. The guarantee of the Government is limited to five per cent. on £12,000 a kilometre, or £20,000 a mile. The special funds set apart are the postal subsidies and transport of mails, the Indian telegraph receipts, and one per cent. transport duties. From Bussorah mail steamers run to Bombay, but these afford acommodation only to the local trade between India, Bussorah, and Bagdad. Yet this is sufficient to justify the Government of India in maintaining the service.

The minimum receipts for the Constantinople and Bussorah Railway are estimated at £600,000. The question, says Mr. Clarke, is what England and India can afford to give as a postal subsidy, leaving the other mails as matters for subsequent arrangement. Taking this at £200,000, he calculates upon the great increase to the revenue which will result from the acceleration and more frequent transit of the mail. If this be taken at £100,000 it leaves only another £100,000 as the amount of effective subsidy, in substitution of other subsidies, to be divided between England and India, to be diminished by other mail receipts, and to be ultimately extinguished by the development of the railway system and the augmentation of the transit duties. Moreover, asks Mr. Clarke, will not France, Austria, and Hungary participate in this undertaking, from which each is to derive so much? It certainly appears inconsistent with the attitude of France that she should leave the prosecution of these works entirely to England. Looking to practicabilities, it is pointed out that, starting from Constantinople or Scutari, after coasting the Gulf of Ismid to the town of that name, a difficult country has to be approached. This, however, has been, in part, surveyed, and, in part, examined by British engineers, while the whole line from Scutari to Ismid and Eski Sheher has long since been carefully planned under the direction of the former concessionaire, Mr. James Landon. The passage of the Koolak Boghazi, the Syrian or Cilician Gates, the great pass through Taurus, will be the principal work on the line, and the one requiring most care and expense. But since the time when it was first considered, the execution of the railway passages over the Alps and the Ghauts have materially contributed to alleviate the responsibility of such an enterprise. From Aleppo onwards to Bagdad and Bussorah the route presents the usual features of a line in a great southern river valley. An estimate of a hundred miles for the Scutari and Ismid concessionaire gives from eight to ten thousand pounds per mile, but the country beyond is heavier. The estimate of the Euphrates Valley section is given at the same rates for eight hundred and fifty miles as those of the Scutari and Ismid. The total cost appears to be within the limits of £16,000,000 and £25,000,000. Probably, says Mr. Clarke, the capital may be taken at £20,000,000. The line, he adds, can be begun at several points simultaneously, and the question of labour can be solved by the operation of the railway companies in Turkey, where the English system has been organised. The earthworks and masonry will be executed by native labour as well as in Europe, and the line will be as well laid.

Of the political advantages of the line Mr. Clarke modestly says but little. There is no need, however, to show that facility of communication between countries increases their material prosperity, and gives them a common interest in the preservation of peace. And as regards commerce, the article of cotton alone is an important element in the calculation. There can be no doubt that on the line of fifteen hundred miles a great augmentation would be given to production and traffic if in the spring the agents of a few European houses were able to traverse the country without loss of time to arrange advances for sowing, and then, in the autumn, get in their produce from the growers, have it ginned by English gins, and be assured of its rapid transmission to their own warehouses at the ports of shipment. In India, as we know, the impulse of railway transit has caused an amount of production beyond the present means of railways to transport. Mr. Clarke, too, especially points out the advantages of the communication through Persia, not only commercially but politically, in reference of course to Russia. And summing up results, he points to the directness and rapidity of the route as combining the main essentials for postal and passenger purposes. Thus the single post to Bombay will be twelve days instead of twenty-two, and the return of post will, allowing for the intervals of mails, be in proportion, so that in a year there can be fifteen communications instead of seven. The transit to Calcutta may be calculated at sixteen days, to be reduced to thirteen days on the junction of the Indian Railways. The advantages to passengers are of a corresponding nature, for in case of need it will be possible to get to and from London and Bombay in a month. And in these calculations no account is taken of the ultimate completion of the railway system from Bussorah to India, nor of the Indus Valley Railways, which will further facilitate and shorten the communication with the Punjaub and North-West Provinces of India. When these objects are achieved the distance between London and Calcutta will be performed in from ten to twelve days, and ultimately, in all probability, in a shorter period.

Such are the main features of Mr. Clarke's project, which received the support of most of the speakers in the discussion to which it gave rise. Mr. Andrew, who has a rival scheme, was naturally more critical than the rest. It may be, as Mr. Andrew suggested, that Mr. Clarke's plan is applicable only to a time of peace; but the same objection applies generally to undertakings of the kind. And it may be that the question of where the money is to come from is not very easy to answer just now; but the money is certain not to be forthcoming at any time until the feasibility of the route is made tolerably certain; and this part of the question has, we think, been satisfactorily demonstrated. As Colonel Sykes, who was in the chair, remarked, there is no likelihood just now of getting the sinews of war from Government, either in England or India; a Turkey guarantee is not a very permanent source of reliance; and private enterprise is for the present out of the question. Nevertheless, it is something to know what are the capabilities of the business; and any scheme which shows a reasonable prospect of establishing a route to India, effecting a saving of fifty per cent. in point of time, is entitled to the serious attention both of the Government and the public.

Monetary and Commercial.

The biddings for £200,000 in bills on Calcutta and Madras were held as usual at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £185,000; and to Madras, £1,500. The minimum price was fixed at 1s. 11d. on both presidencies—an additional rise of 1 per cent.—and tenders at and above 1s. 11⅜d. will be allotted in full. No tenders on Bombay were invited. These bills were disposed of at a rate which is about equal to silver at the present price.

It is understood there is no authority whatever for a current report that the Council of India will discontinue their draughts on India.

The small amount of bar silver brought by the last West India steamer has been disposed of at 60⅞d. per oz., an advance of ⅜d. on the previous arrival, although large transactions have taken place for India in the interval at and even above this rate. The dollars by the French Mexican steamer just arrived have been sold at 59⅜d. per oz., showing a further slight advance on recent prices.

A further slight advance has been established in Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank shares.

A telegram from San Francisco, dated March 6, says:—"The sailing of the Great Republic for Hong Kong has been postponed on account of the non-arrival of the Constitution from Panama. The Great Republic carries a cargo valued at upwards of $100,000, and over a quarter of a million in treasure."

A Post-office notification just issued announces that in future letters for Canton, Swatow, Amoy, Foochow, Ningpo, or Nagasaki, may be registered, whether sent by British or French mails. The registration fee will be 4d. in addition to the usual postage, the same as on registered letters addressed to Hong Kong. Letters addressed to Shanghai or to Yokohama may also be registered for a fee of 4d. when sent by British mail, but when sent by French mail they must be prepaid 1s. 4d. per half-ounce, in addition to the ordinary postage, as at present.

The new arrangements for the Australian postal service seem to be regarded with general dissatisfaction, and the daily papers publish numerous letters of complaint and remonstrance from firms in the Australian trade, most of whom demand a return to the old system of a fixed day in each calendar month. The majority of the writers apparently fail to discern the impossibility of deranging the already complex system of India and China mails for the sake of a single monthly mail to and from Australia, while, if separated from the China line, the Australian service would require a separate steamer to itself between Galle and London—a manifest absurdity.

Mr. Thomas Baring, M.P., having resigned the chairmanship of Lloyd's, which he has held since 1830, a requisition signed by nearly the whole of the members of the room is about to be presented to Mr. Goschen, M.P., soliciting him to accept the office.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Ripon, from Southampton on the 21st inst., was in gold, to Alexandria, £4,000; to Madras, £1,484; in silver, to Bombay, £175,000; to Hong Kong, £1,100; to Shanghai, £16,785: total in gold, £5,484; in silver, £192,885.

The Tanjong Pagar Docks at Singapore seem to be doing well. Since the wharves came into full operation (in August last) there has been a very rapid increase in the number of vessel availing of them, and we are glad to note that nearly thirty outward bound vessels from Great Britain have arranged to use them for discharging. The utility of the establishment has been greatly increased by the opening of workshops fitted with new machinery, and the new graving dock will be ready for use very shortly.

ARTICLES OF IMPORT.

TEA.—The market has remained much in the same state as advised in our last, with a limited business doing. There have been several arrivals, but many of the importers are firm holders. Foochow Congous: Siftings and broken leaf fully maintain late prices. Common and Amoy kinds have been sold at 1s. 1d. to 1s. 1½d. per lb.; fair at 1s. 1½d. to 1s. 2½d. per lb., but little of the latter class is now to be bought under 1s. 2d. per lb.; flavory has sold at 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d. per lb. Souchongs are unaltered. Oolongs, of fresh import, have been sold at 1s. 1d. to 1s. 2d. per lb. for fair quality. Tayshan Congous: Fair have been sold at 1s. 4d. to 1s. 5d. per lb.; good at 1s. 6d. to 1s. 7d. per lb. Green teas: Abundant supplies out of the late arrivals have been on offer, and Ping Suey descriptions have been sold at a decline of 2d. per lb. for most grades, while in some cases a further concession has been necessary to effect sales. Moyunes have been better supported. The public sales on the 17th comprised only 5,196 packages, of which about 3,700 packages found buyers. The auctions passed without any feature of interest, very little Congou being brought forward. Several breaks of Foochow Scented Orange Pekoe sold at from 1s. 6½d. to 1s. 8½d. per lb.

	1868.		1867.
The United Kingdom Stock was on the 29th Feb. estimated at	87,750,000 lbs.	against	101,000,000 lbs.
Cargoes of vessels arrived up to date, but not included in the above stock, with portion of other cargoes only partially included	14,064,100 lbs.	,,	4,523,500 lbs
Amount "on the water," including advices by the last mail	19,951,100 lbs.	,,	25,322,400 lbs.

SILK.—There has been an active demand for all descriptions at rising prices, China closing at an advance of 1s. for best qualities and 1s. 6d. to 2s. for common and middling, fine Bengal are 1s. higher, but common are in limited demand at previous rates.

COTTON.—The London market has been subject to considerable fluctuation since our last report, but the demand has been upon the whole well maintained, and a large business has been done. Quotations are about ¼d. to ⅜d. higher than those last given, and rule as follows. On the spot:—Tinnevelly, 8¼d. to 8¾d.; Western, 7¾d. to 8¾d.; Salem, 8¼d. to 8½d.; Coconada, 7¾d. to 7⅞d.; Broach, 9¼d.; Bengal, 7¼d. to 8¼d. For arrival:—Tinnevelly, October sailing to April shipment and ship named, at 8d. to 8⅜d., guaranteed good fair; Western, January to February sailing and ship named, at 7¾d. to 8d. guaranteed fair; Coconada, January sailing and ship named, at 7⅞d. to 7½d. guaranteed fair red; Bengal, February-March shipment and ship named, at 7¼d. to 7½d., guaranteed fair new; Oomrawuttee, January-February sailing, at 8⅛d. to 8⅜d., guaranteed fair new; Dhollera, ship named, 7⅞d. to 8¼d., guaranteed fair; Broach, ship named, at 8⅜d. guaranteed fair new; Sawginned, ditto, at 8¼d. to 8⅜d.; Mobile, ship named and January sailing, at 10½d.; Orleans, ship named, at 10¼d. to 10½d.

COFFEE.—The market for Plantation has shown a considerable improvement in tone, and good prices have been obtained for common and medium sorts, as well as for the few lots of fine. At auction 225 casks, 33 tierces, 24 barrels, 395 bags sold, triage at 32s., ordinary pale and gray 36s. to 44s. 6d., low middling dull 68s. to 69s. 6d., middling 72s. 6d., colory middling 74s. 6d. to 78s., good and fine middling 80s. to 89s., peaberry 81s. to 91s. Privately also business has been done on terms not previously obtainable, and 15 casks 2 barrels 810 bags Garblings were mostly sold at 5s. to 16s., a few lots 26s. 6d. to 32s. Prices of Native remain steady, with some disposition to buy good descriptions. By private contract about 60 casks, 300 bags have sold at 49s. to 52s. Of 77 casks in auction the greater part sold, good ordinary 48s., one lot 48s. 6d., 128 barrels, 57 bags, fine ordinary brownish 51s. to 52s.

COCOA NUT OIL.—An improved demand has been exhibited for Ceylon, and a fair amount of business has been done at £49 to £49 10s.

GALLS.—Quotations for China are 55s. to 56s., but the business has been unimportant. Of Japan about 200 cases have realised 52s.

GUMS.—Benjamin: Two cases Siam, firsts, were bought in at £24; Copal: of 113 cases common soft Manila offered, 25 cases sold at 27s. 6d. Damar: 50 cases Batavian were bought in, fine pale 90s., second quality 83s., 91 cases Singapore sold, middling with a small part rather dark at 75s. 6d. up to 77s., small pickings 62s. 6d. to 63s. 6d.

HEMP.—There has been a better demand for Manila, and about 3,000 bales have been sold on the spot at higher prices, fair to good roping at £48 10s. to £49 10s. also for arrival 300 bales January-February sailing at £48 for Sorsagon. In auction 2,159 bales have been offered, of which 1,194 bales were withdrawn, the remainder sold at steady prices, 270 bales sea damaged of fair roping, first class at £47, also 695 bales very common of the mark KC,D, sound at £43 10s. to £43 15s., first class sea damaged at £42 5s.

RICE.—The tone of the market has been more decidedly quiet than for some time past, with transactions of small amount on the spot, yet in prices no decided reduction can be quoted. Of 2,309 bags middling to good middling old hard white Bengal in auction the greater part sold at 13s. 9d., being rather cheaper, and privately 150 tons Soolie have been sold at 9s. 10½d. on the quay, 1,000 bags Ballam at 10s. to 10s. 3d., and 100 tons at 9s. 9d. ex ship, and 2,500 bags Rangoon at 12s. 3d. to 12s. 6d. For arrival 1,200 tons Dacca, January to March shipment have sold at 10s. 9d. to 11s., 100 tons white Bengal at 14s. 6d., 300 tons Ballam at 10s. 3d., and 50 tons at 10s. 4½d., all landed terms.

RHUBARB.—The market for China has been firm, and 140 chests were nearly all sold; good fair at 6s. 6d., good middling 4s. 3d. to 4s. 7d., middling 3s. 4d. to 3s. 8d., low middling 3s. to 3s. 1d., good ordinary 2s. 1d. to 2s. 4d., ordinary 1s. 8d. to 1s. 11d.

SUGAR.—Some desire to effect sales of the commoner qualities of Manila has been evinced, and the business done has maintained previous terms, but the better qualities of clayed have met more inquiry from exporters, and sellers are not readily found on previous terms. In auction 9,247 bags clayed Manila (duty 9s. 7d.) were sold at 29s. to 30s. 6d., and 10,225 bags Muscovado at 26s. 9d. By private contract, 13,600 bags clayed Manila, duty 9s. 7d., have been sold at 30s. 3d. to 30s. 6d., 3,000 bags, duty 8s., at 29s. 9d. No transactions are reported in Penang.

TIN.—A reduction of prices in Holland checked activity here, but the value of Straits has throughout been maintained at £91 10s. to £91 15s. Sales of Straits for arrival have been effected at £91 10s.

ARTICLES OF EXPORT.

The latest London quotations are as follows:—

IRON.—Welsh bars, £6 5s. to £6 10s.; Staffordshire bars, £7 5s. to £7 15s.; nail rods, £7 5s. to £7 12s. 6d.; hoops, £8 7s. 6d. to £9;; sheets, £9 10s. to £10; discount 2½ per cent.

COPPER.—Ore, 15s. per unit net; Spanish cake, £73 10s. to £75 per ton; Australian, £82 to £89; English tough, £77 to £80; best selected, £80 to £82; sheet sheathing, &c., £82 to £85; discount 3 per cent.

YELLOW METAL.—Sheets, 4 feet by four, 7d. to 7⅛d. per lb.; sheathing and rods, 7¼d. to 7½d.; discount 3 per cent.

LEAD.—Pig, W.B., £21 5s. per ton; do., other brands, £19 10s. to £19 15s.; Spanish, soft (ex ship), £19 to £19 5s.; sheet, £20 10s. to £20 15s.; shot (kegs extra), £22 10s. to £22 15s.; white do., £27 to £30; red do., £20 15s. to £21; discount 2½ per cent.

SPELTER.—Silesian, £20 7s. 6d. to £20 10s.; English (smelted from ores) £20 net.

QUICKSILVER.—In bottles of 75 lbs. each, £6 17s. per bottle; discount 3 per cent.

ZINC.—English sheet, £26 to £26 10s. per ton; discount 2½ per cent.

The following is from the circular of Messrs. French and Smith:—

The market generally is scarcely so active. The iron masters are a little better employed. Copper is a little easier, owing in some measure to the advices of heavy shipments of bars by last mail from Chili. Tin: Foreign is very firm at quotations, and as the price of Cornish ores is £2 per ton higher, and stocks here are light, we may look for a very firm

The Admiralty have invited tenders for the conveyance of 183 tons navy provisions, &c., 12 tons, weight, cement and nipping gear, 5 tons, weight, blocks of asphalte, from the Thames to Hong Kong.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At ST. HELENA.—Feb. 4, Ercilla, Vicente, from Manila, and sailed 5 for Queenstown; 6, Dageraad, Duinker, from Banjoewangie, and sailed for Rotterdam; Ymuiden, Jong, from Batavia, and sailed 7 for Amsterdam; 7, Zeelandia, Botesz, from Batavia, and sailed 8 for Middleburgh; 8, Benvoirlich, Jenkins, from Padang, and sailed for New York; Noranside, Deas, from Zebu, and sailed for London; Oceaan, Smit, from Banjoewangie, and sailed 10 for Amsterdam; 12, Hendrik Ido Ambacht, Byl, from Banjoewangie, and sailed for Rotterdam; Jan. 23, Anne Longton, Harling, from Manila, and sailed 25 for London; 24, Banian, Chase, from Amoy, and sailed 25 for New York.

Advices from St. Helena, dated Feb. 12, state that the Majestic, of Glasgow, Robertson, from the Clyde to Batavia, which vessel put in there very leaky. August 4, was advertised to be sold on Feb. 20.

Off St. HELENA.—Feb. 6, Feronia, from Foochow.

At TABLE BAY.—Jan. 26, Thomas Mitchell, Shuell, from Colombo, and sailed 28 for London; 27, Alexander, Dempster, from Sunderland, and sailed 28 for Shanghai.

At SIMON'S BAY.—Jan. 28, Annie Lee, Holman, sailed for Colombo; 30, Corinne, Ochiltree, sailed for Ceylon; Beaufort, Banks, sailed for Colombo; 31, Queen of Devon, Guswell, sailed for Colombo.

At ALGOA BAY.—Jan. 29, Silver Cloud, Challis, from Manila.

At Callao, Jan. 29, Uncowah, Rosciano, from Macao; 30, Britannia, Smith, from Galle, and sailed Feb. 4 for Chinchas; Feb. 2, Pedro I., Julle, from Macao.

At MAURITIUS.—Jan. 9, Carmeline, from Macao; 26, Sultana, Paxton, from Singapore; Bien Hoa, Leveque, from Saigon; 30, St. Magnus, Walsh, from Colombo; 31, Lucie and Oriental, both from Saigon; Feb. 6, Tamar (s.s.), Sullivan, from Algo Bay, and left 8 for China; 14, Westborough, Skerry, sailed for Colombo; 16, Sea Star, Varey, from Sarawak, with damage.

The Gabrielle Alice, Lancelot, from Saigon for Bordeaux, which put into Mauritius, Nov. 16, leaky, and had to discharge and repair there, sailed Jan. 30, for Bordeaux.

The Arbutus, Turnbull, from Padang to New York, which put into Mauritius, Jan. 11, with damage, sailed Feb. 17 for New York.

The Ophelia, Toenjes, which sailed from Hong Kong for Callao May 27, has been posted at Lloyd's as not having since been heard of.

CASUALTIES.

The Sea Star (ship), Varey, from Sarawak to London, put into Mauritius Feb. 16 for repairs, having encountered a hurricane on the 2nd and 3rd about 900 miles E. of Mauritius, during which she was thrown on her beam ends, and lost sails, spars, bulwarks, stanchions, &c. Another account states that she had 5½ feet of water in her hold, and had thrown part of her cargo overboard.

The Diana (Oldenburgh barque), from Saigon to Falmouth, has been reported as lost on the coast of Java; crew saved.

The Chalmers, Phillips, which sailed from Sunderland Feb. 29 for Galle put back March 16 to Deal, where she had previously been supplied with two anchors and chains in lieu of others lost.

The Pegasus, Jackson, from London, Feb. 25, for Shanghai, which put back to Deal March 2, arrived at Portsmouth March 7, with master sick; she sailed thence on the 18th with a new master (Mackey), but on the 19th she again put back to Portsmouth, crew refusing to proceed.

The Como, Dewar, from Saigon to Bremen, got on shore on Binkama's Hof, but was assisted off by two steamers, and arrived at Bremen March 5.

Advices from Kolu, Osaka, dated Jan. 5, state that it was reported there that a French barque, bound to Yokohama, from Havre, had been lost a few miles from the entrance.

The Cymbeline, de Faye, which sailed from London March 4, for Tientsin and Chefoo, has anchored in the Downs, having been in collision with the Eden (barque), of Sunderland; and sustained some damage.

The Thomas Mitchell, Shuell, from Colombo, put into Table Bay, Jan. 26, to stop a leak.

The S. van Heel (ship), of Alblasserdam, Munchen, from Shields to Batavia, with coals, struck the pier at Ramsgate, March 13, in consequence of the tow line breaking, causing her to go aground outside the harbour; she was got off on the 14th, and brought into the harbour, after having jettisoned about 100 tons coals. She had previously been supplied at Deal with an anchor and 105 fathoms of chains, in lieu of others lost.

PORT OF AMOY.

SHIPOWNERS, AGENTS, and COMMANDERS are informed that the Dock Company's establishments at the above port afford every facility for REPAIRING and SPARRING VESSELS, cleaning and painting iron ships, and repair and refit of STEAM MACHINERY AND BOILERS.

Their large Granite Dock is 307 feet in length, fitted with a caisson gate, and with a centrifugal steam pump of great power, ensuring despatch in all states of the tides. At average spring tides this dock can receive vessels drawing 16 to 17 feet, and during the autumn and winter months 18 feet. Their two smaller docks, also built of granite, can receive vessels drawing 12 to 13 feet.

The premises comprise a large smithy and boiler shop, carpenters and boat-builders' shops, an fitted with lathes and tools driven by steam,

AN IRON FOUNDRY

for castings up to 5 tons weight, and a BRASS FOUNDRY.

The different departments are superintended by experienced Europeans, viz., engineer, blacksmith, and shipwrights.

A DRY GODOWN for reception of stores of vessels requiring to discharge them.

Good quarters for officers of ships under repair in the dock.

Amoy, 16th December, 1867.

NOTICE TO SHIPOWNERS.

SINGAPORE DOCKS.

THE PATENT SLIP AND DOCK COMPANY execute, in the most efficient manner, SHIPS' REPAIRS of all descriptions, under the supervision of European Shipwrights and Engineers.

The DRY DOCK (opened in March, 1859) admits two Vessels at the same time, being over 400 feet in length with a depth of water ranging to 15½ feet.

Another Dry Dock of larger dimensions, adjoining the above, will shortly be completed, and available for the heaviest Steamers.

There is on the same premises extensive Wharf, with substantial Warehouse and other accommodation, comprising every convenience for coaling Steamers, discharging and storing Goods, together with ample Machinery and appliances for repairing Iron Steamers &c.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—HEALTH'S FOUNTAIN.—It cannot surely be necessary to remind any intelligent reader that the purity of the blood determines every invalid's health and vigour. Holloway's medicine searches out the slightest taint in the vital fluid, and neutralises or expels it, so that the circulation supports the system in place of sowing the seeds of decay. When epidemics are advancing, and disease is steadily on the increase, it behoves every one to have a restorative like these Pills ready to set right any irregularity in stomach, liver, bowels, or kidneys. Holloway's treatment is especially suitable for the young, delicate, and nervous, who are most susceptible of any prevailing sickness, and whom violent measures would endange little less than the epidemic.

GRANULAR
EFFERVESCENT CITRATE OF MAGNESIA,
INVENTED, INTRODUCED, AND PREPARED BY
ALFRED BISHOP, Manufacturing Chemist,
17 & 18, SPECK'S FIELD'S, MILE END NEW TOWN, LONDON.

THIS perfectly white and delicately clean granulated preparation possesses remarkable effervescent qualities, which far surpasses the ordinary Seidlitz Powder in its cooling, refreshing, and mild aperient properties, as well as in its flavour as a saline draught. It is particularly well adapted for women and young children, on account of its most agreeable flavour and mild effect.

N.B. The genuine has the name BISHOP upon the Bottle, also the Name and Trade Mark upon the Label, and is sold in convenient sizes, and secured in so perfect a manner that it may be shipped with safety to any part of the world.

Manufacturer also of Granulated and Effervescent Carbonate of Iron, Citrate of Iron, Citrate of Quinine, Citrate of Quinine and Iron, Carbonate of Lithia in Tubes, Citrate of Lithia, Vichy Salt, Seidlitz Mixture, and all other Granulated Preparations.

IN CHANCERY.—CAUTION.—BISHOP'S GRANULAR EFFERVESCENT CITRATE OF MAGNESIA.—Mr. Bishop, having discovered that the Label which he has used for the last five years was being imitated, recently applied to the COURT OF CHANCERY for an INJUNCTION to restrain such imitation. The injunction was immediately granted, and the defendant was ordered to pay all Mr. Bishop's costs and destroy the labels complained of.

Mr. Bishop is determined to stop the imitation of his label, and will, without notice or delay, take proceedings in Chancery against any person who may copy or colourably imitate the same.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR 1868.

The Proprietor has made arrangements to run six couriers per month in May and June, in the event of delay in the transmission of telegrams by the Russian Telegraph Service. It may not be generally known that the delays during the last season were occasioned by the overflowing of the Rivers Irtisch, Obi, and Yenessei; upwards of 500 versts of Telegraph Line were swept away from time to time. As such inundations occur only once or twice in a century, the Proprietor hopes that the precaution he has taken will prove unnecessary. During the latter two months of last season the line worked very well, and Telegrams were delivered to and from Europe in 18 days; the average time being as follows:—

London and Kiachta by Telegraph	2 days.
Kiachta and Tientsin by Courier	12 „
Tientsin and Shanghai by Steamer	4 „
Total ...	18 days.

A courier having been killed by a fall from his horse last year, the telegram bag was lost, and has not yet been recovered. In order to prevent a recurrence of the inconvenience, it is the intention of the Proprietor to open all telegrams addressed to his care, and forward duplicates by the subsequent courier to their respective addresses, unless he be specially notified to the contrary. The number of stations in Mongolia will be doubled this year. Contracts have been made to deliver telegrams between Kiachta and Tientsin in twelve days; the non-fulfilment of the contracts as to time entails a penalty upon the contractors of from 1 to 3 taels per hour (6s. to 18s.), thus giving a guarantee that delay will not occur.

After the first two months of the season, which are the most severe as regards the climate, the contractors will reduce their contract time to ten days.

C. MITCHELL GRANT.

The incoming French mail, already due, was delayed some days at Hong Kong. It will probably be delivered about the 9th. Telegrams in advance of the succeeding P. and O. mail, leaving Hong Kong March 12, were received via Galle on the 1st inst., and one from Tientsin dated March 19 was received via Kiachta on the 2nd. The Malta and Alexandria cable is still out of order, and likely to remain permanently useless.

LATE TELEGRAM BY GRANT'S LINE.

On the 2nd instant we received, via Kiachta, a telegram dated Tientsin, March 19, announcing successful operations against the rebels in the Northern provinces. Ten thousand are said to have been killed and the rest dispersed.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

THE CIVIL WAR.

The following is a summary of the news brought by the present mail:—

On the 29th January Stotsbashi attempted to press forward. It was however discovered that the Daimio (nominally his friend) in charge of Yedo Castle was a traitor, and that he had given it up to Satsuma. Stotsbashi's troops retreated upon Osaka, losing many men in the act. Stotsbashi then abandoned Osaka and took flight. The foreign representatives were warned, about midnight, that he could no longer protect foreigners. The Ministers' suites and guards left Osaka and reached Temposan fort, at the mouth of the river, during the next day, and after some delay got on board the men-of-war and left for Kobé (Hiogo). The British Legation officials left left in H.M.S. Ocean. No insults were offered by Chosiu's troops, but some French marines were pelted and insulted by the mob at Osaka. They fired in return, killing five and wounding several.

On the 4th February some of the troops of Prince Bizen (one of the Confederate Daimios opposed to Stotsbashi) entered Kobé, and attacked several foreigners. A French marine and an American sailor were wounded by shots. Sir H. Parkes, who was riding in their neighbourhood, narrowly escaped, several shots being aimed at him. The detachments of the 9th Regiment were called out, and the Japanese troops pursued and dispersed. A naval brigade was landed from the Ocean, and in a few hours Kobé was again quiet.

The Confederate Daimios, however, appear to be very favourably disposed to foreigners. Any injury done seems rather to result from foreigners being in the midst of two parties hostile to each other than from any enmity to them. Mob violence and sometimes hostility on the part of troops is of course an exception, but it is not endorsed by the contending chiefs. The Mikado has addressed a communication to Chosiu and Satsuma, warning them to be particularly careful that no rudeness or lawless conduct is observed towards foreigners by those passing through Hiogo.

THE NEW PORTS.

The following account of the recent events is from the Hiogo and Saka Herald:—

The disturbance commenced on the 4th February. Shortly after mid-day a body of some 150 Japanese well armed, and having field pieces, entered Kobé under the command of the Secretary of the Prince of Bizen, who was accompanied by another official of high rank. The main body, some 600 strong, to which they belonged, was three miles in the rear at Hiogo. As they advanced through Kobé they glanced scowlingly about them. At the cry staniero! "fall down!" all the natives fell on their knees, but a foreigner present named Collins, who remained standing, was instantly set upon and threatened; he however got away. Two of Sir Harry Parkes' escort were next met; their Japanese servant was attacked, but they got clear. Shortly afterwards however they came across two French sailors, at one of which a spear thrust was only saved from being fatal by his comrade seizing the sharp blade and turning it aside, being severely cut in the act. The sailors then ran for their lives, the Japanese firing in pursuit not only at them but indiscriminately at every foreigner who appeared. Fortunately two only were hit, a French marine (wounded in the groin) and a seaman from the U.S.S. Oneida (ball not yet extracted).

The scene of this outrage was the main street of Kobé. Sir H. Parkes, accompanied by one of his escort, was crossing the plain marked out as the future settlement when the firing commenced. Sir Harry pluckily faced the Japanese, and instead of seeking cover ran towards the Consulate to give the alarm. Several bullets whistled passed him, but he fortunately reached the Consulate in safety. Several hairbreadth escapes are recorded on the part of other foreigners. One gentleman attached to the Herald, upon seeing the firing commence, thought the Japanese were only firing at the foreign flags by way of defiance, but perceiving their spears uncovered (it is a capital offence in Japan to expose a naked spear-head without using it) he ran for his life and succeeded in warning other friends. At 1.30 P.M. the assembly sounded at the British Consulate, and the detachment of the 9th, under Lieuts. Bradshaw and Bruce, turned out immediately. After marching a couple of miles they came in sight of a body of Japanese, who, as soon as they perceived they were followed, turned round and advanced a short distance. Meanwhile, the 9th extended in skirmishing order, and opened a brisk fire, whereupon the Japanese broke and scattered on both sides of the road, returning the fire for about five minutes; they then again broke into small parties, and fled towards the mountains. The American and French marines were on the left of the 9th. The mounted escort, with Sir Harry Parkes at their head, galloped up to where the Japanese made their stand, and captured three small field-pieces. Messrs. Robertson and Satow, of H.B.M.'s Consulate, and Mr. Blake were with the last-mentioned party. There were but three volunteers with the 9th, Messrs. J. and R. Blackmore and Braga. At the time the alarm was given a number of the men on board the ironclad Ocean were scraping her sides. Down dropped the scrapers, and without waiting to change his dress, each man seized his rifle, and in a wonderfully short time eighty mariners under Captain Bryáges and forty seamen under Lieut. Cornwall were on shore. Joining a small party of fourteen men from the United States steamer Oneida, under Master Muldaur, having a brass field-piece, the Ocean men started in pursuit. The writer of the account in the Herald, who accompanied this party, found the road strewed with baggage that had been hastily abandoned by its owners. Here was to be seen the equipage of the army surgeons, knives, and saws and neatly enveloped packages of medicines. Further on were rain hats, and such was their haste, that some of them even left their sandals behind. After wandering about for several hours, the party returned to Kobe without having met with the objects of their search. The main body of Bizen's men, who had remained at the other end of Kobe, made their escape about 2 o'clock on the following morning, by the back streets to the neighbouring hills.

An envoy from the Mikado arrived at Hiogo on the 7th, and had an interview with the Foreign Representatives, to whom he officially communicated the change of Government, and gave assurances of good intentions, which led to the re-embarkation of many of the marines and sailors who had been mounting guard ashore since the outrage on the 4th. Orders have been issued to Chosiu and Satsuma in the Mikado's name, to be careful that no rudeness or lawlessness is shown towards foreigners. Everything appears now to be tending to quietness at Osaka. It remains to be seen what will occur at Yedo, as we hear from private sources that Stotsbashi is determined to continue the struggle.

A postscript says:—"The arrangements are that Satsuma, Choshiu, and Toza take over the government with all the Shiogoon's treaties and responsibilities, under the Mikado direct. Satsuma's troops already garrison Kobé, well-dressed, well-drilled, well-armed. The Custom-house is reopened. Mikado's officers will probably govern all open ports. Bizen to pay for all damage through the late conflict. Steamers restored."

The following is from a correspondent at Kobe:—

A short description of this place may enable you to judge what chance there may be of a trade in the future. A flat of sand fronting the sea with a range of hills as a background—dimensions about 500 yards long, 300 yards broad. The Tokaido, or main road of Japan, runs behind the sand flat, called Kobe, appropriated to foreigners. The small Japanese houses, built of plaster, slips of wood, and paper, are miserable in the extreme, and the inhabitants seem as poor as church mice. This road leads to Hiogo, a native town about two miles distant, containing several thousand inhabitants, also apparently of the poorest description.

The foreigners here number about hundred. There are merchants, auctioneers, doctors, storekeepers, and grogshop-keepers. Up to the present time no business, except selling chow-chow and grow, has been done, and the greatest uncertainty prevails as to whether the place will ever turn out a success. Judging from the natives that I have met in the streets I should estimate that their worldly wealth might reach about 50 cents a head, all round, exclusive of their mats and household utensils; beggars are abundant, and poverty shows itself in every shape. The Japanese merchants who were supposed to be anxiously awaiting the arrival of our cottons, &c., are mythical beings. In fact, you can find more wealth in any one street in Canton amongst Chinese hongs than you can in any Japanese large city. That means, leaving out the Daimios, who may possess some little capital squeezed out of their subjects.

I am writing under difficulties, having no house, no furniture, no chow-chow, in fact, nothing. We are simply existing, huddled up in Japanese shanties.

YOKOHAMA.

Our advices from this port are to the 14th February. We are unable to give any items of local news, our files of papers having miscarried. The important political changes in progress naturally form the principal topic.

The Japan Gazette, speaking of Yedo, says:—"Troops are daily arriving. Every man who wears two swords is preparing to use them in the cause of the Shiogoon, if he determines to resist Satsuma's entry into his dominions. The Stonewall, ironclad, is anxiously looked for. None of the officers of the Shiogoon think that he will yield. He only left Osaka because the Daimios displayed the Mikado's flag, and he never rebelled, nor would he now rebel against his sovereign."

The Russian steamer Courier arrived from Nagasaki on the 12th, and conveyed to Yokohama the Governor of the former place, who had, in obedience to the order of the Mikado, handed over the government to the officers of Satsuma. The town of Nagasaki was occupied half by Hizen and half by Toza. When the Courier left the British ensign was flying over the Custom-house, and a large body of men landed from the ships to protect foreigners.

A large fire broke out in Kanagawa on the 31st January; the loss to the people was great. A collection was got up among the foreigners for the sufferers, and over 6,000 boos—nearly $2,000—was raised for their relief.

In consequence of the outrage committed at Kobe by Prince Bizen's men the foreign men-of-war seized, on the 5th Feb., all the steamers owned by Japanese anchored in the port of Hiogo. This was because, as stated in the declaration of the Foreign Ministers, the affair concerns not only the clan of Bizen, but all the clans throughout Japan.

A number of Chosiu's troops (some 500 or so) had arrived at Hiogo. In addition to the above, large numbers of Satsuma's, Tosa's, and Awa's men had also arrived at Hiogo, and much excitement appeared to prevail amongst them. Several officials of high rank, kerais and others, are with the soldiers. Kobe is for the time being a free port, all the custom-house officials having left.

The latest intelligence by private letter from Hiogo is to the effect that the war is over and Hiogo tranquillised. No fears are now entertained by foreigners for their safety.

The following Government notification has been issued:—"In consequence of the commencement of civil war in Japan the undersigned (by desire of the Governor of Kanagawa) begs to call the attention of foreign merchants and shipmasters at this port to the clause of the treaties prohibiting the sale of firearms and ammunition and ships to any Japanese except to the Government, and also prohibiting vessels to visit any port in Japan which is not open to foreign trade. A similar communication has already been made to the foreign representatives at Osaka by members of the Gorogio.—MARTIN DOHMEN."

CHINA.

NEWCHWANG.

A letter from this port says:—The Koreans have consented to allow the Chinese to import foreign piece goods under less stringent regulations than before obtained; and the consequence is that Corean traders are buying up all the piece goods in the place, some at an advance on previous rates. Malwa now quotes, good, taels 620—though demand is slight—bean oil, taels 4.16, bean cakes, 5 pieces per taels 3.20, grey shirtings, 8¼ catties, taels 3.10.

Touching the Newchwang bean mills we are glad to hear that Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co. have made liberal terms with Messrs. T. Platt and Co., who got out the plant, and intend sending Mr. Charles Hill, some time manager of their Hongque wharf and warehouses, to superintend and carry on the necessary works. Under such auspices, bean oil and cake facture by machinery will soon be un fait accompli.

HANKOW.

Advices to hand from Hankow to the 6th Feb. state that news has been received there overland to the effect that the rebels in Shantung are marching towards that place, and that they purpose making a conjunction with the Mahomedans in Kangsuh and Shensi towards the summer. The Soo-Wang has been killed in an engagement with the Imperialists. A foreigner who was with Li Footai's forces was captured.

The New-year festivities appear to be kept up for a lengthened period in the native town, On inquiry we find that this is partly ascribed to the small number of outside buyers from the adjacent villages, whose inhabitants have paid but few visits to Hankow for making their regular exchanges and purchases of produce and goods, from the prevalent dearth of last year's season.

FOOCHOW.

We now have the following particulars of the late destructive fire at this port :—

On the night of the 8th February, a fire, which resulted in the total destruction of a large portion of the foreign settlement in Foochow, broke out at 8 P.M., raging without intermission until 5 A.M. on Sunday. Flames were first seen in the vicinity of Messrs. Siemssen and Co.'s new house, which shortly succumbed. The wind, which up to this had been light, gradually freshened from the routh-east, and drove the body of fire back to Messrs. Gilman and Co.'s offices, and to that portion of the settlement where most of the foreign hongs were situated. At midnight, the fire, at its height and perfectly uncontrollable, took a sudden turn, avoiding Messrs. Turner and Co.'s, the Chartered Mercantile Bank, and the Oriental Bank, also Messrs. Overweg and Co.'s. This latter house was, however, looted by the Chinese (notwithstanding the indefatigable exertions of their representative), shaping its course through the godowns of Messrs. Holliday, Wise and Co., and Margesson and Co., both of which were entirely destroyed, together with a cargo of tea for Australia, stored in the latter. At 3 A.M. the fire had mastered the premises of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, and Messrs. Russell and Co.'s hong was for some time in imminent danger, but escaped, with the exception of a small detached building, used as a billiard-room, and at 5 A.M. the fire had apparently burned itself out.

It is impossible to estimate the extent of damage at present, but the following losses are as near as could be ascertained :— Messrs. Siemssen and Co.'s house and contents, total loss, godown saved ; Gilman and Co.'s offices, total loss ; Silverlock and Co.'s offices, total loss ; Rusden, Phipps and Co.'s godown, total loss, office saved ; Hedge and Co.'s office, total loss ; F. Schænke's office, total loss ; the American Consulate, total loss ; Messrs. Holliday, Wise and Co.'s godowns and offices, total loss, the greater part of contents safely removed ; Margesson and Co.'s godowns and offices, total loss ; W. Newman's offices and godown, total loss ; the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, house and offices, total loss ; Messrs. Russell and Co.'s billiard room. The losses will principally fall upon the local offices, and the London Imperial Office will also be a heavy loser. There is little doubt that if a gunboat had been at Foochow, with the assistance of the sailors and the use of the only powerful engine in the place (which for some unaccountable reason the owners declined to send out) much of the above damage might have been avoided.

The Shanghai Evening Express, gives the following additional particulars relating to the fire at Foochow :—It was the night of the Feast of Lanterns, and it is surmised that the accident was caused by an injudicious use of fireworks. Equally strong suspicions are, however, entertained that it was the result of design, as an attempt was made to set a private house on fire by throwing fire balls, but was prevented in time. The total damage it is almost impossible to estimate, but as near as we can guess $400,000 will not cover it. Of this $200,000 is covered by insurance. We have endeavoured to get the amounts for which each office is liable, and think the following may be relied on :—China Fire, $78,000 ; London Assurance, $45,000 ; Imperial, $45,000 ; Queen, $500 ; Hong Kong, $22,000 ; Manchester, 2,000; Northern, $500 ; total, $193,000.

The Chinese arsenal at Foochow is fast progressing. The houses for Europeans, two small schools and one ship slip are already completed, the ground (before rice fields inundated at high water) is very nearly filled in, and the foundations of the workshops are completed. This last was an extensive operation. The ground had to be filled in all round five feet high, and the foundations of the buildings had to be secured by enormous piles and a thick layer of ballast. The arsenal was officially inaugurated on the 18th January last, when the keel of a steamer was put on the blocks and the foundation stone of the workshops was laid, the Imperial Commissioner deputed by the Peking Government to take the general direction of the Arsenal presiding at the ceremony, and the native authorities doing their best to make the proceedings imposing. Troops and gunboats were posted around with the usual firing off of muskets and guns, accompanied by gongs and crackers. The Commissioner so far conformed to European customs as to himself lay a piece of the keel, and he gave the ship the name of the "Wan-nien-Tsing" (the ten thousand years' Tsing dynasty). He then visited the machines which have lately arrived, and they were set in motion for his inspection. Afterwards he laid the foundation stone. The Chinese mandarins have great confidence in the success of the undertaking, and co-operate heartily with the Europeans. The schools, which each number thirty pupils, have already given satisfactory evidence of progress.

Bishop Williams, LL.D., and the Rev. Mr. Nelson, of the American Church, Shanghai, arrived at this port by the last steamer. As the gentlemen are connected with the American Protestant Episcopal Church, they may be supposed to meditate the establishment of a Mission at this port. Such a step we should hail with the greatest pleasure, as representing the activity of American Missions in the East, now happily become a matter of history.

The United States Consul at Foochow is said to have received a communication from Peking that the export duty on teas costing 15 taels per picul and under has been reduced by one-half, but the British Consul and the Customs' authorities are without advices on the subject.

SHANGHAI.

Dates from this port are to the 20th February. The outward mail of December 26 was received on the 8th February, with London telegrams to January 13. The following items are from the North China Herald :—

The balance of the working plant of the Shanghai Wharf Company has been sold by auction for 1,000 taels. The Government has entered on possession of the premises. A plot of land with buildings, situate below the old dock, has been sold at auction for 3,100 taels. The Shanghai Rifle Club has arranged a return match with the Hong Kong Club, and also a small-bore match.

It is stated upon native authority that the Chinese Government intend granting permission to foreigners to work the coalmines in the Si-Shan near to Peking, A rumour somewhat to this effect has long been current ; but it is impossible to say anything with certainty as to the likelihood of its being true.

In consequence of the political changes in Japan, H.M.S. Pearl has been ordered hence to Nagasaki to watch over foreign interests at that port. She has been unable, as yet, to get over the Bar at Woosung, and will have to wait three or four days for higher tides.

The Chinese Government is now inviting a loan of one million Taels, to be guaranteed on the Custom's Revenue. On this the Herald remarks : "Whatever may have been the disadvantages of the exclusive policy which China has for so many centuries pursued, it has at least landed her in the nineteenth century free from a national debt. Having abstained altogether from foreign intercourse, the Chinese have not incurred the expense of foreign wars. It is curious that they are breaking through their previous rule in both respects at once. They have just appointed an embassy to Western Courts, and are now inviting a loan guaranteed on the Customs Revenue. It is to be regretted that they have not entered on this path under happier auspices. Had the first loan been raised to provide funds for constructing a railway, for the repair of roads or canals, or some other great public work, the augury would have been a happy one. But the Tls. 1,000,000 which they desire to borrow is, we believe, destined to meet the expenses of civil war—if by that name may be dignified the diverse struggles between Imperialist and Insurgent troops, which are constantly occurring in different parts of the empire. The present loan is raised under an Imperial edict, directing Tsoikung-pao to raise a loan of Tls. 1,000,000 and has, we hear, been taken up by the local foreign banks. The scrip will bear the seals of the Governor of the Province and of the Superintendent of Customs, and will be registered at the Customs office by the Commissioner. The details of repayment and of interest will be arranged by Hoo, the officer who has been deputed to negotiate the loan."

The Recorder relates an accident of a serious nature which occurred in consequence of the ocean steamer Ajax coming in collision with the Sir Jamsetjee Family. The latter vessel was moored alongside of the wharf commonly known as Hunt's wharf, and the former in getting under weigh with a strong flood tide running was caught in the chow-chow water between Pootung point and H. M.'s Consulate, and although well over on the Pootung side was carried across the river, and before her way could be stopped she ran against and crushed four ballast boats which were lashed alongside the Sir Jamsetjee Family. The damage done to the vessel was the main yard and the main double topsail yards carried away in the slings and the bulwarks slightly damaged; the only damage to the steamer was that the fore topgallant mast was carried away. Had the ballast boats, which were full of shingle, and well down in the water, not been between the steamer and the ship, the damage would have been very great; as it is several Chinese who were in the boats, were drowned. To show the strength of the current and chow-chow water, we are informed that the Acorn, hospital ship for men-of-war, while being towed from her berth to the New Naval Store Yard Wharf, turned completely round just a short time before the accident above recorded occurred, and about the same place. The agents of the Ajax have, we hear, agreed to pay the whole of the damage done to the vessel and ballast boats.

The wreck of the steamer Niphon has been sold in Amoy for $5,000. She broke up almost immediately, and little or nothing of value has been saved. She was wrecked on a point marked on the chart, House-hill, about twenty miles south of Amoy. Fortunately the reef was flat at the spot, and she ran some distance on it; had she struck anywhere else in the vicinity, the danger of loss of life would have been much greater.

The steamer Express has, we hear, been purchased by the Shanghai Steam Navigation Co., who will command the Ningpo trade, at any rate until Captain Satchelder's steamer, now building at Tun-ka-doo, is ready for service. A new steamer for Messrs. Russell and Co., named the Warrior, somewhat similar in build, as we are informed, to the Kiangse, was by, the last mail's advices, at Mauritius, en route to China.

News has been received by the last mail to the effect that the master of the Bremen bark Siam, who some time ago was tried for barratry, had his papers taken away, and was ordered to proceed home, has delivered himself up to his authorities in Bremen.

A meeting of Shareholders in the Racket Club was held on the 17th February, when it was resolved to raise Tls. 3,500 by debentures, to meet the debt; and to raise the charges for "bar, and ball accounts," from dollar cents to tael cents, as a temporary increase to the revenue. Messrs. Cann, Robinson, Daly, W. Kidner, Hearn, MacDonell, Houstoun, Porter, and Brand, were elected a Committee for the ensuing year.

Theatrical matters have been exciting some discussion lately; first in the shape of criticism on the de Solla Concert and Burlesque troupe now performing in Shanghai, secondly on an account of an exclusive regulation lately enforced by the Amateur Dramatic Corps, which has been characterised as puritanical and absurd.

The Salle de Concerts at the French Municipal Hall has been formally opened. This fine hall, like other conceptions of prosperous days, is suggestive rather of past extravagance than of present utility. Its decorations and furniture are exceedingly handsome and rich, and it is admirably lighted.

We were misinformed, it appears, in regard to Mr. H. A. Holcombe, whose death, it was feared, occurred by drowning after leaving the ship Erl King in the Wongpoo last month. Mr. Holcombe, it turns out, did not leave the Erl King at all till she got to Hong Kong, and then not until after a day's stay on board, when he landed and took passage in a vessel bound to Manila. That port he reached before the steamer Filipina left, and, under the name of Middleton, engaged a passage in a Norwegian vessel bound to Falmouth for orders. Whether he has since left for that place is not known in China, though it is thought most likely not—South America being the destination struck for it is conjectured. Why Mr. Holcombe has so mysteriously enveloped his movements no one can divine. Messrs. Fogg and Co., in whose firm he was a partner, say he had no reason.

The Tientsin trade is already beginning to show signs of renewed vitality, the steamer Yuen-tez-fei being circulated for quick despatch. The prospect of freight must, we should imagine, be good, as we hear that, in addition to their regular liners, Nanzing and Yuen-tez-fei, Messrs. Trautmann and Co. have chartered the China and Feeloong. The Filipino, recently arrived from Manila and Amoy, will also try her fortune at the northern ports. The Manchu, to leave here for Canton on Sunday morning (16th), will there load for Tientsin direct, and it is reported that the Kiangse will be taken off the Ningpo and placed on the northern line also.

Ningpo is decidedly awakening and struggling back to life. We mentioned a short time ago that a Masonic Lodge was about to be opened there, and now we hear that the residents intend to get up a Gymnasiun, a Fives Court, and a Reading Club. A correspondent writes to ask why the port has been overlooked in the matter of harbour-masters. The shipping, he says, is in a flourishing state and likely to continue so; the gentleman who has for some time combined the duties of harbour-master with others in the Customs' service should now be appointed to the distinct post.

HONG KONG.

From this port our advices are to the 26th February. On the 15th Feb. the P.M.S.S. China arrived, having left San Francisco on the 13th January. The latest English mail was that of January 10, conveying London telegrams to Jan. 25, delivered in Hong Kong on the 22nd Feb. The French mail was as usual delayed at Hong Kong, awaiting the arrival of the boat from Shanghai. The following items are from the China Mail:—

Chief Justice Smale gave his decision in re Dent and Co. ex parte Hong Kong Bank, against the latter, and refused to annul the bankruptcy. Similar decision given in re Agra and Masterman's Bank. We are unable to give the decisions of the Chief Justice in extenso, as they are so lengthy that the two combined would fill about five pages of our paper.

The Naval Court of Inquiry has acquitted Captain Peake, late of the steamer Niphon, of all blame regarding the loss of the vessel off Amoy, commended the officers generally, and Lieut. Anson, R.N., a passenger, particularly.

We are informed that several of the Macao officials have been suspended from office by order of the Home Government. Their names are, J. R. Gonsalves, 1st interpreter, who signed the contracts of the Annamites, declaring them to be Chinese; F. H. Azevedo, the superintendent of the barracoons, and who examined the Annamites before signing the contract; and the Procurador, before whom the contracts were signed by thousands of the poor Annamites. But the three Portuguese convicted of piracy and murder of the Annamites are still at large (on bail of $500 each!). A commission of inquiry was appointed by the Portuguese Home Government, composed of the Viscount do Cercal, F. A. Pereira da Silva, F. A. Fernandes (both lawyers); C. L. Souza, merchant, and D. C. Pacheco, merchant. With the exception of one of these gentlemen, who may be influenced by the manstealers, the others are good and independent men. When the commission begins the inquiry, there is little doubt that all the chuchaeiros implicated in the robbery of the Annamites will abscond. The Portuguese Government are much pressed by the English Government.

A curious circumstance has, it is reported, confirmed the belief of the Cantonese in the lately removed Governor of Kwantung as the only official able to control the turbulent spirits of the province. On the night of the 20th inst., only six or eight hours after the boat conveying the energetic Tsiang Yi-li had left the landing place at which his final embarkation took place, an organised attack was made on a pawnshop within the eastern gate of the city by some seventy or eighty armed robbers, who succeeded in looting the building, and who escaped with their booty, after wounding some half dozen of the troops hurriedly brought out against them. This is the first disturbance of the kind at Canton for many months, and was doubtless planned for the purpose of taking advantage of the bustle consequent on the Governor's departure.

At the Hong Kong races the features of the meeting were Exeter's defeat (in the Challenge) by Birmingham, and, in turn, the triumph of the former over the latter in the Shanghai

The Colonial Surgeon's Report on the mortality of 1867 shows the very low death-rate of 2.60 per cent. and a remarkably good bill of health generally.

The following vessels had arrived from home during the fortnight:—Arab, Sunrise (str.), Fiery Cross, Serica, Undine, Belted Will, and Deerfoot.

The Cathedral organ having been rebuilt was formally opened on the 23rd February,

We hear that Mr. Pope Henessy, Governor of Labuan, has married Miss Low, daughter of the Treasurer of that settlement.

The Rev. W. R. Beach, Colonial Chaplin, has been appointed Chaplain to H. E. the Governor.

The annual general meeting of shareholders of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation was held on the 14th February—G. J. Helland, Esq., in the chair. Present at directors' table: Messrs. Foster, Sassoon, Menke, Taylor, Lemann, and Pyke; Messrs. Kressor, Whyte and Hazeland.

The Chairman read the annual report, (which will be found elsewhere) adding that Mr. James P. Duncanson had been added to the list of directors. The Chairman moved, and Mr. J. Lapraik seconded, the adoption of the report; which was unanimously approved.—Messrs. Foster and Menke were next proposed for re-election; which proposition, having been seconded by Mr. Pyke, was unanimously carried by the meeting.—Messrs. Ryrie and Hunter were again appointed auditors for the year.

Mr. Deacon asked for information regarding the transfer of shares in the London market, as he heard rumours that the original intentions of the directors were not to be carried out.

The Chairman replied that it was of course necessary to get shares placed in London before they could obtain a position in the London exchange. Instructions had been sent to London to the effect, that shares would be re-transferred at the request of any one who chose to do so.

After a pause, Dr. Murray said he had been waiting for some one better able to speak, to rise and propose a vote of thanks to the board of directors. He thought it was only due to the board who had given them so good an outturn; and he hoped they would join him in proposing a vote of thanks to them—coupled with the names of the two principal managers.

This motion, having been duly seconded, was unanimously carried.

Mr. Helland replied, to the effect that they would continue to give their best exertions to the interests of the Corporation. The dividend would be ready on Monday first.

At a private conference on the 24th Feb. of members of the Executive Council, bank managers and others, the advisability of continuing the operations of the Hong Kong Mint was discussed, in consequence of the receipt of a telegram from the Colonial-office intimating that the expense would in future fall upon the colony. No arrangement could be come to, as the lowness of exchange held out no hopes of successful working, while a reluctance was expressed to abandon an enterprise upon which so much had been expended. A large order was given by one of the banks, which would employ the Mint for two months longer; and his Excellency said that, should no arrangement be made by that time, the Mint would be stopped.

The following is a statement of what took place:—

His Excellency the Governor summoned a meeting of the Executive Council to consider the action necessary to take in consequence of the receipt of a telegram by last mail from his Grace the Duke of Buckingham. The telegram was dated the 30th of January, and informed his Excellency that the mail then leaving would convey to him authority to close the Mint, unless the Council and community objected, and were prepared to assume the expenses. As the subject involved a reference to the wishes of the community, his Excellency felt it desirable that the Executive Council, as soon as formed, should be aided by the opinions and advice of others in a position to speak for the mercantile classes and the general community. Accordingly, when the minutes of the Executive Council had been read, the following gentlemen, who attended at his Excellency's request at 11 A.M., were admitted,—The Hon. P. Ryrie, the Hon. W. Keswick, representing all the unofficial element of the Legislative Council, in the absence of Mr. Parry, who though only locum tenens for Mr. Gibb, soon expected to return, had left the colony without sanction, and without resigning his place, so as to enable his Excellency to complete the already limited representation of the community. The Hon. W. Alexander was also present, as representing the financial interests of the Colonial Treasury, and Deputy Commissary-General Uniacke those of Her Majesty's Treasury, whilst the managers of the five existing banks were also invited to attend, and were all present.

His Excellency then informed the meeting of his receipt of the telegram mentioned from the Secretary of State, and explained as above the reasons which induced him to invite the gentlemen present to assist the Executive Council with their opinions. As the question of the colony's financial position was one very material in considering the expediency of the community's undertaking the annual cost ($60,000 per annum) of meeting the present establishment of the Mint on its existing reduced scale, a scale which at full work would rise to $100,000, to enable it to coin upwards of 13,000,000 of dollars required to pay its expenses at the present rates of seigniorage, viz., 1 per cent., he gave a brief approximate summary of the existing financial position of the treasury. At this moment there was a large amount of coins there. From that amount, however, there were large deductions to be made approximately as follows:—

Subsidiary coins	54,000
Police and lighting rates, only available for a special purpose	30,000
Licensed gambling-houses deposit and monthly fees	130,000
A few other items..	5,000
	$276,000

which would leave a really available balance of only $81,000, a balance resulting chiefly from the stoppage of various public works, whose resumption when possible was desirable. Out of that balance the salaries and general expenses of the Government would have to be defrayed early next month, which, without including public expenditure, would amount to $35,000, leaving only little more than $50,000 to meet the expenses of the colony. Those liabilities, if the repairs and reconstructions of the Praya, estimated at $178,000, were to be defrayed by the public, and if six quarters of the Military Contribution, due next month, were also to be paid, amounting to about $165,000, would reach the large sum of $343,000 to be met with the $50,000 in hand and the incoming revenue, already liable to the general expenses of Government. His Excellency further entered into explanations as to the reason for regarding the amount of $54 000 in subsidiary coins as unavailable for general purposes, because, whilst great difficulty had been experienced in getting rid of even the small silver coinage, there were actually now $34,000 in copper in the Treasury, which, as they knew, were at a discount of about 45 per cent., and wholly useless. He had also put down all money received from the licensed gambling-houses as unavailable, because he had reason to hope it would not be applied to any imperial or colonial purpose, a result which would be personally most gratifying to himself, as freeing an important measure of police from the embarrassment entailed by the revenue accidentally resulting therefrom. So long as he had no sanction for declaring it unavailable he was necessarily bound to regard it as part of the revenue, which he was bound to dispose of in some way, but if, as he now expected, he might yet be permitted to treat it as unavailable, he would be at once freed from a great difficulty, and a very invidious responsibility. Therefore, gentlemen present would do well not to regard any part of that revenue as a help. They should treat it as it was treated in the Treasurer's weekly returns, viz., as equally unavailable as the judicial deposits. With this information, to which they were entitled, they could better form an opinion of the ability of the colony to continue at its own expense the experiment of the Mint. The general questions affecting the latter's prospective success were no doubt understood well by the gentlemen present, and it was impossible to put before them at once all the voluminous correspondence on the subject which had passed since the report transmitted by him in December, 1866, from the Commission appointed to inquire into its prospects, a report submitted at the time to the principal bankers, and though unfavourable to the Mint, generally endorsed by them all. He might approximately sum up the money account of the Colony with the Mint, by stating that it had now cost $500,000, and had produced a return of $20,000. His Excellency lastly gave some interesting details of the ineffectual efforts which he had made to introduce a tael currency into China, and to obtain employment from the Chinese and Japanese Governments for the Mint, as also of the result of communications with Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, and the decided hostility of the Chinese authorities to any alteration of their present system of taking silver by weight and touch. He then proceeded to ask the unofficial members of Council, what they thought would be the feeling of the community as to undertaking the expense of the Mint.

The Honourable P. Ryrie declared it to be against the feeling and interest of the colony to do so.

The Honourable W. Keswick stated that individually he should much like a longer trial given to an experiment of such importance, but he did not think in a mere pecuniary point of view the community would be willing to undertake the expenses, or that the Mint could soon be rendered a paying concern.

On the part of Her Majesty's Treasury, Deputy Commissary-General Uniacke said the Mint had been found perfectly useless, as producing any saving or profit.

His Excellency then said it was important to know whether bankers could produce any reasonable ground for continuing the expenditure of the Mint. Of all the community they had the greatest interest in supporting it, for unquestionably its maintenance by the public afforded them in the course of the year many opportunities of making profit by turning, at small expense chopped dollars and old silver, bought at a discount, into good coin. At the same time, it was the duty of the Government not to consider the interests of any class, but of the public at large.

Mr. Jackson regarded it simply as a matter of exchange, which had been so low during the past year that the bankers could not possibly throw any business into the Mint. But if exchange went up there would be plenty of work for it.

Mr. Delbanco suggested that each of the banks should contribute, annually, $3,000 to the maintenance of the Mint, taking their chance of their making profitable use of it.

Mr. Kaye agreed with Mr. Jackson. It was the exchange on India, and not on England, which affected the question. It was always cheaper to circulate Mexican dollars, and it must not be forgotten that bar silver acted as a currency. He considered it expedient for the colony that the Mint should be closed.

Mr. Kresser, seeing that there was no chance of exchange ruling higher, for some time to come, no work was likely to be given to the Mint.

Mr. Berwick saw no prospect of the Mint paying.

Mr. Jackson stated that as a banker he would be glad that the Mint should continue open, but as a colonist he would say decidedly that the Mint ought to be closed.

His Excellency thought Mr. Jackson had fittingly, yet completely, expressed the true bearings of the question in that last observation.

Several gentlemen present then pointed out that they were somewhat unprepared for giving an opinion on the question, when it was put so plainly as, should the Mint be closed or not?

His Excellency, however, said that the matter had been under full consideration for at least a year and a half; still, before taking any definite action, he would further consult with the Executive Council, as it was a very unpleasant duty to close an undertaking and admit the failure of a speculation from which so much had been expected. If the bankers would agree to take over the whole establishment, the Government would consider a proposal to that effect.

That offer, however, did not appear to meet the views of those present, and

Mr. Kaye said it could not be accepted, except in the case of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, without reference to their principals in Europe.

We learn further that when the gentlemen not belonging to the Executive Council had withdrawn, his Excellency, with the advice of the Council, accepted an offer of two bankers to coin $500,000 and $200,000, in subsidiary coins, an operation which would probably occupy two months, as computed by the Master of the Mint, and thus afford to every one concerned ample time to express their opinions, it being the present intention of the Government to break up the establishment at the end of that period if no reasonable ground for adopting a contrary course should then appear.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

Dates hence are to the 4th March. The Messageries Imperiales steamer Hooghly, with the Marseilles mail of January 19th arrived on the 21st, and the P. and O. steamer Behar, with the London mails of January 26th, on the 2nd February.

The following summary of news is from the Straits Times Overland Journal:—

Nothing of much interest has occurred to vary the monotony of life in the Straits. Perhaps we may except Penang, in which the community have been much occupied with a trial of some importance lasting over nine days. The serious riots of August last year will be fresh in the memory of most of our readers. Some evidence against the leaders or headmen of the Toh-Peh-Kong Kongsi (Secret Society or Clan) was furnished to the authorities, partly, as we understand, by the incautious utterances of the men themselves, but mainly by the revelations of two informers belonging to the other Kongsi, the Ghee Hin. They were arraigned, and on the 21st Feb. found guilty of aiding and abetting murder. The general impression among the public seems to have been that the evidence was not only very unreliable but insufficient, and the verdict of the jury took everybody by surprise. Apprehensions of disturbances in consequence of the verdict were at first entertained, but they seem to have been groundless. The men, four in number, who are highly respectable and influential, were sentenced to be hung on the 16th of March, and this will be done, except his Excellency Sir Harry Ord intervenes by an act of grace.

The gunpowder magazine question has occupied a good deal of public attention during the fortnight. A public meeting was held in the Exchange on the 26th Feb., with a view to elicit an expression of opinion from those interested as to whether a Government magazine or a private one would be preferable. A resolution in favour of private magazines under Government license and inspection was unanimously passed. The owners of the lost powder hulk, on their own responsibility and at their own cost, have had Malay divers at work on the sunken wreck, and about 2,000 packages have been salved. The powder is all thoroughly saturated with salt water, but nevertheless can still be used by the Chinese to make crackers, &c. The whole is advertised for sale by public auction for behoof of the concerned.

The Tamar steam transport arrived in harbour on the 29th ultimo, with a portion of the 10th Regiment on board for Japan, and one officer and fifty men of Captain Sterling's Battery of Royal Artillery for this place.

The Maggie Leslie got away from Batavia on the 9th instant, having sailed on that day for London. A guard of Marines had been placed on board, but after remaining one day they were withdrawn, and the ship set free. About £13,000 were taken up on bottomry, we suppose to defray salvage and expenses.

We learn with pleasure that Government have placed the services of the Peiho at the disposal of the community of Penang, for the purpose of conveying their homeward mails (en route to England) to this port, once a month. The Penang merchants, therefore, will have to make other arrangements for the conveyance here of their bi-monthly mail.

Commercial Report.

CHINA AND JAPAN IMPORTS.

YOKOHAMA.—It was generally expected that after the holidays had passed business would be resumed in a more active form than for some time past; but this had been quite dissipated by the announcement of civil war in the South, and the market has continued dull and almost void of business of any kind. While uncertainty exists as to what results may follow the hostilities in the South, it is impossible to look for any change for the better, and the future course of events will be watched with the utmost interest. If a change of government could be peaceably effected no doubt confidence amongst natives would be restored. Blankets had been much sought after, and had risen greatly in value; but purchases generally had been confined to a few articles for local use, and deliveries were on the smallest possible scale. Quotations generally were without much change, but the tendency appears to be to lower prices.

SHANGHAI.—During the interval between the departure of the mails, business had recovered from the previous depression, and transactions to fair extent had been entered into. Grey Shirtings: The market for these goods had slightly hardened, owing to a Chinese speculator having operated to a small extent. The demand among the Chinese, dealers generally remained very limited. For 7 lbs. T-Cloths there had been less inquiry, but considerable sales of 8 lbs. 36 in. Cloth were reported. White Shirtings: Sales to a small extent at last prices. Woollens: Camlets were a shade firmer. Other kinds very quiet. Metals: Nail Rod Iron: A slight decline was again noticeable; the Chinese having supplied their immediate wants, were unwilling to operate further, as they anticipated lower rates. Nail Rod were quoted at taels 2.20 to 2.95 per picul. Hoop and Flat and Round no change. Lead: In good demand, and firm at quotations. Coals: Nothing doing; supplies were ample, and quotations nominal; arrivals however had been very moderate. Quotations were: — Grey Shirtings: 7 lbs., taels 1.8.6 to 1.9.1 per picul; 8¼ to 8½ lbs., 2.1.5 to 2.2 per picul; 9 to 9¾ lbs., 2.3 to 2.7.5 per picul. White Shirtings: 56 Reed, 2.1 to 2.1.5 per picul; 60 do., 2.2.5 to 2.3 per picul; 64 do., 2.3.5 to 2.4 per picul; 66 do., 2.4.5 to 2.6.5 per picul. T-Cloths: 6 to 7 lbs., 1.5 to 1.9.5 per picul; 8 to 84 lbs., 2.2 to 2.6 per picul. Camlets, English: S. 56 yards, 12.7.5 to 13.2.5 per picul; S.S., 12.5 to 13 per picul; S.S.S, 10.5 to 11 per picul.

HANKOW.—The market had not fairly opened, local dealers having been nearly the only operators. The country traders had been delayed in their return by the wet weather, and to this the prolonged inactivity was attributable. The inquiry had been chiefly confined to Plain Cottons and Woollens, and prices were fairly supported. Quotations: Grey Shirtings, 7 to 7½ lbs., taels 2.1.5 to 2.1.6; 8½ to 8¾ lbs., 2.3 to 2.3.2; 9 to 10 lbs., 2.4.5 to 3.1.5; White Shirtings, 56 to 56 reed, 2.2 to 2.3.5; 64 to 66 reed, 2.4 to 2.4.8; 68 to 72 reed, 2.5 to 2.7; T-Cloths, 6 to 6½ lbs. 32 inches wide, 1.3.5 to 1.5; 7 to 7½ lbs. 32 do., 2 to 2.1; 8 to 8¼ lbs. 36 do., 2.2.5 to 2.6.5.

KIUKIANG AND FOOCHOW.—There had been little or no business since the departure of the previous mail.

CANTON.—Moderate settlements were reported in Lead at an advance of 15 cents per picul for common, and 95 cents for W.B. Nail Rod Iron had declined about 15 cents per picul. Quicksilver was rather lower, a small sale being reported at $72 to 73 per picul. Quotations:—Lead $7.60 to 8.75; Quicksilver, $72 to 73.

HONG KONG.—Cotton Yarn: Transactions had again been on a moderate scale, and to effect even the small sales reported, importers had been obliged to make material concessions. Stocks were large—some 10 000 bales—and further considerable quantities, laying down at low cost, were expected to arrive. Piece Goods: Large additions had been made to stock, rendering holders still more anxious to realise; and dealers, continuing to buy only for immediate wants, had succeeded in forcing prices of staple Manchester goods down about 10 cents per piece. Drills, both American and English, continued in some request at about last quotations for shipment to Tientsin, and stocks of the former were exhausted. There was no inquiry for American Jeans or Sheetings, and our nominal quotations are under the views of the holder of the only small parcels on the market. Woollens: Further receipts had again depressed the market, and we note a decline in prices of Long Ells, Lastings, and Camlets. Spanish Stripes were nominally unchanged. Blankets in request at last quotations. The stock of Camlets was estimated at 10,000 pieces, and that of Lastings at 3 to 4,000. Metals: Irons were in limited request, buyers being unwilling to continue purchases at former high values, and all descriptions were lower. Lead was firm, and still inquired for by foreigners. Tin wanted and dearer. Tin Plates without material change. Quicksilver lower by 50 cents. per picul. Coal: Arrivals amounted to about 1,200 tons Welsh, and 1,850 of Sydney—all to consumers. Sales from previous cargoes 120 tons Sydney at $12, and 700 ditto Welsh at $13.55 per ton, the latter somewhat under quotations, which, however, show a decline of about $1 per ton in values of English and Welsh. The quotations at the departure of the mail ruled as follows:—Cotton Yarn: No. 16 to 24, $112.50 to 120 per picul; No. 28 to 32, $130 to 135; No. 38 to 42, $140 to 145. Shirtings grey, 7 lbs. piece, $2.20 to 2 30; 8.4 lbs., $2.77½ to 2.85; 9 to 9.12 lbs., $3.50 to 3.65. Shirtings white, 52 to 56 reed, $2.20 to 2.35; 64 to 66, $2.70 to 3; 68 to 72, $3.25 to 3.50; T-Cloths, 6 to 6.12 lbs., 32 in., $1.77½ to 1.82½; 7 lbs. $2.20 to 2.35; 8 lbs., 36 in., $2.80 to 3. Camlets, S., $18 to 19; SS, $16 25 to 16.50; BBB, $21 to 22; Dutch, $26; Lastings, $15.10 to 15.75; Blankets, 7 to 12 lbs. p. pr., $3.50 to 6; Metals, iron nail rod, $3 to 3 10; round, square and flat bar, p. picul, $3 to 4.20; hoop, $3.40 to 3.50; wire, $6.50 to 7; lead, per picul, $7 to 7.25; tin, per picul, $18 to 24; tin-plates, per box, $7 to 7.10; steel, per tub, $4 to 5; quicksilver, $66 to 67; coals, English, $14 to 14.50; Welsh, $15 to 15.50; Australian, $12 to 12.50.

CHINA AND JAPAN EXPORTS.

TEA.

YOKOHAMA.—A very irregular market for tea has to be reported for the fortnight, owing both to the political state of the country and to the very small stock on the market. Prices had ruled very widely, as much as $2 to 3 per picul difference between two different houses. The settlements were estimated at 1,000 piculs. Quotations given below are quite nominal:—Common to good, $20 to 22 per picul; medium, $23 to 26; good medium to fine, $28 to 36; fine, $31 to 33; finest. $34 to 36.

SHANGHAI.—Black: The amount of business transacted since the departure of the last mail is very small, owing to the firmness of holders and the general unwillingness of people to operate in such descriptions as were left at the prices demanded by holders. The low rate of exchange had not been sufficient to tempt transactions. The stock was rather increased, but there were no very desirable additions to it. Settlements for the fortnight, 904 chests; reshipments on owners' account, nil; stock, 49 chops, or 13,290 packages. Quotations, duty paid, exchange for credits, at 5s. 10d. per tael, and freight at £3 per ton; Oonam, common to fair, 1s. 0¾d. to 1s. 1d.; Ningchow, common to fair, nominal; Oopack, fair to good, do. Green: A small demand had existed, and business had been transacted at prices slightly under the rates previously demanded by holders, but not below those actually given during the early portion of January, at which time there were several buyers in the market. Moyune tea had been bought at 39½ taels to 44½, and the fine lines of a chop of Pingsuey at 43 taels. The stock remaining was very small, and little more had yet to arrive to complete the season's yield. There was only one vessel on the berth for New York requiring cargo. Settlements for the fortnight, 3,630 half-chests; reshipments on owners' account, nil; stock, 18 chops, or 8,600 packages.

KIUKIANG.—Black Teas: About 1,900 packages had arrived from the country, and of these 800 packages Hohow of common quality had been bought at 12 taels per picul, the remainder having been forwarded to Shanghai for sale. Quotations were:—Ningchows: Nominal. Hohows: Common, 12 taels. Green Teas: One chop of common Moyune had been taken at 26½ taels; this was the only settlement, and the market was bare of stock.

FOOCHOW.—About 3,000 packages Tea, intended for shipment to Australia, had been destroyed by fire, and almost the whole of the settlements had been made to replace them. Only 350 chests Congou had arrived from the country, and the amount to be received would not exceed 1,500 chests. It was reported that the Eleanor would have to sail with her Amoy cargo only (5,953 packages Oolong and 924 Congou), and that she would probably go to Singapore to fill up there. A few chops of Oolong had been taken for England. Some 1,200 half-chests intended for America had been shut out from the Lansdowne and Shakespeare, and would go forward via Hong Kong.

AMOY.—There had been no transactions during the fortnight, and the season was virtually at an end, though the stock remaining—say 1,600 packages, may be taken for shipment to America via Hong Kong. The Surprise had sailed for New York with 794,080 lbs. Oolongs, and about 5,000 packages had been forwarded to Hong Kong. The direct export to America for the season amounts to 5,963,981 lbs. of all kinds, against 5,293,339 lbs. last year.

YOKOHAMA.—Settlements for the fortnight were estimated at 500 bales. Prices remained unchanged except for really good Mybash and Oshiu sorts; for the former $950 per picul had been paid, and for the latter $870 per picul. It was not expected, however, that these rates can be maintained. The unsold stock was about 700 bales. A large portion of it, however, was in foreign godowns under advance. Quotations were as follows:—Mybash and Sinchu: Extra, $935 to 950 per picul; do. best, $850 to 900; do. medium, $775 to 825; do. inferior, $700 to 750. Oshio: Extras, $850 to 870; do. best, $725 to 775; do. medium, $650 to 700; do. inferior, $600 to 630. Koshiu: Best, $700 to 750; do. medium, $650 to 680 do. inferior, $600 to 630. Sodai: best, $710 to 750; do medium, $650 to 700.

SHANGHAI.—Mr. Holdsworth's circular is as follows:—"Early in the fortnight but little business was transacted, owing, no doubt, to the low descriptions of Silk offered; subsequently, however, the Chinamen became anxious sellers, and transactions were made to a moderate extent only, chiefly in barter for Shirtings; but the very low rate of exchange has induced several firms to purchase Silk as remittances, and the settlements for this mail are estimated at about 900 bales. Prices have again been very irregular; good Classic Silks are very scarce, and maintain former quotations, but for the lower grades a decline of Tls. 15 to 30 per picul has been established, and the market closes weak at the quotations given below. The arrivals from the interior having been less than the settlements, the unsold stock is reduced to 800 to 1,000 bales, chiefly composed of common and undesirable parcels." The quotations (all charges paid to England at exchange 5s. 10d. per tael) were ruling as follows:—Tsatlee, chop No. 3, 28s. 8d. to 29s. 2d. per lb. Market, No. 3 and 3½, 25s. 6d. to 27s.; No. 4, 23s. to 24s. 6d.; No. 5 and common, 20s. 1d. to 22d. Karshing Taysaam: Chop No. 1, 23s. 6d. to 24s. 6d.; No. 2, 21s. 6d. to 22s. 3d.; No. 3, 20s. 1d. to 21s. Chin Cum Taysaam: Nos. 4, 5, and common, 18s. 1d. to 19s. 7d.; No. 2, 19s. 7d. to 20s. 6d; No. 3, 18s. 10d. to 19s. 7d. Yuenfa and Hainings: No. 1, 24s. 6d. to 25s.; No. 2, 23s. to 24s; No. 3, 21s. 6d. to 22s. 6d.; No. 4 and common, 19s. 1d. to 20s. 6d. Hangchow Tsatlee, 20s. 1d. to 21s. 6d. Throwns, 25s. 11d. to 27s.

CANTON.—Transactions in this article had been extremely limited, holders demanding prices fully $15 to 20 per picul in advance of those ruling at date of our last advices. Stocks of desirable silk were small, and could find a market among the native buyers, who have of late been purchasing at high prices. In Re-reeled Cumchook nothing whatever had been done, as values are $25 to 30 above prices offered. Only one small lot of fair quality Tsatlee had been taken. Unless prices materially decline we see no prospect of any increase in the demand.

LONDON, MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1868.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENTS AND MILITARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

WHAT are "Representative Institutions?" A little while ago we should without hesitation have replied to this question, "The chief element in a Representative Government is a legis- "lative body elected by the suffrages—either universal, or "restricted by certain qualifications,—of a free population." But Mr. ADDERLEY, the ingenious Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, has changed all that. The colonists of Ceylon, aggravated almost beyond endurance by the constant and vexatious interference of the Home Government in their affairs, petition Parliament for such a modification in the form of their Government as would make the official and non-official members of the Legislative Council equal in number. To this Mr. ADDERLEY replies, "You must rest content with what you have got; you "are an Asiatic colony, and therefore unfit for representa- "tive institutions;" an answer which must render it clear to the meanest comprehension, that a legislative body whose members are all nominated by the Crown constitutes a representative Government, unless its official members outnumber their non-official colleagues! We are always glad when we are enabled to tell our readers something they didn't know before. This strikingly original fact is quite at their service. We know it's true, because Mr. ADDERLEY says so. If an Under-Secretary of State does not know what a Representative Government is, who should?

In respect of their form of Government, Ceylon and Hong Kong labour under very similar disadvantages. The case of the former was explained with admirable clearness in the House of Commons by Mr. GORST, the member for Cambridge, whose very temperate speech did not contain a single exaggerated statement. The question was, he said, whether the colony was to be governed in Downing-street or Ceylon. There is a Legislative Council, consisting of sixteen members, all nominated by the Crown. Ten of these are officials in the pay of the Government, who vote in a body according to their instructions, thus giving the GOVERNOR and SECRETARY of STATE absolute control over the expenditure of the colony. On one occasion, to test the question, an item of the military contribution exacted was not voted; whereupon peremptory orders came to reverse the decision of the Council, and pay the money. This was done; but the indignity moved even the official members to protest against being thus compelled to "eat dirt," seeing that while the voting of the money by the Council was such a palpable farce, the GOVERNOR might as well have paid it at once on his own responsibility. Mr. GORST admitted the propriety of a supreme power being reserved to the Home Government, to be used in the last resort, but justly urged that the present system is a complete sham, that ough to be at once abolished. Mr. ADDERLEY based his reply on the assumed impossibility of acceding to demands which, in point of fact, Ceylon never made. He said, "What was asked "for was that there should be a full control, free from all "dictation, over the colonial revenues, but such a system would "be wholly irreconcilable with the condition of an Asiatic "colony like Ceylon. It was impossible to give representative "institutions to a colony which, by its position and condition, "was an isolated part of India. It never entered his mind to "suppose that an Asiatic community like that of Ceylon, which "was most ignorant and uneducated, was fitted for representa- "tive institutions." Both these assertions are inaccurate. No such thing as an unlimited control over the revenue was ever claimed by the colonists; neither did they demand a representative Government. They only asked to be allowed (as Mr. WATKIN well expressed it) "a moderate part in the adminis- "tration of their own affairs." Again, Mr. ADDERLEY stated that "At one time this country paid almost the whole of its "military defences; but after the report of the Select Committee "on the military expenses of the colonies, a very different system "was adopted with regard to Ceylon, as well as all our other "colonies." Indeed, Mr. UNDER-SECRETARY! Then how about Canada, Nova Scotia, and the West Indies, none of which, in the current year's army estimates, are set down for any contribution whatever? The granting of the petitioners' request, Mr. ADDERLEY exclaims, aghast at the magnitude of the proposal, "would involve a total change in their constitution." Well, and why not, if it be a change for the better? We are making an alteration, and a sweeping alteration, too, in the governing body of the mother country—and to deny at the same time the possibility of acceding to any just and beneficial change in the government of our dependencies is bigoted conservatism indeed. Mr. ADDERLEY's reason for maintaining an official majority in the Legislative Council is no better. If the number were equalised, he says, the Governor would have to exercise a casting vote, and would thus be placed in an invidious position. We entirely deny that he would be in a worse position than at present. A governor is surely supposed to have some responsibility, and this casting vote would be exercised in virtue of it. He would thus openly, and in his own person, exert the power he now wields by means of his submissive but unwilling tools. At present he says to his Council, "Gentlemen, here is a measure which you will be good enough "to pass. Perhaps you don't like it; but that is of no conse- "quence. Two-thirds of you hold government appointments, "and will be dismissed if you vote against it." Can a more invidious position than this be imagined?

A very similar state of things exists in Hong Kong. Its Legislative Council is practically as complete a farce as that of Ceylon, for although the Government majority there is not, numerically, quite so overwhelming, it is equally effective. We are told, indeed, that on one occasion, owing to the defection of two of his subordinates, the Acting Governor found himself in the enjoyment of a majority of one only; whereupon he communicated his doubts and fears to the Home Government. The reply was prompt and decisive:—"I expect that any member "of the Council who is in receipt of a salary from Government "will, under all circumstances, support Government by his vote, "and trust that in case he finds it impossible to reconcile such a "line of conduct with his conscience or his honour, he will not "hesitate in resigning his situation. Moreover, I should not be "displeased to learn that in the event of any official member "acting contrary to the spirit of these instructions, that the "governor for the time being had suspended him forthwith from "the exercise of his official functions pending further instructions "from home." Here, as our correspondent "FERRIS" lately observed, is a humiliating situation for an English gentleman to be placed in: decorated with the prefix "honourable" yet compelled to vote against his own convictions! Can anything be more degrading than such a position, or more disgraceful to the government that forces it on its servants? Surely a Governor, acting alone, and responsible only to the Crown, would be preferable to such a mockery of self-government as this.

We trust that the House of Commons has not yet heard the last of Ceylon misgovernment, and that the case of Hong Kong will be promptly brought to its notice. This Legislative Council grievance, although it has long been a source of serious dissatisfaction in the colony, is not referred to in the Hong Kong memorial. We recommend it therefore to the early attention of the Hong Kong Association of London, for no measures they can devise to promote the welfare of the colony are likely to be permanently successful unless preceded by some measure of reform in the system of local government.

THE Penang petition to the House of Commons, on the subject of direct mail communication, which was intrusted to Mr. THOMAS BARING, M.P., for presentation, has not yet been presented. The petition is considered to make out a strong case for Penang, and several influential members of Parliament have promised it their support.

THE second inward mail under the new contract, like the first, is deliuered on its due date according to the time-table. This also passed Messina on the Wednesday evening.

THE NEW SPANISH LOAN.

THE circumstances attending the new Spanish Eight per Cent. Loan of £2,335,000 appear to be interesting to the inhabitants of Manila as well as of the other Spanish colonies. The loan is said, in fact, to be necessitated by the wants of the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico, and the principal and interest are to be secured on the revenues of those islands. The Marid correspondent of the Moniteur thus describes the intended operation and the objects to be effected by it:—

The Spanish Government have lately from various motives, but always with equal solicitude, occupied themselves with the position of their colonies. Not only have the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico cruelly suffered by earthquakes, hurricanes, and epidemics, but also the financial crisis has made itself felt with great intensity at Cuba. Commercial enterprise has been much unsettled, and in all branches of the public welfare a disturbing influence has manifested itself. Naturally such a state of things has been damaging to the receipts of the Treasury. The Minister of the Colonies has therefore now submitted to the Royal signature, with a view of alleviating these existing difficulties, a decree authorising the issue of a loan, the proceeds of which are intended to enable the colonies to pay their way and to discount some of their engagements at an advantageous rate of interest, part of which will also be applied for the creation of an amortisation fund. This loan will be to the amount of about fifty or fifty-five million francs. The last budget of Cuba shows, in spite of great reductions in the Custom-house tariff, a surplus of over one million dollars, and in the preceding years—say from 1859 to 1867—the Treasury of that island contributed towards the income of the mother country seventy-four million dollars; the Philippine Islands nineteen millions; Porto Rico three million dollars. It would therefore appear that the charges and interest of the new loan will not weigh very heavily upon the resources of these fertile possessions. Moreover the sums which will be obtained by it are partly destined to wipe away those liabilities the interest of which so considerably clogged the finances of the colonies; and it is expected that in unfettering these resources, and in re-establishing a normal condition, an opportunity will be afforded for the public wealth to take a fresh development, and for the finances to experience considerable elasticity and a material lightening of burdens.

THE French Government has lately promulgated at Paris the Convention between it and the King of SIAM, by which the latter accepts its protectorate over Cambodge, and permits its vessels to navigate freely in the ports of the river Mekong, and of the internal sea which touches the Siamese possessions. It also publishes another Convention, by which French subjects are allowed to import into the kingdom of Siam wines and fermented drinks on payment of 3 per cent. ad valorem, and to do so under any flag.

In the House of Commons on the 23rd Mr. BAINES moved for "copies of replies to memorials on direct commerce with the Shan States and West of China from the port of Rangoon."

THE United States Senate has unexpectedly confirmed the nomination of Mr. J. ROSS BROWNE to succeed Mr. BURLINGHAME as Minister to Peking.

MR. HADOW, deputy-chairman of the P. and O. Company, succeeds the late Mr. ANDERSON, as chairman.

Monetary and Commercial.

The biddings for £250,000 in bills on Calcutta and Madras were held on the 1st at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £240,550; and to Madras, £9,450. The minimum price was fixed at 1s. 11¼d. on both Presidencies, another advance of 1 per cent. Tenders at 1s. 11⅜d. will receive about 19 per cent., and those above will be allotted in full. No tenders on Bombay were invited. The results show a reaction in the demand for means of remittance to the East.

The bar silver and Mexican dollars brought by the last West India steamer have been sold at 60⅝d. and 59⅛ per ounce, being in each case a decline of ¼d. from the prices obtained for the last arrivals.

According to the last American advices, the Pacific Mail steamer Great Republic sailed from San Francisco on the 7th inst. for China; via Yokohama, Japan, with £600,000 in specie.

The report and balance-sheet of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Company (which has produced a very favourable impression here) will be found in full in another column.

The directors of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, at the meeting on the 22nd of April, will propose a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum for the half-year ended the 31st of December last.

The directors of the Oriental Bank, at the meeting on the 16th of April, will propose a dividend of 6 per cent. for the half-year ended the 31st December last, making, with a previous distribution, 12 per cent. for 1867.

The report of the directors of the Agra Bank, preparatory to the meeting to be held on the 7th April, has been issued. The directors refer especially to the financial position of the bank on the 31st December with respect to the 40,000 A Shares, or newly subscribed capital of £400,000, and the 60,000 B Shares, representing the residue of capital of the late Agra and Masterman's Bank. The accounts consist of a balance-sheet and profit and loss account of the A capital, and a statement of the assets and liabilities of the capital represented by the B shares. With regard to the former, the gross profits earned during the time the resuscitated bank has been carrying on operations down to the 31st December last have amounted to £68,443 16s. 3d., leaving, after deduction of interest paid to constituents and all charges of management, a net profit of £24,881 14s. 8d. The directors, in anticipation of the shareholders' approval, have declared such a dividend as the net profits allowed, and, in doing so, have deemed it prudent to relieve the capital from the sum at debit of preliminary expenses chargeable on the A shares, viz., £5,462 8s. 2d., which they have written off in full. The surplus admitting it, a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on the A capital, has been declared and distributed to the holders of such shares, amounting to £18,393 14s. 8d., leaving a balance of £1,061 14s. 10d. to be carried forward. The statement relating to the B capital shows that the progress made in the shape of realisation, notwithstanding the difficulties encountered, has been satisfactory. In their report in August last the directors announced that they were prepared to pay under discount the promissory notes falling due on the 15th October, and on the 1st November they announced that they were able from that date to anticipate on like terms the promissory notes maturing on the 15th March instant. Both of these instalments have since run off, and there remains only the final payment of 2s. 6d. in the pound falling due on the 15th July next, to complete the discharge of all the outstanding liabilities of the late Agra and Masterman's Bank, with interest at a minimum rate of 5 per cent., which the directors will be in funds to anticipate, as they have been able to do with preceding instalments. With respect to interest to the B shareholders the directors consider further information and more time is necessary before any reliable statement can be given.

A circular has been addressed to the late chairman of the Commercial Bank Corporation of India and the East, in which that gentleman and his colleagues in the direction are invited to consider what steps can be taken to mitigate the misfortunes of the shareholders. It is urged that "the assets still unrealised are mostly of such a nature as to be presently saleable only at enormous sacrifice," and that "the official liquidator must consequently rely principally upon further calls on the shareholders to provide dividends for the creditors." It is accordingly suggested for consideration, "1. Whether the feeling of the creditors as to a compromise should not be ascertained. 2. Whether any, and what steps can be taken by reconstruction, or a new bank, to realise the estate to best advantage, and to avoid the necessity for further calls." The letter lies for signature at Messrs. Dawson and Son's, 121, Cannon-street, City.

The amount of bullion by the P. and O. Company's steamer Poonah, from Southampton on the 4th inst., was in gold, to Gibraltar, £120; to Bombay, £2,000; to Madras, £330: in silver, to Bombay, £35,100; to Hong Kong, £105; to Shanghai, £2,770. Total in gold, £2,450; in silver, £37,975.

TEA.—In this market there has been increased firmness. Common grades of Congou continue in demand at rather improved rates, and the medium to fair descriptions also begin to attract more attention. A few small sales are declared for this week. The Produce Markets Review has the following remarks on the probable course of the market:—"There can be little doubt that by the time when the heavy arrivals of the new crop commence in October next the stocks will have been reduced to a considerably lower point than for some years past at the same period. It is also likely that shipments in coming seasons will be somewhat more even, and will not be so much crowded into the first few months as heretofore. It is further not to be denied under these circumstances that while money remains so cheap that prices are almost sure to have an advancing tendency. Acting on these probabilities a considerable amount of speculation has taken place in the market since Christmas, and the price of common Congou has advanced 2d. per lb. The general market has also become firm lately, partly owing to the large clearances in consequence of an anticipated increase in the duty, and partly to a heavy export demand. The grocers, however, have hitherto refused to give advanced prices, and hold steadily aloof, so that the market at present is in a peculiar position. The merchants and brokers, inspired by its favourable statistical appearance, are extremely firm, and reasonable bids are constantly rejected. At the same time the speculators will not realise except at the full advance, and, as the wholesale dealers generally are well supplied with stock, they find difficulty in doing so. The absence of demand from the country and from speculators and the firmness of merchants, have thus put a temporary stop to business, and the transactions in the market have been very small during the week. The issue from the present dead-lock remains to be considered, and it is with the grocers that it rests. If they accept the probable state of the stock seven months hence as a sufficient inducement to buy largely, the market must rise, and, in the present state of opinion amongst sellers, must rise considerably. If, on the other hand, they pursue a steady policy of buying from hand to mouth, the market will be left to the regular influence of demand and supply, and as the one overtakes the other prices will gradually rise. We do not think that any relapse from the present position is at all likely, unless it be for the lowest common Congou; and, on the other hand, any change that takes place for teas in general will not improbably be in an upward direction."

SILK.—Messrs. Jacomb, Hogg and Co.'s Circular of the 1st April says:—"The Silk Market has been active during the whole of the past month, and prices have experienced some further improvement. In China silk all descriptions of Tsatlees have been in good demand, more especially the better sorts, which are inconveniently scarce, indeed chop silk now scarcely exists. Key-Ing Taysaams are still comparatively neglected, though the moderate rates at which they can be purchased have led to some little business of late. Japan silk has sold currently on arrival, except when the pretentions of importers have been exorbitant. The deliveries 3,777 bales of China and 704 bales of Japan are most satisfactory, and show that the recent movement has to a considerable extent been of a legitimate character." According to a circular of Messrs. Arlès-Dufour and Co., of Lyons, there has been much activity in the silk market during the month just ended, owing to the extent of actual wants that had to be provided for, while a special stimulus was also imparted by the evidence of the great scarcity of all classes of good silk, enhanced by the fears entertained already respecting the result of the next European crop.

BOARD OF TRADE RETURNS.

The Board of Trade tables for February show the commerce of the country to have been steady. Compared with the corresponding month of last year, the only difference in the declared value of our Exports is a falling off of £105,093, or about ¾ per cent. From February, 1866, the falling off is about 5 per cent. Taking into account the decline in the price of Cotton, the present figures exhibit an amount of actual trade at least equal to that of the same month of the two preceding years, since while the value of the Cotton Goods exported during the past month showed a reduction of 7 per cent. from February, 1867, there has been an increase in the quantity of 20 per cent. In the shipments of Cotton Yarn there has been an increase both as regards value and quantity—viz., 50 per cent. in the former, and 70 per cent. in the latter.

The values of the Imports are brought down to the end of January; for that month the "computed real value" of the principal Imports is stated as follows:—January, 1866, £10,394,443; January, 1867, £10,063,066; January, 1868, £9,477,083. As regards the principal importations of the month, it appears that the Cotton landed was 921,147 cwt. against 784,347 cwt. in February, 1867, the increase being entirely in American descriptions; and that the arrivals of Wheat were 2,283,426 cwt. against 1,423,169 in February, 1867, about 55 per cent. of the entire total being respectively from Russia and the United States, which again figure for nearly equal amounts, the latter at length having gained a slight preponderance. Egypt, which in February, 1867, contributed only 4,520 cwt., figures on this occasion for 361,857.

We annex a summary of those figures which relate to our Import and Export trade with China and other countries in the Far East.

PARLIAMENT.

THE CEYLON PETITION.*

(March 20th.) Mr. GORST, in calling attention to a petition presented to Her Majesty by inhabitants of this island, and to a covering despatch of the Governor, said that the papers would disclose a very depressed state of things in the colony and a very angry feeling against the Government ; a refusal of redress by the Government, and an apparent determination on the part of the Governor and other persons to misunderstand the precise complaint of the colonists. Now, considering the great commercial importance of Ceylon, and its position in what some persons called the most central point of our Eastern Empire, discontent there was extremely inconvenient, if not dangerous. He did not ask the House to come to any formal resolution on the subject, but rather to act as mediators between the colonists and the Government, inducing the colonists, on the one hand, to withdraw any demand which they considered unreasonable, and on the other hand inducing the Government to accede to those moderate requests which met with the approval of the House. The grievances of the colonists had arisen out of the military expenditure in Ceylon, but the original question had developed into the wider one of whether the colony was to be governed in Downing-street or at Ceylon. The origin of the dissatisfaction was a despatch sent out by Earl Grey, as Colonial Secretary, in 1848, and confirmed by his successor, the right hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Cardwell), in 1859. It stated that the time had come when it was advisable to extend to the Legislative Council the control over the whole annual expenditure of the colony, and directed the passing of an ordinance permanently charging upon the revenue of the colony fixed expenses which had been paid without having been sanctioned by the Legislative Council. In accordance with the doctrines thus laid down, a sum of £15.000 was first applied, by order of the Secretary of State, and without having been brought under the notice of the Legislative Council, to the increase of the military allowances; and again, in 1864, without any previous communication with the colony, an order was sent out to increase the colonial contribution to the military expenditure from £30,000 to £54,000. Ten of the sixteen members of Council, being officials, considered it their duty to vote according to orders, and money which had been half appropriated to public works was transferred to the military chest. For the sake of testing the question, however, an item of £1,000 was not voted. Peremptory orders were then received from England that the decision of the Legislative Council was to be reversed, and the money paid; and it was paid, the official members themselves protesting that the Legislative Council was unnecessarily compelled to eat dirt, seeing that the Governor might have made the payment on his own authority. The hon. member went on to remark that an attempt had been made to station troops at Galle, where no barracks existed, merely in the hope that the colony would erect suitable barracks for their acccommodation. Indeed, it was apparently the main object of the memorandum to ascertain how much money could be got out of the pockets of the Cingalese. The people of Ceylon now appealed to the Imperial Parliament. What did the colonists ask? They did not ask for a review of the military expenditure. They were ready to pay the £170,000 a-year which it had been determined they ought to pay. They did not ask for a representative Government. There was not a word in any of their petitions that could be construed into conveying such a demand, while, on the other hand, they had over and over repudiated the idea that they made it. All they asked was that they might have in the Council as many non-official as official members. The existence of a Legislative Council in the colony induced people to think that the Governor and the Secretary of State were checked in the civil expenditure. But it was no such thing. The officials on the Legislative Council were instructed from Downing-street ; they were told how they were to vote ; and the result was that the Governor and Secretary of State might do as they liked in regard of the civil expenditure. He quite admitted that the Government should reserve to itself a power in the last resort; but it was one thing to have the votes of a Legislative Council under the direct control of the Government, and another and quite a different thing to have independent action in the first instance, a power being reserved to the Government to act independently of the Council if it appeared to the executive that it was necessary to do so. He wished to ask the Under-Secretary for the Colonies whether the Government would not do something to meet the wishes of the people of Ceylon.

Mr. WATKIN expressed his belief that the inhabitants of Ceylon would feel indebted to the hon. member for Cambridge for bringing their grievances under the notice of the House, and stated that it was his own intention on a future day to move for a select committee to inquire generally into the affairs of that colony. A respectful memorial, containing a temperate statement of their grievances, had been sent by the people of Ceylon to the Home Government, and the question was whether it had received the consideration to which it was entitled. Lord Grey proposed that Ceylon should have something in the semblance of representative Government, and the Council there must altogether be abolished, or such a participation must be allowed it in the power of levying taxes and expending the money as would give confidence to the taxpayers. The result of the present system had been unsatisfactory, because the question of education was going backward, public improvements were ceasing to be made, the police of the island was defective, and famine of a dreadful character had appeared at different times. He believed that all these evils proceeded from the circumstance that the people on the spot were prevented from taking a moderate part in the administration of their own affairs.

Mr. ADDERLEY said that what was asked for was that there should be a full control, free from all Government dictation, over local revenues in the colony, but such a system would be wholly irreconcileable with the condition of an Asiatic colony like Ceylon. It was impossible to give representative institutions to a colony which, by its position and condition, was an isolated part of India, and he always regretted that it was disconnected from India. He had laboured for more than twenty years to give representative institutions to all English communities, but it never entered his mind to suppose that an Asiatic community like that of Ceylon, which was most ignorant and uneducated, were fitted for representative institutions. He maintained that the Council was now far more liberally constituted than at first, when it had no financial functions whatever, but was the mere assessor for the Government. It had, however, since acquired sufficient power to control more than once the financial policy of the colony. The grievance, as stated by the hon. member for Cambridge, was not made out; for within the last few years the police establishment, which was so defective formerly, had been entirely remodelled, as had also the Post-office establishment, and public works had been largely extended. The fiscal department was entirely remodelled, and the laws amended by a new ordinance. The Education Department had been very much increased and improved. The Surveyor's department had been increased, and thirteen additional surveyors appointed. The expense of the civil establishments had been increased from £187,000 to £311,000. The revenue also had enormously advanced. The only ground of complaint was the military contribution which this country called on them to pay. At one time this country paid almost the whole of its military defences ; but after the report of the Select Committee on the military expenses of the colonies, a very different system was adopted with regard to Ceylon, as well as all our other colonies. India paid the whole of her civil and military expenses, and why should a different principle be applied to Ceylon ? They asked to have the appropriation of the revenue, and that it should not be directed by the simple instructions of the Colonial Secretary at home. That would be a total change in their constitution. They also asked that the unofficial members should be equalised with the official. If that proposal were adopted the Governor, on every question that came before them, would have to exercise a casting vote, and would thus be placed in a far more invidious position than at present. The statement of the hon. member who spoke last as to a million of revenue being spent according to the mere discretion of the Secretary of State was wholly at variance with facts. Two thirds of the revenue were not disposed of by instructions from home. One-fourth was placed absolutely at their disposal. Besides, while they asked more popular influence in the Council for themselves, the Cingalese population were overlooked. The interests of the natives were left to be guarded by the Government. If he could see his way clearly to give an influential body, consisting of the merchants and planters, a greater voice in the Legislative Council, so as to assist the Governor, they should have it ; but to give these gentlemen the controlling power, and to leave the Governor only a casting vote, would be unjust in itself, and would place the Governor in a most invidious position. He saw no advantage in a committee on this subject, because the House was already possessed of all the information that could be laid before it. He denied the grievance, and he thought he had shown that the remedy proposed was inadmissible under the circumstances. (Hear.)

Mr. CARDWELL agreed with the hon. member (Mr. Gorst) that all these questions about Ceylon derived their origin from the Select Committee of 1862, which reported that a much larger portion of the expenditure for the military defence of the colonies ought to be defrayed from local and not from Imperial resources. Not long afterwards an hon. member brought forward a practical proposal that Ceylon should again become, what it originally was, a part of the empire of India, which defrayed the whole of its own expenditure. When the news of this proposal reached Ceylon it was received with the greatest consternation, and the strongest remonstances were made against it. The Governor of Ceylon did not think it became him to move in the matter, but an unofficial member of the Council took up the subject, and an address was agreed to by the Legislative Council and sent to England. They said that any such change as had been proposed would impede the progress and disturb the peace and prosperity of the colony. They stated that they were well satisfied with the existing form of Government, which secured a fair representation of the various interests of the colony. They spoke of the marked progress of the colony, and of the peace and good order which prevailed, and which strongly contrasted with its former troubled state. This change, they said, could only be attributed to the wise and liberal measures of the Home Government and to the judicious measures of the local administration, whereby enterprise had been stimulated and Ceylon had been raised to the rank of one of Her Majesty's most important colonies. The principle having been laid down that Ceylon, like our other Indian colony, should defray the whole of its expenditure, it was met by the immediate resignation of the whole body of unofficial members. The Colonial-office accepted their resignations, and found no difficulty in reconstituting the Legislative Council. A military commission of inquiry has since been sitting, and, although its report was not yet laid on the table, he believed that an arrangement had been made, in conformity with the demand made upon the colony to support its own establishments, which would be satisfactory to the island, and form a by no means oppressive burden upon its growing and improving revenue. If he had yielded to the request made to him he would have allowed these gentlemen to control not only the expenditure of Ceylon, but also that of the United Kingdom. And who were those who made this request? Sir Hercules Robinson, the Governor, stated in his despatch that the native population of Ceylon amounted to 2,336,000 persons. The Europeans only numbered 3,000. And by how many of these Europeans had the petition been signed? By 186 persons, comprising among them only 11 merchants and 53 proprietors of coffee estates. It appeared to him that the question of the constitution of the Legislative Council was one which might well be considered by the Government at home, with the assistance of the able Governor of the island.

MANCHESTER MARKETS.

The following on the Manchester Markets during the past month is from Messrs. Barbour Brothers:—

"The month has been a most perplexing one both for buyers and sellers. Influenced by the cotton rumours—though at intervals there has been a lull and a slight reaction—speculators have maintained their position, causing a further advance in prices, which rule now from 25 per cent. to 35 per cent. above those current at the beginning of the year. Some further large transactions have been entered into, forming in the aggregate a considerable business; these have been ostensibly for the larger Eastern markets, or still more freely on speculation. The exports to India and China continue on a large scale; they are, in plain cottons alone, up to March 16, in excess of those up to the same period of 1867, to Calcutta fully 119 million, to Bombay 54 million, to Hong Kong, 26 million, and to Shanghai 61 million yards. About this time last year a somewhat similar spirit of speculation manifested itself, which led to very heavy and serious losses before the year closed; it is not impossible the same result may be witnessed this year. While the anticipation of higher prices of cotton—through a comparatively short crop, and consequently relatively higher rates for the productions here—may justify an anticipation of real demand, there is no immediate prospect of such a short supply of the raw material as to warrant the speculative mania which is becoming more and more rife in this market, totally changing and demoralising its previous character, deranging all ordinary calculations, and promising sooner or later to prove highly injurious to its best interests.

In the Liverpool Cotton Market prices have been rapidly forced up, and are now about 1¼d. per lb. on Brazil and Egyptian, 1⅛d. on Surat, and 1¼d. to 2d. on American higher than at the beginning of the month. The estimated stock is now 391,500 bales, being an increase of 100,000 bales during the month, but a decrease of 252,800 bales compared with this time last year, while the quantity at sea for Great Britain from America and India also contrasts unfavourably, being only 332,000 bales, against 466,000 bales twelve months ago. The increase in stock during the month has been largely assisted by a discovery of 30,900 bales of East India and China cotton in excess of previous estimates; this, on actual stock-taking of these qualities alone; and it is certainly a matter of regret that means have not been taken to verify the estimated stocks of other descriptions."

CASUALTIES.

The Caduceus, Irvine, from Manila, arrived at New York, March 8, with bulwarks stove and sails spilt; she had been detained 14 days off Hatteras by N.E. gales.

The Dordrecht, Verhoeven, from Brouwershaven to Batavia, was in collision, March 20, off Dungeness, with the Freeman Dennis, lost anchor and broke figure head, besides doing the latter vessel considerable damage, the Dordrecht was afterwards supplied with an anchor at Deal.

The Grecian Queen, which sailed from Shields Feb. 22, for Galle, put into Southampton March 23, with jibboom carried away, figure head slightly damaged, and cutwater started, having been in collision March 22 off the Isle of Wight.

The Arlington, Kennebroke, from Cardiff to Shanghai, was in contact March 21, with the Dove, of Falmouth, about 40 miles N.N.W. of the Longships; the latter vessel almost immediately sunk; three men drowned, master and boy landed at St. Ives.

Advices from Mauritius, dated Feb. 5, state that the Zeemanshoop, v. Monnom, from Batavia to Rotterdam, which put in there, Dec. 28, leaky, had sold 1,890 bags of coffee and 121 cases sugar, and sailed again, Feb. 13, for her destination.

Advices from Batavia, dated Feb. 12, state that the A. E. Vida, (barque), of Hamburg, from Foochow to England, with tea, had put in there, Jan. 24, leaky, and would have to discharge and repair.

The Silome, Davidson, from Shanghai, which arrived at New York Mar. 20, had experienced a severe cyclone from the E., N., and S.W. Dec. 4 to 6, in 11 S., 102 E., during which she laboured very heavily and shipped large quantities of water.

FIFTH REPORT,

Read at a GENERAL MEETING of SHAREHOLDERS, held at the BANKING HOUSE of the CORPORATION, HONG KONG, on FRIDAY, the 14th February, 1868; GEORGE J. HELLAND, Esq., in the Chair.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF THE HONG KONG AND SHANGHAI BANKING CORPORATION.

Gentlemen,—The Directors have now to submit to you the general statement of the Corporation's affairs and balance-sheet, for the half-year ending on 31st December last.

The net profit for that period, including 14,188 dols. 81c. brought forward from last account, after defraying all outgoing and current expenses, deducting interest paid and due, and making provision for bad debts, amounts to 392,659 dols. 21c., of which, after taking out rebate on bills not yet due, and writing off the whole of the outstanding amount of preliminary expenses, remuneration to Directors, &c., there remains for appropriation 362,276 dols. 60c.

From the latter sum the Directors recommend the distribution of a dividend of 7 dols. 50c. on the paid-up shares, and of 1 dol. 50c. on the new shares, being equivalent to six per cent. for the half-year, or twelve per cent. per annum; this will absorb 180,000 dols., and of the balance the directors popose carrying 125,000 dols. to the reserve fund, and 57,276 dols. 60c. to the credit of new profit and loss account.

If the foregoing appropriation of profits be confirmed by the Meeting, the amounts paid as dividend for the whole year 1867 will represent 360,000 dols., being equal to twelve per cent., and showing an increase of 80,000 dols. over the total dividend (280,000 dols.) distributed for the year 1866.

The amounts carried to the reserve fund for the period embraced under this yearly review will aggregate 200,000 dols. (compared to 141,700 dols. carried to same account in 1866), raising this fund to 375,000 dols. on 31st December, 1867, equal to 12½ per cent. on the paid-up capital of the Corporation, independently of the sum of 57,276 dols. 60c. undivided profits, carried forward on the above date as already mentioned—thus making up a total net profit for the year 1867 of 617,276 dols. 60c. (or 20·57 per cent. on paid up capital), after deducting charges, expenses, and allowances of every description, and without including the rebate on bills maturing after 31st December; comparing favourably with the corresponding result of the previous year, which amounted to only 457,604 dols. 44c.

The Directors congratulate their co-proprietors on the above favourable results, and have much satisfaction in pointing out the steady development of the Bank's resources, as shown by comparing the principal items of the balance-sheet with the accounts published at the same period of last year; for example—on the 31st December, 1866, the deposits and notes in circulation aggregated 4,132 651 dols. 94c. On the 31st December, 1867, they amount to 6,279,121 dols. 25c. As these figures speak for themselves, the Directors have little to add to satisfy the Shareholders regarding the growing credit and prosperity of the Corporation.

The latter half of the year 1867 has been characterised by dulness of trade, and by great stagnation in local banking business; the demand for money was considerably under what it had formerly been, which accounts for the great increase of the Bank's cash balance on 31st December last, as contrasted with the amount on hand on the same date last year, viz., 3,952,968 dols. 37c. against 1,944,515 dols. 90c. It is to be hoped that a revival of general business may soon take place, and that the increased requirements of trade may develop new sources of profit.

The Proprietors are aware that the other banks have now returned to the system of buying and selling six months' sight bills, which they had abandoned during the greater part of last year, and in thus returning to the old established usance they have virtually sanctioned the reasons which induced the Corporation to keep aloof from a combination as detrimental to the general interests of trade, as it has proved to be to the interest of those banks who had initiated and participated in the change. Far from regretting it, the Directors view with pleasure the resumption by all of a practice calculated to benefit the mercantile community at large, and they find in the position which the Corporation has acquired in the meantime with its constituents, and in the considerable extension which it has occasioned to its exchange business, an ample compensation for the cessation of the temporary advantages which the Bank derived throughout last year, from being the only large operator on the market for six months' sight paper.

UNCALLED CAPITAL.

The Proprietors will no doubt be glad to hear that it is not the intention of the Directors to make any call on the 20,000 shares of the second issue during the whole of the present year.

By the terms of Clause VII. of the Ordinance of Incorporation, the Government would have the power to insist upon the balance, now unpaid of the subscribed capital of the Bank, being called up on or before the 15th of December, 1869, but the Directors do not see the probability of the Bank requiring more capital than has already been paid up; they have in consequence applied to the proper quarters for a modification of the clause in question, with a view to obtain a considerable extension of the period above mentioned, and the Directors are in a position to state that his Excellency the Governor has kindly recommended the matter for the favourable consideration of the home authorities.

SHARES—LONDON REGISTER.

A Register for the transfer of shares has been opened at the London Office of the Bank, and in virtue of recent arrangements the shares of the Corporation are now negotiable on the London Stock Exchange.

RESERVE.

The Directors have decided upon investing the whole of the reserve fund in Government Securities, and, in addition thereto, an amount of £100,000 is to be converted into Indian Government paper, and appropriated to the general working of the Bank's Agencies at Bombay and Calcutta, as an available margin or deposit and means of credit, to facilitate operations in that direction, which are daily increasing in importance.

AGENCIES.

Special Agencies of the Corporation are in course of formation at Calcutta and Hankow, to be entrusted to the charge of two well tried officers of the Bank, under specific instructions emanating from the Head Office.

DIRECTORS.

Mr. George J. Helland has been appointed Chairman, and Mr. George F. Heard Deputy-Chairman of the Court of Directors, in consequence of the resignation of Messrs. Woldemar Nissen and Arthur Sassoon, on their departure from the Colony. Messrs. Thomas Sutherland and C. T. Smith having also, for the same reason, resigned their seats at the board, three of the vacancies have been filled by the election of Messrs. J. B. Taylor, Sol. D. Sassoon, and A. Joost.

According to the provisions of the Deed of Settlement, the term of office of two members of the Court, Messrs. W. H. Foster, Jun., and J. Menke, expires this day, but these gentlemen are eligible for re-election, and offer themselves accordingly.

AUDITORS.

The Directors have great pleasure in proposing the re-election of the present Auditors, the Hon. Phineas Ryrie and Mr. W. C. Hunter.

MANAGEMENT.

The Directors wish, in closing this Report, to record their entire satisfaction with the zeal and efficiency with which the Managers and all the subordinate officers of the Bank have discharged their duties during the year 1867.

The services of Mr. Victor Kresser, as Chief Manager, and of Mr. David McLean, as Manager of the Shanghai Branch, have been secured for a further period of three years, and the Directors take this opportunity of acknowledging that the eminent qualifications displayed by these two gentlemen, and their untiring exertions, have greatly contributed to the success of the Bank.

GEORGE J. HELLAND, Chairman.

PORT OF AMOY.

SHIPOWNERS, AGENTS, and COMMANDERS are informed that the Dock Company's establishments at the above port afford every facility for REPAIRING and SPARRING VESSELS, cleaning and painting iron ships, and repair and refit of STEAM MACHINERY AND BOILERS.

Their large Granite Dock is 307 feet in length, fitted with a caisson gate, and with a centrifugal steam pump of great power, ensuring despatch in all states of the tides. At average spring tides this dock can receive vessels drawing 16 to 17 feet, and during the autumn and winter months 18 feet. Their two smaller docks, also built of granite, can receive vessels drawing 12 to 13 feet.

The premises comprise a large smithy and boiler shop, carpenters and boat-builders' shops, an ENGINEERS' WORKSHOP, fitted with lathes and tools driven by steam, AN IRON FOUNDRY for castings up to 5 tons weight, and a BRASS FOUNDRY.

The different departments are superintended by experienced Europeans, viz., engineer, blacksmith, and shipwrights.

The Company keep on hand copper and metal sheathing, spars, timber, paints for iron vessels, and all material for dockyard use.

A DRY GODOWN for reception of stores of vessels requiring to discharge them.

Good quarters for officers of ships under repair in the dock.

Amoy, 16th December, 1867.

NOTICE TO SHIPOWNERS.

SINGAPORE DOCKS.

THE PATENT SLIP AND DOCK COMPANY execute, in the most efficient manner, SHIPS' REPAIRS of all descriptions, under the supervision of European Shipwrights and Engineers.

The DRY DOCK (opened in March, 1859) admits two Vessels at the same time, being over 400 feet in length with a depth of water ranging to 15½ feet.

Another Dry Dock of larger dimensions, adjoining the above, will shortly be completed, and available for the heaviest Steamers.

There is on the same premises extensive Wharf, with substantial Warehouse and other accommodation, comprising every convenience for coaling Steamers, discharging and storing Goods, together with ample Machinery and appliances for repairing Iron Steamers &c.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Bilious complaints and irregularities of the system, produced by depraved or over-abundant bile, can always be corrected by a few doses of these inestimable Pills, which are everywhere admired for their rare combination of mildness and power; for, though they conquer with ease and rapidity the most obstinate disease, they never weaken the stomach or necessitate any interruption of ordinary duties or amusements. On the contrary, they increase the appetite, strengthen the organs of digestion, give increased energy and life to all the animal functions, and fit both hand and brain for fresh exertions. The sick and enfeebled can easily discover what a happy revolution these Pills have the power to effect in the human system.

Summary of News from the Far East.

JAPAN.

THE NEW PORTS.

By this mail we have news from Osaka and Hiogo to the 13th February. Everything was perfectly quiet, and the natives were fast returning to their houses and recommencing business. The conclusion of the struggle was the formal resumption of power by the Mikado. On the 8th February an envoy from his Imperial Majesty the Mikado was received by the foreign Ministers, and announced to them that a new system of government had been established, by which the office of Shiogoon was abolished. The Mikado himself henceforth takes direct and entire charge of the Empire. Satsuma and Chiosiu have been ordered to take charge of the foreign settlements, and the strictest orders have been given to avoid any collision with us.

New Custom-house officers will be appointed in the course of a few days at Hiogo, and the Ministers have been invited to return to Osaka. The quarrel with Bizen has been happily adjusted by an apology, the Japanese ships seized have been given up, and the foreign force landed has returned on board our men-of-war. It is fully expected that trade will shortly revive.

Besides this, which is authenticated by proclamation, it is stated on good authority that the Mikado's officers will shortly take charge of the Custom-house and town of Yokohama. Whether Stotsbashi's party can resist these radical measures of change remains to be seen.

The foreign Ministers have been invited to go to Kioto, and it was believed that they would proceed thither in a few days to settle the details of the new treaty.

Detachments of troops were being made to operate against the scattered possessions of the Tokokawa family in the south. It was also expected that Stotsbashi would be immediately proclaimed an outlaw and rebel, a proclamation which the foreign Ministers will be asked to accept.

YEDO.

Our latest news from Yedo amounts to nothing more of any consequence than we have already published. Since his arrival there the ex-Shiogoon has remained shut up in the women's quarters of the castle, strongly guarded, and every possible precaution is being taken against a sudden attack or fire; the city's defences being strengthened, and numerous ward gates which had been destroyed being restored. Stotsbashi is despatching foreign steamers to various points on the coast to pick up such portions of his scattered troops as can find their way to the appointed rendezvous, and is concentrating all his force in Yedo alone. He appears determined to make a stand, and it is reported that he will immediately invite the foreign Ministers to return to this part of the country.

The prospects for the spring are therefore certainly warlike, and consequently detrimental to trade.

YOKOHAMA.

The French mail delivered this morning brings no later news than that received on the 6th instant, but by it we have some local papers giving fuller details of the recent events. The outward mail of Dec. 10 arrived on the 8th February, but her news had been anticipated by the arrival on the previous day of the P.M.S.S. China, with cable telegrams from London to the 13th December. The following is from the Japan Times:—

There appears to be little doubt that the burning of the Ninomaru at Yedo was the first burst of the flame of civil war. We have every reason to believe now that this was done by a band of Satsuma's men, to effect the rescue of the sister of their chief, as we described the affair in our last. The destruction of Satsuma's palaces was the immediate result, and the Government story of their occupation by a horde of masterless banditti was a "story" in the school-girl's sense of the word. The escape of a part of the Satsuma men and the naval duel which followed we have already recorded. The next move here was the burning of Kanagawa. This occured on the 31st January, and is attributed to accident by the Yedo authorities. Our information leads us to a different conclusions. Strangers had been in the place all the morning, whose account of themselves was singularly deficient in detail, though there appeared no sufficient reason for putting them under arrest. Meanwhile the wind got up, and about two P.M. had increased to a stiff breeze. Suddenly flames were seen from our side of the water to burst out almost simultaneously in four places at once—the last outbreak being to windward of the others. The long single street between a bluff and the seashore, which compose the town of Kanagawa, was in a blaze in an incredibly short space of time, and steadily the fire crept on along the numerous villages which line the Tokaido on the way to Yedo, until fully three miles of houses were burning. An avenue of trees, where Mr. Richardson met his death in 1862, and a space of open ground fortunately made a gap in the long line of dwellings, else the fire would have swept away everything along the road until stopped by the river Logo, six miles farther on.

The spectacle, as seen from our side of the bay, was grand in the extreme. In seven hours about fourteen hundred houses had been destroyed, extending along nearly three miles of road. The distress of the population thus suddenly in a black frost turned out into the bare fields will be imagined as something horrible, and the fact that no one was found frozen dead the next day will be matter of surprise to those who do not know the Japanese. Used to being burned out periodically, they have discovered that an efficient tente d'abri can be formed by setting up a pair of shutters edge to edge over a mat, with another to the windward end of the structure. Under such shelter, hardy people like these can pass a night or two without much inconvenience. One remarkable feature in the desolate picture, which could not fail to strike the most careless observer, as he rode over the mounds of calcined tiles and gray wood ashes, was the way in which the Japanese godowns had stood. With the exception of three or four at most, out of more than a hundred and sixty, these admirable little mud-built storehouses were uninjured by the fire. In them a great amount of property must have been preserved.

On the day following the fire, a few charitable gentlemen got up a subscription in Yokohama for relieving the sufferers, and in a few hours some $2,000 were collected, which were most judiciously expended in blankets and rice and this timely help was very thankfully received. In the present state of political affairs it is unlikely that the town will be rebuilt for some time.

Meanwhile, at Osaka, events of far more importance were in progress. A short campaign of a week had completely destroyed the prestige of Stotsbashi. He risked an attack upon Kioto, which commenced on the 27th ult., was beaten, after three days' hard fighting, outgeneralled, outflanked, and compelled to make a hasty and, as the result has proved, a most disastrous flight. He left the castle of Osaka during the night of the 31st and got on board a foreign man-of-war, thence to his own ship the Kayo-maru, and ultimately reached Yedo on the 4th of February. The foreign Ministers and residents left Osaka and retired to Kobe, and for some hours the place was in the hands of an uncontrolled mob. The Southern Daimios' troops, however, marched in and restored order, not, however, before the castle had been burnt and some considerable damage done in other quarters of the town. The ex-Shiogoon having thus abandoned his post and his Governor of Hiogo and the very Custom-house officers from Kobe having arrived here as refugees, it was evident that so far as the new ports and the foreign settlers were concerned, no Japanese Government existed to treat with. Our latest intelligence at the moment of writing is that his Imperial Majesty has offered to accept the treaties of 1868, made with the Shiogoon as if made with himself, that, nomine mutato, he will observe their conditions and all the subsequent conventions, tariffs, and arrangements, that the foreign Ministers had accepted the proposals, that the Mikado's officers were consequently on the point of taking charge of the foreign settlements at Osaka and Kobé, and that Nagasaki had also been taken possession of without much trouble in his name. The question of the day unsolved is—"Will 'Stotsboshi resist the Mikado's officers when they appear here to do as they have done in the south?" The French Minister is in Yedo, and his colleagues are all at Osaka; we are paying duties in Yokohama to Stotsbashi, in Kobé to the Mikado. Which of our allies are we to maintain against the other? We doubt the southern Daimios venturing to follow up their successes by attacking their foe on his own ground, and Stotsbashi is certainly not yet prepared for an attempt to recover his lost position, nor to accept that of a rebel against the Mikado. It is fortunate for us, at all events, that both sides are friendly to foreigners, anxious to conciliate, fearful to offend, willing to trade.

In our last we announced the formation of a new Government by the Mikado, from which Stotsbashi, our quondam ally, was altogether excluded—the office of Shiogoon being, in fact, abolished. It is possible that this information has been received at home with the same incredulity as discredited our announcement of the abdication of Stotsbashi. The result proves, however, that we have again been able to tell the foreign representatives and the public something more than our "ally" of Yedo had thought fit to make "officially" known. Official information, by the way, has led the Home Government into one pretty particular mess. The reception royal with honours, at Windsor, Malta and elsewhere of Stotsbashi's little brother whose relative rank, even when Stotsbashi was Shiogoon, was never higher than that of a cadet of the house of Buccleugh or Somerset, is a ludicrous mistake at which all the East is laughing. Now, Stotsbashi having abdicated the Shiogoonate, being excluded from the new Government, and shortly, perhaps to be reduced to his original position of a landless noble, without following or means, Mimbutaiyu's position becomes very unpleasant. They cannot well call him an impostor because the royal honours on false pretences which he received were thrust upon him: it is of very little use his coming home—what is he to do? Perhaps Her Majesty will give him a clerkship in the Foreign-office, or send him to the London University.

The health of the settlement is good. The weather has been rather severe, some snow having fallen.

NAGASAKI.

Nagasaki has been delivered up by the late Shiogoon, at the order of the Mikado, to Chosiu, Satsuma, and Owari.

On the 6th February H.B.M.S. Serpent arrived from Hiogo with the intelligence that hostilities had actually commenced between the Satsuma men and Government troops, and that foreign Ministers and Consuls at Osaka had evacuated the place and sought refuge on board ship at Hiogo. On the strength of this information and in view of danger that might arise to life and property here, the Consuls of all the Treaty Powers and the commanders of H.B.M. ships Icarus and Serpent held a meeting and arranged a code of signals and appointed a place of rendezvous to be used in case of emergency. On the following day the English Consul received information from a reliable source, to the effect that eighty ronins had entered the native town and intended burning the Governor's house and Government godowns, after which they might probably make a raid into the foreign settlement. The commanders of the men-of-war were communicated with, and a force of 160 men landed from the Shenandoah, Icarus, and Serpent and occupied an open space of ground between the native town and foreign settlement. A fight took place at the Governor's house between Satsuma, Geshiu and Tosa men and the soldiers on guard. The latter were soon dispersed, and the Governor with most of his attendants, their wives and families, and all Yedo officials withdrew and placed the care of Nagasaki in the hands of Hizen and Chikuzen for the time being. Tosa's flag is now floating over the Government-house. The Custom-house is still open, and appears to be under the sole charge of a few Nagasaki officials; 300 of Satsuma's men are on their way to take charge of the place and maintain order if possible. Danger to the foreign community, with the precautions adopted, there is none, whichever side wins. The results to be dreaded and provided against are fire and murderous attacks on individuals promenading the streets of the town.

The most extensive fire which has taken place here for many years broke out in the native town at 2 A.M., on the morning of the 3rd of February, and raged with extraordinary violence until 10 A.M. Houses (and merchandise of considerable value), chiefly occupied and owned by officers and the better class of merchants, have been destroyed. About two acres of ground were swept of everything, with the exception of a few fireproof godowns, some of which, even after the fire was subdued, burst into flames, in consequence of the great heat to which they had been previously subjected. One or two lives were lost, and a few accidents occurred. The wind was fortunately light. Had it blown stronger Decima would have stood in great danger.

CHINA.

SHANGHAI.

From this port we have advices to the 24th February (four days later), but no news of any importance.

The Supreme Court and Consular Gazette states that the news with regard to the interior of China is of a more peaceful nature than that hitherto to hand; a gentleman who has just arrived from Tientsin, from which place he made the journey overland to Chinkiang, reports that, according to native information, the province of Shantung is at present free from the Nienfei; and that Li-Hung-Chang is said to be at Cheening-cho, in Shantung, where he has from 150,000 to 200,000 troops. He has also seven Europeans with him, and Dr. Macartney has lately visited him, and will be returned to Nanking about a week hence. The Nienfei are reported to be at Kaichow in Chili, and are stated to have passed through the province of Shantung, without inflicting much cruelty on the inhabitants, though they destroyed a few houses and beheaded a small number of each village. A number of native militia who had been stationed in the capital of Shantung were returning to their homes, their services being no longer required. This last circumstance looks as though further troubles were not immediately expected; but we hear that the condition of people is miserable in the extreme.

At Hankow an important meeting of Consuls had taken place with reference to the failure of the Customs' Bank, by which foreign (chiefly British) merchants lose upwards of $400,000. It has not resulted in anything, as the Taoutai has simply refused to take any steps in the matter. It is surmised by one of the local papers that the failure has been a planned thing in retaliation for the losses suffered by the Chinese through the failure of Mackeller and Co.

The following items are from the Shanghai News Letter, an organ of American opinion, published monthly for transmission to America by the Pacific mail steamers:—

The British naval authorities have finally taken possession of their new purchase, the Shanghai Wharf Company's property at Pootung (opposite the lower limits of Honque), and the Acorn, hospital ship for the men-of-war, was moved down there, from her old position off the Bund, on the 12th Feb. The property now owned by the British Crown comprises two splendid wharves with several hundred feet of water frontage, also large godowns and a long range of buildings suitable for naval purposes, all cut off from Chinese grounds by a substantial corrugated iron fence. The price paid for the whole property was but taels 25,000! Nothing has yet been done by the United States Government towards securing a naval station in the East; the purchase of lands for that purpose at Woosung, as suggested by certain journals in America, might be consummated but only at a great outlay, and far beyond the above figures to make the position tenable. By the last European mail it was intimated that Prussia may become the owner of Formosa Island by purchase! As France and England have already secured a foothold in this quarter, such an intimation as the Prussian Government may choose to make towards occupying Formosa cannot at present be gainsayed by any European Power, or refused by the Imperial Government of China; therefore it remains for the U. S. Government to determine upon their course of policy in the East, whether, after planting the American flag in Alaska and on the West India Islands, they will give American commerce and interests in China the benefit of its presence on one of the islands in the China seas, a consummation devoutly to be wished, and of paramount importance; or will the golden opportunity be allowed to pass, and to other and less influential Powers of the world be given the enviable means, if so inclined, of checking or thwarting the course of American trade across the Pacific?

It is reported that there will be no P.M. steamer leaving San Francisco in February, much to the disappointment of those who were depending on the Colorado for the next coming boat. The Japan, it appears, had not at last advices left New York, and as her departure has been unavoidably postponed, she is likely to come out via Cape Horn and San Francisco, instead of as contemplated, via Cape of Good Hope and the Indian ports. The P. M. S. S. Company are therefore unable to carry out their monthly engagements as expected, and the next outgoing steamer for San Francisco will not probably leave here with the mails before the middle of April; the next boat over being the Great Republic, to leave San Francisco the 6th March. Thus it will be seen that for the second time since October last we shall be unable to issue our paper as contemplated—i.e., regularly once a month. It is not, however, for this reason that we allude to the subject, but we would beg to intimate that these irregularities are real grievances, not only to the travelling public, who do not like to have their well-laid plans marred in this manner, but to the business community generally, who cannot give that confidence and support to a line that promises what it cannot perform.

The following is the personnel of the Mission from China to the treaty Powers, which starts by the Pacific Mail steamer for San Francisco:—His Excellency the Hon. Anson Burlinghame, High Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary; J. McL. Brown, Esq., First Secretary of Legation; M. de Champs, Second Secretary of Legation; their Excellencies Chih Ta-jen and Sun Ta-jen, High Ministers of the second rank, attached to the Mission to learn and qualify themselves in the modes of diplomatic intercourse, and to assist Mr. Burlinghame in his communications with the Chinese Government; six student interpreters, two of whom have studied and speak English with considerable facility, two have studied French, and two Russian; two writers, a native doctor, and about fifteen servants.

Advices from Tientsin, dated February 2, state:—"The Peiho river at Taku is now quite open, a strong easterly gale having broken up the ice. The winter has been mild, with indications of an early resumption of business. Much snow has fallen, which is considered good for the coming crops. American Drills are at 4.8 taels nominal. Jeans, 4.2 taels; 8.4 Grey Shirtings, 2.7.5 taels; 8.4 lb. T-Cloths 2.4.5 taels."

HONG KONG.

The Messageries Imperiales steamer having been delayed by the non-arrival of the boat from Shanghai, brings news to March 1, three days later. There is no local news of interest, and the Hong Kong papers are entirely filled with intelligence from Japan, the Hong Kong races, and police reports.

The China Mail of Feb. 29 says:—"We understand that the new hotel was opened to-day, and that his Excellency and Lady MacDonnell graced the inaugurative tiffin with their presence. The company was a numerous one, and included many ladies. Speeches were made, his Excellency's being singularly remarkable, we are informed, for wit, good taste, and humour, as might have been expected on such an interesting occasion."

Referring to the instructions received from home regarding the revenue arising from the "gambling ordinance," the Mail says:—"No attempt has been made to punish open gambling, unless it happened to be unlicensed, and in such cases, when proved, delinquents have been fined 100 dols.; so that the Governor derived a double revenue from gambling—from its unlicensed as well as its licensed practice. The Duke of Buckingham has prohibited his Excellency from using any of the money thus derived for any imperial or colonial purpose, and thus declares his perfect concurrence in the views of those persons who in Hong Kong protested against the disgrace his Excellency has inflicted upon this colony." The Daily Press, on the other hand, says:—"All the money which has been coming in month after month from the gambling-houses has been locked up and made no use of; and even now, when we want all manner of things—a new Praya amongst the number—we are told to look on this money as unavailable. Wherefore, in the name of common sense, is it to be tabooed? Is it that a dollar coming from a gambling-house is polluted so as to carry a sort of moral infection, which would pollute stones of a sea wall for which it paid, and have a tendency to soften the mortar? Surely in that case a banker could be found sufficiently indifferent to sentimental finance to change the dollars for others for a trifling consideration per cent. If the infected dollars are left in the Treasury, moreover, will they not communicate their mysterious and subtle disease to the subsidiary coins which may be there? . . . There are two alternatives to choose from in connection with that $130,000. If it has been wrongfully accepted from the gambling-house keepers (whose pecuniary welfare the missionaries and the Duke seem so anxious to promote), it ought to be given back to them. We should like very much to see the people in favour of that course after the results have so abundantly justified the existing policy as a measure of police. If it ought not to be given back to them, it ought, of course, to be applied to some useful public purpose."

We learn from Canton that the execution of the coolie Poon

Ashang, who murdered his master, Sheik Ahmed, on the 29th December last, took place opposite the residence of his victim on the afternoon of the 27th February. The Poon-yu Magistrate, and Mr. Mayers, H.M.'s Vice-Consul, superintended the execution, and a large number of the Canton residents witnessed the dread ceremony.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

SINGAPORE.

We have advices from this port to March 7th, three days later. The following items of news are from the Singapore Daily Times:—

We have been informed that a respite has been granted by his Excellency the Governor to the condemned leaders of the Toh-Peh-Kong Society—pending a report from the Recorder of Penang, Sir W. Hackett, as to the nature of the evidence and the justice and propriety of the sentence (which, from the verdict of the jury, he had no other alternative but to pass) being carried into effect. We are given to understand that if they are not executed the only other alternative is to transport them for life. It seems that they are all British subjects, and that therefore they cannot be deported.

A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce has been held to consider the new contract for mails between this port and Calcutta entered into by the Indian Government with the British India Steam Navigation Company. The old contract expired in September last, but has been continued provisionally to date. The subsidy paid under it by the Indian Government was Rs. 7,500 per mensem. Of this the Straits Government was debited with Rs. 1,000 per month. But the debit was nominal almost, for if the Straits revenue could not pay this Rs. 1,000 the Indian Government did. Now we are on a different footing. We have started in business ourselves and must pay our own way. Some correspondence has passed between this and the Indian Government on the subject. It appears that the terms of the contract have been settled by the latter, and that no alterations can now be made; for to a suggestion of the Straits Government that the duration of the contract should not extend over three years, the reply is that it came too late. The matter, therefore, appears to be settled, and it is a mere matter of form to ask the opinion of the Straits community. Nevertheless, the Chamber resolved to repeat its objection to a five years' contract, and to press the importance of there being no change of steamer between this and Calcutta. There is not much difference between the old and new contract, but the latter gives some advantages to the public which we may briefly enumerate.

The Governor-General has power to make the line to Singapore leave Calcutta every fourth week instead of once a month as heretofore. The rate of speed required has been raised from seven to seven-and-a-half miles per hour. The steamers will reach Singapore about the 7th and sail on return voyage about the 11th of each month. The lines between Calcutta and Akyab, and between Calcutta and Maulmain, &c., are all fixed for starting on certain days of the week now, instead of on fixed days of the month. In the copy of the contract which we have seen, the schedule of rates of passage money and freight are excessive, but we have been informed that they have reference only to the Government of India, and, as a matter of fact, are much less in practice in the Straits. The new contract ends on 31st December, 1872, and has therefore now four-and-three-quarter years to run.

The latest Singapore grievance is the want of a band. The Daily Times says:—Why has Singapore not got a band? It is perfectly intolerable to think of. What is the good of our Esplanade without a band to play upon it? The band-stand on it is a mockery and a delusion. We are paying £60,000 a year for military, while Hong Kong pays only £20,000. They have a band while we have not. As we are victimised to such an alarming extent, let us at least try and get some amusement if nothing else for our money. Let us insist on the august Secretary of State for the Colonies sending us out a full band with big drum and everything complete. This is not much to ask for after giving away such a pot of hard dollars. We hear some talk of the Strait Settlements being saddled with the endowment of a bishopric. We can do without a harmless old gentleman in silk stockings, apron, and shovel-hat very well yet-a-while. Moreover, we do not think that Singaporeans are particularly ritualistic, and they might get such another bishop as Bishop Milman in Calcutta, to breed division among the faithful, with his waving censers, embroidered altar-clothes, reredoses (whatever they may be), and the other absurd mummeries and ridiculous tomfooleries characteristic of High Churchism. But we cannot do much longer without a decent band. When Government-house is finished (and it is making rapid progress), where is the music to come from for the public opening ball? It will never do to be content with the Malacca fiddlers, who do very well for clubs and private parties, but will be utterly undignified, incongruous, and out of place in the stately marble halls of Government-house."

MESSRS. MACKELLAR, GORDON AND CO.'S BANKRUPTCY.

We are glad, to see from a report which has reached us of proceedings in the Hankow Bankruptcy Court, re Mackellar, Gordon and Co., that Mr. Mackellar has received his discharge. It is quite clear that Mr. Mackellar was in no way responsible for the reckless trading of the firm in which he was a partner, and therefore he is justly exempt from the penalty attached to the fault. The creditors' assignees, sharing this impression, made no opposition to his application for discharge, which was granted unconditionally. We take this opportunity of correcting an error in our report of some proceedings in this case, that appeared in the London and China Telegraph of the 27th Nov. last. The error consisted in an extract from Mr. Gordon's defence being, by accident, wrongly headed "Extract from Mr. Mackellar's defence." Our attention having been drawn to this mistake, we gladly make the only amende in our power; it is not likely, however, to have been injurious to Mr. Mackellar, as it is well known that he was not in China at the time the defence was made, or in fact during any of the bankruptcy proceedings; and further, that the acts therein defended were in all respects contrary to the principles on which he himself had laid down before leaving Hankow, and to the injunctions subsequently transmitted to his partner.

COMMERCIAL POSTSCRIPT.

At the meeting of the Agra Bank held yesterday (Mr. James Thompson in the chair), the report of the directors, noticed at some length in our last issue, was adopted, after some discussion and certain points to which objections were offered had been satisfactorily explained by the chairman. At a meeting of the Agra and Masterman's Bank, held subsequently, a resolution was agreed to taking the liquidation out of the hands of Mr. Cannan and placing it in those of the shareholders' committee, and offering Mr. Cannan £5,000 for his personal services, apart from costs out of pocket.

The bar silver by the West India steamer has been sold at 5s. 0⅝d. per ounce, showing a rise of ⅛d. compared with the price current during the last few days. The advance has been chiefly caused by the recent important rise in cotton. The Mexican dollars by the same packet have been disposed of for refining purposes at 4s. 11⅛d., being likewise ⅛d. better.

Shares.—A comparatively small business has been done during the fortnight in stocks, and the market has remained rather quiet. Old Bank have steadily improved, and must eventually go still higher. A good demand exists at quotation, but there are no sellers. Of new about 350 have been settled at about 1 per cent. premium, and there is another small lot on offer at the same rate. There is every probability of the rates advancing. Hong Kong and Whampoa Dock are in no demand, and there are several sellers on the market. The market for those has a downward tendency. Nothing has been doing in Hotel, but the opening of the building in a few days will doubtless give some impetus to the present price, at which there are buyers. There are several sellers of Union Dock at quotations, and large buyers of steamboat at 9 to 10 per cent. discount. Several small sales have been effected as high as 8 per cent. discount. There have been small sales of China Traders at $115 prem.

THE DUKE OF SAINT ALBANS ON THE SUEZ CANAL.

As briefly noticed in our last issue, the Duke of St. Albans has been to see the Suez Canal, and is so delighted with what he saw that he occupies an entire column of The Times in giving expression to his feelings. "I came," he says, "a sceptic, and leave a true believer in the completion within a short time of the canal across the Isthmus of Suez. The kindness and courtesy we everywhere experienced were such as I shall always remember with pleasure, and I heard on every hand expressed the gratification all felt in showing English people the progress they were making." At the Suez end of the canal everything seemed activity. "I saw," the Duke writes, "four large floating steam dredges at work, clearing a channel through the shallows of the Red Sea, and others being put together. I saw the Arabs busy on the other side of an embankment which divided the sea from the works, furrowing out the course of the canal. I had seen this part three months before, and the progress had been considerable. I saw the course of the canal beyond this marked by the enormous dredges standing above the mirage and the desert. There are sixty large and twelve small steam floating dredges, with more than a hundred attendant steam barges in work. The larger ones cost from £15,000 to £20,000, which may give you some idea of their size. They discharge their buckets of sand into the steam barges or into iron aquaducts 220 feet in length, which pass their contents over the banks of the canal on to the desert beyond. Forty-eight millions of cubic feet were thus displaced last month, and sixty millions, it is thought, will be done per month in the summer days. The last mentioned machines are an invention peculiar to these works, and are due to M. Lavalley, who may be called the maker, as M. Lesseps is the originator, of the Suez Canal. The great difficulty has been found after the water rises before the dredges can be floated. As the salt water canal is not filled between Suez and Ishmalia, passengers and cargo are forwarded thence on the fresh water canal in steam launches and barges. This canal is of ordinary size, and will allow two large barges to pass each other, but I wish to speak only of the great salt water canal. The first point of interest after leaving Suez is at Great Shalouf. This is the most important cutting next to El Guisr. It is four miles in length, through clay, stone, and sand, and is dry at present. Three thousand European and Arab workmen are kept here. I was more struck here than anywhere else on the works. The canal is cut to its extreme depth, and the water will stand twenty-six feet deep at low water in the Red Sea. You look down into this enormous dry channel, with its busy hive of workmen scooping away the ground and filling the trucks, which stationary engines draw up and replace by others; and while looking down on this magnificent work you almost persuade yourself to believe in large steamers passing to and fro here between the West and East, in the offers of the company being filled with their dues, and in delighted shareholders drawing large dividends." The Duke remarks that "the Frenchman knows how to brush the Turk's coat the right way." Possibly he knows how to do the same for English travellers.

THE Pall Mall Gazette commends to the consideration of English engineers the accuracy of the estimates made by their foreign brethren of the cost of driving the tunnel under Mont Cenis. The total length of the tunnel will be 12,220 metres, of which 8,409 metres have been completed at a cost of 33,699,973 francs, the original estimate for the whole work having been 70,000,000 francs.

THE BRINDISI ROUTE.

The following is abbreviated from the Florence correspondent of The Times :—

Signor Gaetano Semenza, an active and vigilant member of the Italian Lower House, lately published a letter on the interesting topic of the passage of the Eastern mails through Italy. The inspection of the provisional railway from Susa to St. Michel will be made soon after the middle of April, and that the line will be opened to the public a few days later. That opening has been so repeatedly announced as near at hand, and such long intervals have afterwards elapsed during which nothing was heard of the matter, that persons who have not actually been upon the Cenis and seen the rails may well be excused for treating the whole undertaking as fabulous, and looking upon Mr. Fell as the Mrs. Harris of railway constructors. Every day that passes tends to weaken the faith in the opening of a line which the completion of the great tunnel seems destined completely to ruin. It is confidently announced that in 1872 the passage through the mountain and the connecting links of railroad at each end will be completed. This allows but a brief existence to the Summit Rail, which I have lately repeatedly heard spoken of as still-born and a total failure. I think I mentioned in a former letter that early in the month of December the line and the covered ways were declared ready, but when the carriages —built in Paris—came to be tested some parts of the engines proved themselves unequal to the work they were destined to perform, and it was found necessary to replace them with other pieces of greater strength. I have been informed on respectable authority that a condition imposed upon the company by the French Government was that the rolling stock should be manufactured in France. If this be true, it is doubly unlucky that the engines should have proved a failure, because ill-natured people may be apt to smell a job, and to bear in mind the systematic unwillingness shown by the French Post-office authorities to accelerate the communications between England and Italy—as evinced by (among other things) the continued unnecessary fourteen hours' detention in Paris of letters from the latter to the former country.

M. Semenza's letter is in three chapters, the first showing the saving of time by despatching the Indian mail by Susa and Brindisi instead of by the present route; the second points out the measures it is urgent the Italian Government should adopt in order to induce such a change; and the third exposes the advantages to be derived from it by Italy and other countries. The writer refers to what was said in the House of Lords by the Duke of Montrose last year, and by Mr. Hunt in the House of Commons with respect to our Government's intention to adopt the Brindisi line at a future day, and to its having inserted a clause in its contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company providing for such a change. It was then urged that for 500 miles the railway was a single line, which rendered it, said the Duke of Montrose, "impossible to manage a large traffic with anything like regularity and punctuality." M. Semenza says the line is well organised, and compares journeys made in December last by that route and by way of Marseilles. M. Semenza sets down the voyage between Brindisi and Alexandria at seventy hours. Persons who have lately performed it assure me that this is quite a minimum time. One gentleman was eighty-two hours going, and on his return, when there was only one other passenger on board besides himself, he was five days, because the boat was put under half-steam, probably to economise coal. Of course this sort of thing would not occur with the Indian mail, but the company should remember that it has its reputation to make and an old-established line of good boats to compete with. It is probable the Peninsular and Oriental would do the work regularly in seventy hours or less. There is no doubt that by Brindisi is the natural route, and that considerable saving of time might be made. It seems certain that three days might be gained by taking the Brindisi route, when once the service is properly organised, and without waiting for the opening of Fell's railway or of the tunnel. The present speed on the Italian line is, according to M. Semenza, 40 kilometres, or about 25 English miles an hour. This might be increased. As now organised, the line does not seem to give satisfaction to English travellers adopting it as their route to Egypt or India. The objections urged are various, but apparently the service is by no means first rate. M. Semenza is convinced that travellers, letters, samples, and merchandise must soon adopt the route that promises them considerable gain of time and a great diminution of sea passage. He demonstrates plainly enough that Brindisi is the most advantageous point of embarkation for Egypt, and of that there can be no doubt; but the question is one of organisation. The passage of the Indian mail through France is excellently organised; the traffic has got into that groove, and will hardly leave it until convinced that the new line is equally punctual and trustworthy. At Brindisi there is much to be done to render the port commodious and desirable. M. Semenza seems impressed with the injudicious rigour of Italian Custom-house officials. At the present time, he says, even ladies' boxes are minutely examined. A glaring case of unjustifiable delay occasioned to an English officer going to India by the particularly obtuse Custom-house officials at Susa was mentioned in The Times a few months ago, and representations on the subject were made in official quarters here. Not by such impediments and annoyances is the stream of Indian traffic likely to be diverted from France to Italy. Governments may be slow to decide on such changes, because their responsibility is great, but if once the public has reason to believe Brindisi a better route than Marseilles, it is sure to take it, and the mails are equally sure soon to follow the lead.

Want of hotel accommodation at Brindisi was urged by the Duke of Montrose last autumn as one reason against going that way. At Brindisi there is one hotel which recent travellers thence state to be tolerably capacious, although of small merit in other respects; but as it possesses a cruet-stand, and provides its guests with English mustard, it probably considers itself all that is required as a halfway house. M. Semenza suggests that the Southern Railway Company should, in its own interest, establish a large and commodious inn at Brindisi. Most assuredly it ought, if it knew its own interests. "We Italians," says M. Semenza, "so long persecuted by foreigners, have become accustomed continually to complain, and to trust less in ourselves than in Providence and in the advice and assistance of more advanced nations." If the Americans, who now swarm in Italy to an extent almost unprecedented, could but inoculate the Italians with their practical go-ahead spirit, what a country this might become within a very few years!

From a leading article in The Times on the same subject, we extract the following :—

The letter of our Florence Correspondent calls our atttention to the important subject of the transmission of the Overland Mail to India over the Susa-Brindisi line across Italy. We have often pointed out the advantages which this line possesses over the present French route by Marseilles, amounting, to sum them up in a few words, to the substitution of a short land journey instead of a long sea voyage. "Praise the sea and keep to to the land" has become an economical no less than a prudential rule, and wherever the choice is possible communication by water is invariably avoided, except when it answers the purposes either of the conveyance of heavy merchandise or of a pleasure trip. Now, the Overland Mail, on its way from London to Alexandria, must needs perform both a land and a sea journey. So long as the best means of locomotion by land was the diligence, the narrowest strip of the Continent and the broadest expanse of the Mediterranean offered the best route; but since the locomotive has attained at least twice the speed of the steamer, the position is reversed. All our object should be the longest land journey and the shortest sea passage, and a glance at the route, along that part in which a free choice is left to us, say from Macon forward, will satisfy us that a line which from that place strikes across the Alps and follows the course of the Italian Peninsula from Susa to Brindisi is much shorter than the one which from Macon and Marseilles must either go round the Islands of Sardinia and Sicily, or else run the hazards of a troublesome navigation across the Straits; also, that the former route takes us by land over at least three-fourths of the distance which the latter must achieve by water. The Mediterranean is like a great ditch, of which more than one half is bridged over by Italy, and the Peninsula lies, besides, in that north-easterly direction which seems to have been best intended for the convenience of the Overland Mail.

The obstacles which have hitherto been in the way of this rather necessary than desirable improvement lie—first, in the sluggishness and incapacity of the Italian Government; then in the jealous selfishness of the French railway companies; finally, in the apathy and supineness of our own postal authorities. The Italians have not yet provided a line of first-rate steamers between Alexandria and Brindisi. They have not set the latter port in the best order. Their railway service leaves much to desire. Finally, they actually disgust and frighten away travellers by the delays and vexations of their custom-houses, and the dirt and discomfort of their inns and stations. The French, for their own part, endeavour to befriend their own Marseilles line by the unconscionable detention of fourteen hours in Paris of the English mails on their way to Italy. We need not point out how easily the French difficulty ought to be overcome by a little pressure of diplomatic remonstrance. It is not for such a nation as France to "stop the way;" nor can we believe that the Government of the Emperor Napoleon, if properly appealed to, would insist upon a policy at variance with all the usages of civilised nations. So far as Italy is concerned, all is reduced to a mere question of demand and supply. It is all an affair of capital; and if the Italians are too poor or too slothful to do the work for themselves, we feel confident the speculation would turn out a paying one, even of it were necessary to buy the whole line, with steamers, railways, and houses of accommodation, off Italian hands. As to the annoyances to the Custom-houses, the difficulty, like that of the French post-office, admits of diplomatic treatment.

Of what importance Italy must needs become as the common highway of Europe to the East we are reminded by the fact that travellers from all parts of Germany, from Belgium, from Holland, and Scandinavia will be under as great a necessity to avail themselves of it as those coming from the North of France or from England. A drawback still existing against the conveyance of the Overland Mail across Italy is found in the break still occurring in the railway communication at the Mont Cenis Pass between St. Michel de Maurienne and Susa. The great Alpine tunnel will not be ready till 1872, and long delay has damped our hopes in the eventual success of Mr. Fell's Summit railway. We have, however, both our correspondent's evidence and Captain Tyler's authority establishing the fact that the interruption of communication across the Alps arising from wintry inclemencies never extends beyond twenty-four hours, and that happens in extremely rare occurrences. Such a loss of time, even when it becomes inevitable, is but a trifle to set against the three or four days' gain that the Brindisi route, even its present most imperfect state, already gives us over the rival line of Marseilles. The English Government, as our readers are aware, when it signed a contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company for the conveyance of the overland mail, reserved the right of changing the route from Marseilles to Brindisi any time that such a change should be deemed practicable and advisable. We have written to little purpose if we have not proved that the contemplated contingency depends in a great measure on the goodwill and activity of the Government itself.

Naval and Military.

The Meanee, 60 guns, lately ordered to Sheerness to complete her fitting for a hospital ship at Hong Kong, has been commissioned, and the following officers appointed to her:—Commander Henry Miller, Lieuts. Seymour Smith, Albert Cole, and W. Which, Sub-Lieuts. C. G. Gissing, E. G. Shaw, and C. F. Barnard.

The screw steam corvette Pelorus, 21, Capt. William H. Haswell, from China, arrived in Plymouth Sound on the 1st April. She brings as passengers Dr. Murphy, the botanist, fifty-two naval invalids, and the detachment of the Military Train from Japan. The Pelorus left Yokohama, Sept. 16; Hong Kong, Oct. 16; Manila, 26; Singapore, Nov. 7; Batavia. 21; Cape of Good Hope, Jan. 5; St. Helena, Feb. 4; and Ascension, Feb. 13. After passing the Azores light easterly winds prevailed. She was put in commission Sept. 7, 1863, and has therefore been employed four years and a half on the Japan and China station.

The twin screw gun vessel Ringdove, awaiting her commission at Portsmouth, has made a second official trial of her speed over the measured mile in Stokes Bay, and obtained a slightly increased rate of mean speed over the rate obtained on her previous trial. She drew 10ft. 5in. of water aft and 8ft. 8in. forward, with 99 tons of coal on board, and with rig and first-class steam reserve stores all complete. The speeds obtained were as follows:—Mean speed per hour, with full boiler power, 11·103 knots; with half boiler power, 9·581 knots. The machinery worked admirably.

By the death of General Sir T. Kenah, K.C.B. (noticed in our obituary), the colonelcy of the 63rd Regiment is vacant. The general entered the army in August, 1799, and the same year served with his regiment in Holland, and was present at the action of the 19th September, as well as in several other minor affairs. In 1801 he served in Egypt, under General Sir Ralph Abercromby; and afterwards, from 1803 to 1812, was on active service in Sicily. He subsequently joined the army in Spain, and was on the staff as assistant, and afterwards as deputy-adjutant-general at the head of the department; and was present at the battle of Castalla, as also several other affairs. The late general also served at the siege and capture of Genoa, in April, 1814. He had received the gold medal from the Grand Seignior for the Egyptian campaign, also the silver war medal with one clasp; was created in 1818 a Companion of the Order of the Bath, in recognition of his military services; and in 1865 was advanced to a Knight Commander of that distinguished order. The deceased general's commissions bore date as follows:—Ensign, August 14, 1799; lieutenant, May 9, 1800; captain, March 3, 1804; major, November 5, 1812; lieutenant-colonel, December 27, 1813; colonel, July 22, 1830; major-general, November 23, 1841; lieutenant-general, November 11, 1851; general, December 26, 1859; and colonel of the 63rd Foot, November 25, 1850.

The Lords of the Admiralty (says the Army and Navy Gazette) have been reluctantly compelled to remove the name of Captain the Hon. Augustus C. Hobart from the Navy List, in consequence of his having accepted an appointment under the Turkish Government, without, in the first instance, having consulted the wishes of their lordships. At the same time we believe that the difficulty of Captain Hobart's position has been well considered at Whitehall. He was on half-pay; could not obtain employment in his own service; his pay was totally inadequate to his requirements; he was desirous of finding a field for the exercise of his professional duties, and on an offer (unsought by him) of an appointment in Constantinople having been made to him, he felt that he had no alternative left but to close with it, even at the risk of unintentionally offending his former "lords and masters." The position now occupied by Captain Hobart is a high and dignified one, and, whilst he occupies it, he will be enabled to render good service to England by maintaining the efficiency of the navy of her ancient and always faithful ally. We have advices from Constantinople, dated the 18th inst., by which we find that Hobart Pasha has already inaugurated numerous beneficial changes in the Turkish navy, which, in so far as they will at once save the Sultan's Government large sums of money, have already been much appreciated.

Sir John Pakington, as Secretary of State for War, has nominated the following gentlemen to act as a committee to inquire into the character and construction of our coast defences, whether of iron, masonry, or earthwork, as recommended by the Royal Commission on National Defences:—Admiral the Hon. Sir F. G. Grey, G.C.B., chairman; Major-General Collingwood Dickson, C.B., Royal Artillery; Major-General Simmons, C.B., Royal Engineers; Major-General Harness, C.B., Royal Engineers; and Mr. Hawkshaw, the celebrated civil engineer. The secretary is not nominated, but it is presumed that an officer of the Royal Engineers will be selected. The committee will assemble probably this week to arrange preliminaries.

The Army and Navy Gazette animadverts upon the fact that the Coldstream Regiment of Guards is still kept short of a captain, in order that the Queen's regulations may be infringed in favour of Ensign and Lieutenant William Michael Glynn Turquand. It appears that this fortunate youth joined the Guards on the 22nd of May, 1866, and that when Lieutenant and Captain the Hon. G. H. W. Windsor Clive got his step on the 14th of March, 1868, Mr. Turquand had not fulfilled by seven weeks the term of service required to qualify him for promotion, neither had he passed the required examination. Junior to Mr. Turquand in the Coldstream Guards, but senior to him in the service by several years, is a lieutenant named Hervey Bruce, who exchanged into the Guards from the 52nd. To this officer the vacant step ought, of course, to have been given, and an ensign and lieutenant immediately added to the regiment; but interest is prevailing over the Queen's regulations, and the step is still left open for the advantage of the favoured Ensign Turquand. The matter is not, indeed, of much importance; but occurring as it does, under the very eyes of the Commander-in-Chief, and with his Royal Highness's full cognizance, it must tend to weaken his consideration and authority with the army whenever he may be called upon to enforce the Queen's regulations to the letter in questions of more serious import. If the Queen's regulations are thus openly and systematically disregarded in favour of the Guards, how can his Royal Highness insist upon them in questions affecting the line?

A return issued on Saturday shows that the number of Her Majesty's ships and vessels at the different stations over the world on March 31, 1867, was 276; the total complement of men, 44,245.

We understand that Major-General George W. Key will have the cavalry colonelcy, vacant by the death of Lord Cardigan. It is not improbable that Lord George Paget will be transferred from his present regiment, the 7th Dragoon Guards, to the 11th Hussars, General Key becoming colonel of the 7th. This is a sufficient contradiction of the painful report which was put about within the last few days to the effect that Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, was likely to be Lord Cardigan's successor, as colonel of "Prince Albert's Own Hussars." The idea was never entertained for a moment.

The following promotions will take place in succession to the late Earl of Cardigan:—Major-General W. G. Gold, colonel of the 53rd Regiment, to be lieutenant-general; Colonel W. Munro, C.B., late 39th Foot, to be major-general; Major D. W. Tench, half pay, 15th Hussars, Staff Officer of Pensioners at Woolwich, to be lieutenant-colonel in the Army.

It will be interesting to a very valuable portion of Her Majesty's forces, the Marines, to learn that Parliament has exempted them from being flogged any more on shore in peace time. But this step will necessitate the exemption of our seamen also from the lash; it will be out of the question that the captain of a ship should have the power of flogging a marine for on offence for which he could not be flogged by his colonel on shore; and sauce for the marine must, eventually, be sauce for the sailor.

A trial of the engines of the double-screw steam gunvessel Lapwing, 2, took place outside Plymouth Sound on the 20th. She is of 663 tons burden, and belongs to the new class of which there are eight vessels, supposed to be for China. Four of them are having their machinery manufactured by the Messrs. Rennie; the Lapwing is the first of the four tried, and she is supplied with two pair of engines to work her two propellers. The mean of six runs, at full power, gave a speed of 10·46 knots at a mean number of 116 revolutions per minute, the mean pressure in boiler being 26 lb. The vacuum 25 in., giving an indicated power of 830 horses, being five times the nominal power, 160, and 110-horse power more than the contract indicated power. These engines are of the ordinary type, without surface condensers or superheaters, and were tried under the regulations recently issued by the Admiralty. The result may, therefore, be considered satisfactory. The mean speed at half-boiler power was 8·06 knots, the revolutions 97, and pressure of steam 19 lb.

CAUTION TO TEA-DRINKERS.—A "sworn broker" of the City o London writes:—"At the Commercial Sale-rooms, lately, a considerable quantity of tea utterly unfit for human food was sold. I do not wish to turn informer against my fellow-brokers if I can help it; but in the interest of the trade itself, I feel bound to draw attention to the subject, and trust that the proper authorities may take measures to prevent the tea going into consumption. I do not hesitate to state that the so-called tea is prejudicial to human life." In a subsequent communication he says, —"I have been at the pains to send a sample of this tea to the Lancet, and have their authority for stating that it is unfit for consumption; still, as far as I am aware, no steps have been taken to prevent its being retailed throughout the country mixed with sound teas. I am informed that large quantities of similar teas remain in the warehouses, and I would suggest the advisability of Government appointing an inquiry to be held as to the state of the stocks, so that all tea found to be injurious to human life may be condemned and destroyed. I would also suggest that such inquiry be held during the ensuing summer and before the new teas commence to arrive, as it will be a slack time in the warehouses, and the stocks will be smaller than they have been for sixteen years."

MANUFACTURE OF SILK IN CALIFORNIA.—The project of establishing a silk manufactory at San Jose has at last assumed a definite shape, the articles of incorporation of the Mechanics' Pioneer Silk Factory having been filed. The capital stock is $100,000, divided into 2,000 shares at $50. Over $20.000 of the stock has already been taken, and the first instalment of ten dollars paid in. The machinery for the factory is already on the ground, the foundations for the main building having been laid, and the work will be immediately pushed forward. As our readers are aware, the climate of California is specially favourable to the culture of silk, the mulberry growing luxuriantly, and the labour of handling and feeding the worms being much less than in any other of the silk-growing countries. The cocoons are also of a superior quality. There can be little doubt of the success of this enterprise, and we believe it is destined to inaugurate the development of a branch of industry which will add great wealth to the State.

COLONIAL GOVERNORS.—A Parliamentary return has been issued stating the salaries of the several colonial governors. At the head of the roll stand the two great prizes—Canada and Victoria, each paying its governor £10,000 a year. Jamaica, New South Wales, Mauritius, and Ceylon follow, each with its £7.000 a year. Then come South Australia, the Cape, Hong Kong, British Guiana, the Straits Settlements (Singapore), and Gibraltar, each £5,000 a year. Next are New Zealand and Malta, £4,500; and then Tasmania, Queensland, Barbados, and Windward Islands, and British Columbia, £4,000; Trinidad pays £3,500 a year; and the Bahamas, West African Settlements (Sierra Leone), and Antigua and Leeward Islands, £3,000. Bermuda pays £2,746; Newfoundland and St. Helena, £2,000; Western Australia, £1,800; the Falklands, £900; Labuan, £800; and Heligoland, £500. The list of lieutenant-governors and presidents of council ranges from Natal, £2 500; through Britise Honduras and Penang, £1.800; Prince Edward Island, £1,500; St. Vincent, Grenada, Tobago, Dominica, St. Kitt's and Nevis, Gambia, Gold Coast, and Lagos, £1.300; Malacca, £1,200; the Cape, £1,000; the Virgin Islands, and Turks and Caicos Islands, both £800; St. Lucia, £700; and Montserrat, £500. The total is £149,246; the population about ten millions.
